The closing dish in this Methodist love-feast was an address from Rev. Mark Guy Pearse, who delivered himself of a sore and heavy burden resting on his soul as to the state of heathen London. What is a Cleveland Hall, even if a fresh one is opened every six months, to the vastness of the need? Three hundred Londons would equal the population of the whole world; the greatness of the problem is overwhelming and appalling. Some deplorable statistics were read out by Mr. Pearse as to the housing and overcrowding of the people in the poor neighbourhoods of the West-end. How can Christians be content to go on comfortably hearing their sermons in Church on Sundays, while such a state of things exists? It is no use crying "Shame" at such a recital. What are we going to do? Turning to the other side, Mr. Pearse told a most moving story of what love and kindness on the part of one of the sisters had done in the case of a dweller in a very poor tenement, as showing what can be effected through consecrated service. Then Mr. Pearse prayed, as in an agony, that the state of this London might be laid on the heart of the people of England, and that they should not wait for legislation before doing something to assuage its sorrow and misery. A call to consecration closed the deeply interesting proceedings.

A CRY FROM FRANCE.

WHO WILL COME OVER AND HELP?

No country is perhaps more visited by Englishmen than France; it lies close to English shores. Thousands will visit Paris this year; still how little is really known of the great need of the French people. To speak of France as a heathen country might be not exactly the truth, for it is much worse. It lies, with all Latin countries, directly under the power of the little horn of the Romish beast. Its millions of souls are born, live, and die, in utter darkness, not the less thick because the name of Jesus is pronounced in their midst, and his teaching is parodied. One must live and work amongst them to understand how effectually the light that is in them has been made darkness, and how great is this darkness! Who will be moved by compassion for them? Who will come over and help?

Oh for a mighty crusade of English Christians, who should dare to face all inconveniences of a foreign country; who, being sent by God, would trust Him to open the doors for them and prepare their ways. Nothing but God-sent men and women can be used; but will not your readers join with me in prayer that indeed the Lord would send more labourers into the field.

After nine years' experience of the work here, I must say that what is needed is not so much what some brethren have done, viz.: travelling from hotel to hotel they have on their way distributed broadcast tracts and Bibles and New Testaments. Some grain of precious seed may have fallen in good ground and thus justified the labour and expense. Still it must be remembered that very often these distributions have done harm, and effectually shut many doors.

No, what is needed is rather the more quiet but always more efficient work of those who come and live amongst the people, justifying their presence amongst them by some trade or occupation, or even coming as tourists, but showing the people that there is really love for them in Christian hearts.

The quiet visitation from door to door; the long talks by a kitchen fire, when in a very homely way the grand truths of the Gospel are effectually preached, these are means much more constantly blessed.

Are there not English Christian artisans or tradesmen willing to sacrifice their worldly interest for the sake of the millions in France, and come here and settle amongst them, that, while making their tents, they may instruct Aquilas and Priscillas in the way of salvation?

Ladies of independent means, or supported by their friends, are perhaps especially fitted for this work. For in France, on account of the bad conduct of the priests, the bad reputation they have among the people, the door-to-door visitation is rendered difficult to a male evangelist, because in the day-time men are absent, and only the women found at home. There is therefore room for quite a zenana mission amongst the French people. How thankful I should be to see a society for this object started in England. But in the meanwhile, should any ladies wish to respond to this appeal and desire to settle down in a very benighted part of France to help on the work, let me cordially invite them to come and help us.

My "parish" is sufficiently large to give work to many. It extends over the two departments of the Corrèze and Cantal containing six or seven hundred thousand souls. Tourists will find here a hilly country with magnificent scenery. Quiet French inns, as comfortable as French inns can be, are to be found in many small towns where a good work for Christ can be done.

If any desire to settle in a larger town like Tulle or Aurillac, or Brive, let them come to labour amongst the workmen's wives. In each of these places an interesting work has begun, and great is the need of lady helpers. For instance, in Tulle we have a McAll mission-room and not even a lady to play the harmonium or lead the singing. In Aurillac, there is nobody to teach our converts a hymn. I should be glad to give all information, and even, if need be, make all necessary arrangements to facilitate their coming.

SEAMEN'S REST, MARSEILLES.

The friends of this Mission, could they have stepped in any day during the past two months, would have been gladdened by the sight of so many men, and the meetings so well attended. Frequently every bed has been occupied, and we have even had to refuse some men for want of accommodation. The devil is as active as ever; only last Saturday a poor fellow was murdered in sight of our windows—the second during the last fortnight; the cause, as may be imagined, was the accursed drink. We are often at our wits' ends to know what to do to induce the sailors to stay in, and so escape the temptations and dangers of the public-houses that literally swarm around us.

The services on board ship are always interesting, and sometimes we are cheered by meeting a Christian captain who is earnestly solicitous for his crew, but we long that there should be many more. Miss Kean continues her hospital work, and is cheered occasionally by grateful testimonies from those who have lodged in the Rest. The temperance restaurant has progressed steadily, and promises to become in time self-supporting. The most encouraging feature about this effort is that many of the customers have become interested in the "living bread," and some have been induced to attend the French Gospel services held next door, in one of Mr. McAll's mission-halls.

Mdlle. Keller passes a good deal of her time in the restaurant, and seizes an opportune moment for slipping a tract or Scripture portion into the hand, accompanied by a kind word, that is generally well received. This unostentatious, loving service will surely bear fruit.

Will friends kindly bear in mind that this is one of the heaviest months of the year, when rentals, &c., are due, and that we are quite out of sailors' bags?

Chas. E. Faithfull.

WEST MARYLEBONE MISSION.—The annual meetings were held a few days ago. Among other interesting facts it was reported that over 700 meetings had been held during the year in connection with the Mission. House-to-house visitation has been carried on as usual, and thousands of tracts distributed. The balance sheet showed that an old debt had been removed. Several speakers warmly commended the work for its decidedly evangelical tone and character. At the last of the three meetings addresses were delivered by Messrs. Joseph Peters, John Maxted, and W. Barnard Smith. The superintendent of the Mission is Mr. James Sprunt, St. James's Hall, George-street, Lisson-grove, W.

Dr. Barnardo's Homes.

THE EASTER FESTIVAL.

ACCORDING to promise, we give notes of the greater part of Dr. BARNARDO'S address to his young helpers at the Easter festival which he projected this year and admirably carried out. The first part of the programme was a view of the boys in the different workshops, and this, as may be supposed, excited much interest. It was very gratifying to see so many lads who had been rescued from a street life, busy at the manual occupation which will help them in after years to sustain an honourable part in any community.

The splendid new gymnasium was packed for the meeting, and, big as it is, we believe many hundreds were left out in the cold. And, indeed, it was both cold and wet outside, which made the overflowing attendance all the more remarkable. Next year, we reckon, the Doctor will have to shift his Easter festival to the "Edinburgh Castle," if he would make room for all those of his well-wishers who will want to "assist" at it.

Seizing the opportunity of having so many young folk face to face, Dr. Barnardo made the most of it as he proceeded to say a few words about the Homes. He spoke pretty much as follows:—

These Homes have under their care the largest family on earth: in them over three thousand boys and girls are sheltered, fed, taught, clothed, educated, and trained for future usefulness. We never stop, day or night; we are always at it. We take in tiny creatures and great, big fellows—it does not matter which. I want to tell you five things about the Homes; you can think of them in connection with your five fingers. First, the Homes have very sharp eyes; second, very quick ears; third, open arms; fourth, wonderful pockets; and last, they keep excellent order.

What do I mean by sharp eyes? They see good in what appears to many people to be worthless. If you have been in Paris you may have seen a very curious kind of people who are at work there early in the morning. They are called chiffonniers, or rag-pickers, who pick up and sift the refuse of the streets. I have seen men and women come up to a pile of rubbish with a hooked stick and a basket, and quicker than you can imagine they would sift this refuse. I thought it looked to be all rubbish, but their quick eyes saw something that could be turned to account, and it went into the basket. Now, some people seem to think that poor ragged boys and girls are worth nothing, but we have found out that they are worth a great deal. (Then Dr. Barnardo told the story of a young fellow of sixteen, whom he found in a lodging-house, who was regarded as nothing but "a loafer," but who turned out splendidly in Canada.)

Then the Homes have quick ears. I have to use this (holding up an ear trumpet, which the Doctor needs to help his deafness), but the Homes have no difficulty in hearing. Can you guess how far they can hear? The other day they heard the cry of a little girl all the way from Edinburgh. Don't you think we have quick ears? She was a cripple. Oh if you had seen her, with her little back twisted, and her poor limbs so turned that she could not put them to the ground! They tried to get her into a Cripples' Home there, but nobody would take her. So there seemed no place for her but the workhouse, when the cry came up to us in a letter, and we heard it, and we have got that little girl to-day.

The Homes have also strong, open arms. You see they are strong enough even to take you all in here to-day, big and little. But they are not so big as they ought to be. Sometimes, as I have said, we take in little babies. We lately took in a baby only four days old, and the same day a great sturdy fellow of seventeen and a half, who used to sell lights about the Mansion House. Don't you think, then, that we have very big, open arms? They are always open, day and night. We have opened a lodging-house for girls in Spitalfields; and how glad we are to take them in at night, even if we cannot keep them altogether.

Again, we have wonderful pockets. They are always empty, and yet they are always full. That is a puzzle, you will say; how do I make that out? I will leave you to answer it, because I have not time just now to do so. But they are wonderful because of the things that go into them. I found in a boy's pocket the other day a curious collection of things, but our pockets are more wonderful still. One day there came down Stepney Causeway two lovely horses and a carriage, and they drove right into the pocket. Next morning there came a little wooden box, with wire bars in front, and inside were four white mice! There was a letter from a little boy, who said: "Dear Sir,—I have not much to send you, but I send you my mice"; so they, too, went into the wonderful pocket. Another time there came a large hamper, marked: "Dr. Barnardo, private." Dear me, I thought, what is this? The hamper was very heavy, and it was carried into my room. We took a knife and cut the string and opened the basket. Someone said it might be dynamite, but I knew it was not that. What do you think was inside? Gold and silver bracelets, rings, watches, earrings, and jewels, crammed close together. We found there was a letter, and it said: "Dear Sir,—I never put my jewels to a better use than when I devoted them to the help of your family. Take them in Christ's name. Put an advertisement in—(such and such a paper)—and say you have got them." I have never found out yet who sent them; but they went into our wonderful pocket.

Last of all, we keep excellent order. In a place like this, with so many to care for, of course we have rules showing what everybody has to do. In the morning, the reveille sounds: that is to tell them to get out of bed. [The clarion notes of the morning call were sounded in capital time and tune by a very small boy in a bugler's uniform.] Then the boys require breakfast and after that there is family worship, so we have our call to breakfast and prayers. [Another martial note from the bugle.] The next thing is that all have to be inspected, so there is the parade call. [The small boy gave it in fine fashion.] We have to be very careful that the boys do not get ill, and they are often examined by the doctor, so there is an assembly for medical inspection. [This note was a very clear and imperative one, as if to say: "You must come, whether you are well or ill."] And so on Dr. Barnardo went, telling us of other bugle calls for various purposes, till it came to the last at night, which was, "All off to bed." This call the diminutive trumpeter gave in slow, majestic tones, as though to give time for a little reflection on the way in which the day had been spent. Certainly Dr. Barnardo was right in saying that his Homes keep excellent order.

After he had finished his very interesting short talk, Rev. W. J. MAYERS, one of the deputation secretaries, sang delightfully, and then gave a little lecture on "Life's lights and shadows as they fall on the children." He showed a number of large and well-executed colour drawings, representing different phases and incidents of the work—from the very first night when Dr. Barnardo started out in his quest, which has won him a world-wide fame as a friend of the destitute children, down to the story of "The Shilling Baby," which was published about a year ago. If any of our readers have the chance of hearing and seeing this lecture by Mr. Mayers, they ought not to let it slip; doubtless he will be giving it in various parts of the country.

After the meeting, there was drill in the yard; the screeching of the bagpipes by the half-dozen Highland boys; and swimming matches, which our reporter was afterwards told were very amusing and fine to see. Every boy and girl who is born on an island, as all Britons are, should be taught to swim. Dr. Barnardo does his part. Will our readers, young and old, do their part in keeping his wonderful pockets full? The Doctor will soon empty them again.

"£100 PER DAY FOR BREAD ONLY."

DEAR SIR—Some misunderstanding has been caused by the quotation from Night and Day given in your kind reference to our work in THE CHRISTIAN of April 25, and I should be very glad if you would give me space for correction.

In one of the extracts you quoted from Night and Day it was stated that our Homes now require "£100 a day for bread alone," meaning thereby, of course, for food alone. Several criticisms have, however, reached me from friends who urge that £100 for mere bread for 3100 children means an extravagant outlay. As a matter of fact, I employed the term "bread," as it is often employed in Scripture and in daily life, to denote food generally. The estimate of £100 covers the three meals per diem for 3100 children plus the adult members of the resident staff—150 in number; so that 3250 individuals are fed for one day at an average expense of about 7½d. each. It must be also borne in mind that we have always some 120 sick inmates, whose diet is necessarily of a more varied and expensive character.

These explanations will, I am sure, place the matter in its true light before any of your readers who may have misunderstood my words and misconceived my meaning.—Very truly yours,

THOS. J. BARNARDO.

ENGLISH WOMEN IN PARIS.

SIR,—As a large number of English girls will be employed at the Paris Exhibition, it is felt that something ought to be done for them during the six months they will be in Paris. It is proposed to take a house or rooms close to the Exhibition, to which English girls can be invited, and where English ladies can lodge, whose duty it will be to interest themselves in and to help the girls. We want the rooms to be a meeting-place for Christian ladies who may go over to Paris, and we should be glad to lodge any who should go for a few weeks or months to work amongst the girls. It would help if any ladies who hope to go to Paris would let us know beforehand if they could give a little time to this work. Any such communication should be addressed to Miss Manning, hon. sec., Continental Office, 316, Regent-street, W.

From past experience we know of the terrible dangers and temptations to which girls employed at these large Exhibitions are exposed, and of how many are led astray; and, owing to Sunday work, their position in Paris is still worse. After consultation with some of the authorities, we have heard of suitable rooms which must be secured at once; and we are most anxious to raise a fund which will enable us to go forward without delay. We confidently appeal for a generous response in order to give effect to our proposal, pleading the urgency and real necessity of our effort. An experienced worker will be sent over immediately to make all necessary arrangements, and there are some ladies, residents in Paris, willing to co-operate.—We are, your obedient servants,

MEATH,
KINNAIRD, President Y.W.C.A.

MR. CAINE'S CRITICISMS.—We are sorry to feel constrained to believe (says The Indian Witness) that our distinguished visitor, Mr. Caine, did not look very carefully for successful missionary work during his tour. He was in Lucknow, and wrote a graphic description of the opium dens of that city, but he seems to have made no inquiry about missions in that region. In the Methodist Missions in North India he might have found nearly all the conditions present on which he insists. For thirty years the increase has been constant, with perhaps the exception of a single year. More converts were baptized last year than in any previous year, and more baptisms are taking place now than at the same date last year. Why did Mr. Caine pass over this example of success, and carefully bring forward illustrations of seeming failure?

A College Revival in Japan.

In the Chicago Watchman, Mr. L. D. Wishard tells a very interesting story of work in connection with his visit to the leading Christian college in Japan:—"The Doshisha, as it is called, contains 700 students, about one half of whom are members of the College church. The institution is not only the largest Christian college in Japan, but is one of the very largest Christian institutions in Asia. It has done more for the spread of Christianity in Japan than any other agency, and has a national reputation for its literary as well as its religious standing. We pursued exactly the same course which we had followed so often in American colleges, and the work from the beginning to the end of the visit was so similar to an American college revival that any special description is scarcely necessary. One subject which especially interested the students was the place which Christianity holds in the colleges and among the highly educated of the West. Many of them had been led to think that Christianity was losing its hold upon our intellectual classes. This outrageous falsehood has been circulated in Japan by sceptical professors from England, Germany and America.

"One of the most interesting and the most difficult features of the work consisted in the inquiry-meetings. It was an imposing sight to see a score of groups of from three to six students gathered about a professor or experienced Christian student eagerly discussing the plan of salvation. The meetings for personal work were generally held in our private rooms. Dr. Davis gladly turned his parlour and dining-room into an inquiry-room, and sometimes forty or more students would crowd in, and spend from one to two hours. It was a joy indescribable to answer their eager questions, and lead them step by step into the light. One of those meetings I shall never forget. The company was pretty evenly divided—about half of them sceptical concerning the inspiration of the Bible, the Divinity of Christ, the immortality of the soul, &c.; while the balance were settled upon these points, and were willing to accept Christ as their Saviour. I divided the crowd, leaving the sceptics with Mr. Bartlett of Dartmouth, '87, who was one of the first of the pledged missionary volunteers to reach the foreign field, and who has a special knack for meeting sceptical objections. I took the others into an adjoining room. There were about twenty-two of them. After talking for some time about the plan of salvation, I asked those who had already accepted Christ, or were willing to accept Him there and then, to announce it. Fully seventeen did so, and the reasons which they gave for their hope in Christ were as satisfactory as you will ordinarily hear in an American college.

"Four or five fellows listened earnestly and sadly to the testimonies of their companions, but were unable to grasp the fact of his gift of eternal life. So I said to them, 'Fellows, what will convince you beyond a doubt that the gift is yours?' They did not answer at once, so I said, 'If I should come to you and tell that you had fallen heir to a magnificent estate, what would convince you beyond all question to the truthfulness of my word?' 'We may be satisfied if we could see it,' one of them replied. 'Would that really satisfy you?' I asked. They didn't grasp my meaning, so I continued, 'Supposing you saw the legal document—the record?' 'Oh, yes, that would settle the question,' they exclaimed. 'Well,' I continued, 'we are so fortunate as to have the record. Turn to 1 John v. 11, and let us read, "And this is the record, that God hath given to us eternal life, and this life is in his Son."'

"I shall never outlive the memory of the scene in that room. They fairly snatched their New Testaments from their pockets, and eagerly searched for the record. And bending low over the pages they seemed to drink in the words like thirsty men. It was a pathetic sight, those boys bending anxiously over the record, which probably none of them had ever seen before. I could see their faces brighten, although my eyes were becoming somwhat dimmed. Presently one of the boys looked up. His face glowed. He reached out his hand. 'Is the question settled?' I asked. 'Yes, it is settled,' he replied; and they all said the same. There was joy in that room. The interpreter said, 'Let us pray'; and while he prayed I thought of the joy with which heaven was ringing as

> The angels echoed around the throne,
> 'Rejoice, for the Lord brings back his own!'

"So the work continued day after day. As some indication of the progress of the work, I will say that fully one hundred men attended a meeting for new converts, held a week before we left. The same evening fifty men in a meeting for the unconverted announced their determination to begin praying for themselves, and to seek Christ, as it was expressed, until they found Him."

SWEDISH MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

This Society was founded ten years ago by a few warm-hearted Christians in Sweden. God has abundantly blessed the work, not only to the salvation of many, but to the strengthening of the Christians in Sweden. The Society has missions at home as well as abroad.

In the foreign field it has now over forty missionaries labouring on the Lower Congo, in Central Africa, North Africa, Russia, Persia, Lapland, and Alaska. On the Congo stations have been established with about four workers in each. Rev. N. Westlind, one of the oldest workers on this field, has translated parts of the Gospel and other books into the native language. There is a school on each station, while several converted natives are being instructed in the Gospel with a view to their doing service as evangelists. A few days ago a party of four Swedish workers left for the Congo, after having stayed for a short time at Harley House, Bow, E., for the study of the English language.

The Society has also a great work for the Lord in Sweden. There is a missionary training college, where all its foreign missionaries have been trained. The Society's home missionaries and evangelists also have the advantage of residence for a year or two, in order to receive instruction in the Scriptures, and on other useful subjects. Over four hundred Christian congregations throughout Sweden are connected with the Society, and in June every year there is a conference in Stockholm attended by delegates from all the congregations, for the discussion of important matters concerning the work. Pastor E. J. Ekman, who has visited England twice on missionary matters, is the president and secretary of the Society.

A GOOD WORK IN DUBLIN.—Mr. J. G. Richardson, of Moyallon House, co. Down, has put into circulation a booklet giving some account of the labours of Mr. George Williams, of Dublin, during many years past. Among old and young, by preaching, conversation, and kindly contact, Mr. Williams has worked with much encouragement in the south as well as the north of Ireland. In 1880 he founded a branch of the Y.M.C.A. in Rathmines, which has ever since been a centre of much spiritual life and work. Open-air and tent services have been organised, Roman Catholics attending in goodly numbers. The working staff now consists of over seventy devoted Christians, mostly gentlemen, who are labouring unitedly in earnest salvation endeavour. There is at present a burden of debt, and as Mr. Williams has already spent hundreds of pounds in connection with the work, his friends have determined to raise the money to remove this incubus upon what is a very useful, voluntary, unsectarian agency. Mr. Williams's address is Ormond Rooms, Rathmines, Dublin.

DR. PENTECOST IN GLASGOW.

The five months' mission by Dr. Pentecost in the third city in the empire has now concluded. "A specially noticeable feature of the work (writes a correspondent) has been the blessing imparted to Christians in the clearing away of doubts, in a clearer apprehension of the truth of Scripture, and a firmer grounding in the fundamental doctrines of the faith. Sceptics have been convinced and converted; Christians 'pinned' to their Bibles, and impressed with the fact that personal consecration and help are among the first conditions of blessing."

We have reported the progress of the mission from time to time, and also the gatherings of business men, which were among the most remarkable meetings ever held in Glasgow. It was a wonderful sight each day at one o'clock to see the stream of business men hurrying along as if they had something very important on hand. The preacher's many good points were applauded, and not infrequently a touching story would call the tears to eyes unaccustomed to the display of such emotion. Evangelists and workers alike have indeed much to thank God for. Dr. Pentecost goes to Edinburgh this week, followed by the prayers of the many in Glasgow whom he has been the means of leading to the Saviour.

MR. MEYER AT BIRMINGHAM.

Rev. F. B. Meyer has conducted a mission at Westminster-road Congregational Church, Birchfield, Birmingham. A wide-spread interest amongst Christians of all denominations was created in anticipation of Mr. Meyer's visit, and a week of earnest prayer and Bible-readings, conducted by the pastor, Rev. Walter Searle, had prepared the church for blessing. In spite of heavy rain, large and devout congregations gathered at every service, eager to know more of the "blessed life." Besides giving Bible-readings and Gospel addresses, Mr. Meyer conducted a service each evening for men, he also held a conference on the spiritual life for ministers of the Gospel on the Wednesday morning. Rev. Walter J. Mayers, of Dr. Barnardo's Homes, made a deep impression by his sweet and earnest singing; after Mr. Meyer had to leave for London, Mr. Mayers remained at Birchfield to carry on the good work begun.

The church at Westminster-road in its recent, and, by God's grace, successful struggle to maintain evangelical teaching and unworldliness of life has passed through a veritable "baptism of fire," which has left its members spiritually minded and wholly consecrated, so much so that Mr. Meyer remarked that he had seldom visited a church where the people were more ripe and ready for receiving Bible truth about the higher Christian life. The mission finished with meetings for testimony on the Saturday and Sunday, and it was quite overwhelming to hear the many clear earnest testimonies to conversion and consecration to God. The impressive scene will never be forgotten. May this earnest revival never pass away!

KILBURN.—Among other good agencies in this district of London is the Carlton-road Evangelistic Church. It is some years since Mr. W. Martin began work in Kilburn, first as a city missionary, then as an evangelist. His health giving way, he had to seek rest at the seaside, after which his old working-men friends begged him to return. He complied with the request, and they erected an iron hall, capable of accommodating between three and four hundred people. On Sunday evenings the building is full; there is a membership of 120, and a flourishing Sunday-school. All the helpers are working people, and great difficulties have already been surmounted. Mr. Martin, whose address is 142, Canterbury-road, Kilburn, N.W., writes, "I am sadly in need of tracts and Bibles for the Sunday-school."

For the Young.

IOLETS; OR, THE KING'S FLOWERS.

March, 1888, a great monarch laid down his eptre and crown at the call of the King of ngs, and passed into eternity. In his beautiful lace he lay, knowing himself to be a dying an. Tread very softly as you cross the reshold of his room. As you look round you ould hardly fancy that it was a king's chamber. though the great halls and corridors, and ception rooms through which you have passed reach it, are full of costly and luxurious ings such as kings love, yet this simple little d-chamber boasts of neither luxuries or brics of rare price. There is no velvet carpet, purple hangings, no rare pictures, nor valid furniture. The great king lies on a narrow on bedstead, uncurtained and undraped, vered with a military blanket. The great ndows have no curtains or decorations, the or has only a rug here and there, and a small e burns in the grate. One thing we notice a tiny table by the king's bedside—violets—olets, white and purple; violets, single and uble; violets delicately palely blue, whose eet, shy perfume fills the plain room with inty fragrance, and seems to carry one off in ought to hedgerows and fields, and forests of ne, under whose gnarled and misshapen roots e little flowers love to hide. Violets fill vases the chimney-piece, and a little bunch lies the sick man's pillow, touching his wrinkled eek with their sweet dew-wet lips.

All the world watched that death chamber, r William I., Emperor of Germany, was too ell known a figure in the world's history to ss away unnoticed from its record.

His long life of ninety-one years had been e of hard struggles and brilliant successes, d now the promise was fulfilled to him, "At entide it shall be light," for the dark valley death was flooded for him with the light of nple faith in a great atoning Saviour and s sacrifice.

The Emperor of Germany had a splendid neral. Long trains of kings, princes, and e nobles of the realm, followed in that wonder- l procession that carried the dead king to his ave.

Every house in the long streets passed by the neral procession was draped with crape, and ousands filled them, standing with uncovered ads to show their love and respect to their te lord, while women wept for sorrow, and e little children's faces grew sad and grave t of sympathy, as they pressed forward for a mpse of the cortège.

Along the stately avenue of "Bluter der nden" swept the great procession to do honour the dust that lay coffined in their midst, in plain oak case. Wreaths and laurels, crosses d crowns, lay heaped on the bier, delighting e eye with their beauty, and filling the air th their fragrance, but amongst all, and ore frequently than other flowers, were olets—violets white and blue, violets double d single, violets in posies and garlands, and ral emblems of all kinds.

The Emperor William's favourite flowers ere violets, a fondness shared by his only son rederick the Great and Noble. To such an tent was this liking carried, that in Germany e delicate blue flowers went by the name of Kaiser blume," or the king's flowers. How- er costly were the bouquets presented to him his travels or at home, in the centre, when ssible, nestled a tiny bunch of violets. One y he was asked to explain his love for the tle flower. May I tell you about it in his n words?

"It was in 1806," he said, "that my dear other, the good Queen Louise, fled with my other and myself from Berlin, where the ted French tyrant Napoleon had taken his tion. We had only gone a few miles on our sad journey when one of the carriage wheels broke, and there being no house near in which to take shelter, we were compelled to wait in a wood close by, while the coachman mended it as best he could. I was a weak, sickly little chap, and terribly afraid we should be caught, and taken back to Berlin, in which case I feared I hardly knew what! I felt very hungry too, for I had had no dinner in the hurry of our flight, and I began to cry. My dear mother, to comfort me, sent me to pick flowers, pointing out the lovely blue violets which almost carpeted the field and starred the hedgerows under which we sat. My little brothers and sisters came too, and like children, we forgot hunger and trouble in a few moments, and filled our hats with flowers, laughing and shouting in one glee. Then we ran back to our mother, and poured our treasures into her lap. And she smiled at us in her own sweet fashion, love shining in the depths of her beautiful blue eyes as they rested upon us, her children. Then as we leant against her, her cleft fingers formed the violets into a lovely wreath, shaped like a crown. The others watched her slender white fingers flash in and out amongst the purple flowers, but I watched her face, for to me it was the fairest, loveliest thing on earth. Gentlemen," and the king's voice shook, "I almost idolised my mother. Suddenly I saw her lips quiver, and she began to cry. Why, I never rightly knew, but I think the crown upon her lap reminded her of the one she wore as Queen of Prussia, and of a beloved country now trodden in the dust by a conqueror, and torn to pieces by the horrors of war. The tears rolled down her cheeks and fell upon the violets until they were wet with them. I flung myself into her arms, I kissed the dear mother, I petted her and laid my face against her trembling lips, trying in my childish way to comfort her. She stopped crying, and gently returned my embrace, and taking the violet crown, she laid it upon my brow; then standing me before her she bade me solemnly remember that one day—one day soon, God would make me King of Prussia, and for his sake and for her sake she implored me to be great and good and wise. I felt the flower crown on my brow, and I knew it was moist with my mother's sacred tears.

"When she turned away, and our coach was announced as ready for us, I stole a little aside and took off the crown of flowers. I looked at it reverently. I could see shrined in the heart of some of the violets, a sparkling drop. I knew it was my mother's tear. Oh! gentlemen, I was only a little lad of ten, and eighty long years have rolled by since then, with events in them many and great enough to crowd childish memories out of my heart, but fresh as yesterday is the memory of that day, and I never see a violet, the 'Kaiser blume' as you call them, but I see shrined in its heart my mother's tear. And that is why I love them."

Sweet mother memories! I wonder, young reader, if you have any? Perhaps the kind hand that often shook up your pillow is cold and stiff now; the foot that rocked your cradle has finished its earth journey. The face that looked so lovingly down into yours is veiled from your sight; the kind tender eyes no longer meet yours. Dear mother is dead! Dear mother, who soothed so many little griefs! Dear mother, who listened to so many little hopes! How soft the arms were that cradled you so tightly, and in which you rested so many fatigues! Yes, you miss her so. But you have not really lost her. Her memory and sweet presence are always with you. You will never forget the prayer you learned at her knee, or the stories she told you about Jesus. Blessed mother memories! And how happy are you, if your dear mother consecrated you to God with tears and prayers, imploring you that you, her child, might for God's sake, and her sake, be good, and great, and wise in the future. I fancy many of my young readers are encircled with a mother's prayers. They follow you through life, and you can never get out of their reach. Softly, full of blessing, they fall all round your pathway; every step of your life's journey is lit by your mother's smile and made sacred by her tears. I want you, like the grand old warrior, King William I. of Germany, to resolve that mother's prayers shall be answered for you, and that from to-day, with God's blessing, for his sake and her sake, you will be good, and great, and wise. How can you be?

"There is none good but God" (Mark x. 18). But we may be made the righteousness of God in Him (Christ Jesus). Step out of self into Christ, and you will be "good" or god-like. And to be very humble is to be truly "great," for "he that humbleth himself shall be exalted" (Luke xxiii. 14). Seek from God the spirit of humility; learn of Him who is "meek and lowly in heart"; pray for a "meek and quiet spirit which is in the sight of God of great price" (1 Pet. iii. 4), and you will not only be "good" but "great." If you want to be wise and pray like a young king of old for an "understanding heart" (1 Kings ii. 9), it is a comfort to know God has promised to answer your prayer, for "if any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God who giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not" (Jas. i. 5). Are you satisfied now, that by God's help you can be what you long to be, both good, and great, and wise?

"PUT THAT INTO THE COLLECTION."

At the young people's meeting of the Baptist Missionary Society last week, Mr. Baynes, the secretary, told this incident:—

"When I left the Mission House an hour or two ago, I was quietly walking down Holborn, and passed Wallis's shop. Just at the corner I felt some one pull my coat. I turned round and saw a little girl. She said, 'You are Mr. Baynes, are you not?' I said, 'Yes.' 'Well,' she said, 'I want you to put that into the collection; it is half a sovereign—I have saved that since our meeting in Exeter Hall last year.' I looked at her and said, 'Well, what is your name?' 'I am not going to tell you that, but I am going to the meeting this evening,' and she is in this chapel somewhere at the present time. I want that dear girl to know that I am going to put this 10s., which she saved since the meeting last year at Exeter Hall, in the collection for the Congo Mission; and I say with all my heart, I hope God will bless that dear girl, and make her a missionary herself. Here goes the half sovereign!"

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—The following are the portions for the ensuing week:—Sun., May 12, 1 Chron. xxviii. 11—21; Mon., May 13, 1 Chron. xxix. 1—9; Tues., May 14, 1 Chron. xxix. 10—25; Wed., May 15, Esther i. 1—12; Thurs., May 16, Esther ii. 1—11; Fri., May 17, Esther ii. 17—23; Sat., May 18, Esther iii. 1—15.

MISSION AT HENDON.—A fortnight's services in connection with the Children's Special Service Mission has just been held in the Victoria Hall by Mr. Josiah Spiers. Numbers of the young people remained to the after-meetings, yielding themselves to the Saviour. A crowded united meeting was held in the Congregational Chapel on the Sunday afternoon. To meet a general desire, it is arranged to continue these services on the first Thursday in each month.

BIBLE WORK IN SOUTH AMERICA.

In last year's report of the American Bible Society Rev. Andrew Milne, agent for the Argentine Republic, writes:—

"All the important towns of Argentina, Uruguay, Paraguay, Bolivia, and the South of Brazil have been visited by our colporteurs. Upwards of two tons of Scriptures have been carried to Bolivia, and distributed by tedious journeys on mules at an elevation of from eleven to sixteen thousand feet above the sea. Ecuador is now the only country that has the unenviable distinction of declaring itself shut against the entrance of God's Word. Active measures are being taken for the establishing of permanent agencies in hitherto unoccupied countries. Señor Pousotti has taken charge of the new agency on the Pacific Coast. He will reside at Lima, the capital of Peru, but his work will extend from Chili on the south to Colombia on the north, and take in all the western portion of Bolivia. In connection with the various places where the Gospel is now being preached, and independent of a larger number of Sunday-schools, there are in Argentina, Uruguay, Paraguay, and the South of Brazil upwards of twenty day schools, which we gratuitously supplied with the Scriptures for daily use. From numerous testimonies given, the value of Bible colportage as a means of evangelisation became notably manifest.

"Immigrants are flowing into Buenos Ayres. They come in part from the west of Spain, but chiefly from the south of Italy. On landing they are located in an immense government lodging house, from which they are sent in companies under the care of agents, and distributed all over the republic in groups of from ten to one hundred. As a rule they have no money, and many of them are unable to purchase even a single Gospel, and it is among these we find our chief outlet for donations of portions. Several attempts have been made to distribute Gospels in the hospitals, but with little success; for here we are greatly hampered by the vigilance of the nuns, who in these countries have the immediate care of the patients. Among the immigrants, however, there is no such restraint.

"The prospects for the future were never more full of promise than now. The field has been enlarged so as to comprehend the Pacific coast up to Colombia. True, the field includes a State that challenges our right to fulfil the Divine command, but we know that He who gave the command to go, promised to accompany, and He has all power on earth as in heaven. Confiding in Him we fully expect to see our books sold in Quito, the capital of Ecuador, before long. Will God's people help us by their prayers?"

UNION TABERNACLE, Wandsworth-road, is a centre from which good efforts radiate into the districts of Clapham and Battersea. The spacious building is free of debt, but there is still a considerable charge on the land. The surrounding population is large, and house-to-house visitation, open-air meetings, with other agencies supplement the services of the Tabernacle. Among the children and the mothers special work is done, and Pastor D. M. Cameron and his helpers are often cheered by evidences of blessing. Communications to the Pastor should be addressed to Thurlow House, 515, Wandsworth-road, S.W.

BIBLE-CARRIAGE WORK.—For some time past we have had either a Bible van or Bible cart working in and around Barnsley. Large crowds have listened to the Gospel, and thousands of Bibles, Testaments, and Gospel books have been scattered. Mr. W. R. Llewellyn is still sowing the seed in the Barnsley district. Mr. Charles Taylor continues to spread the truth in Leeds. Messrs. Follows and W. J. Taylor are working the Liverpool carriage near Wellington, in Shropshire, and Mr. Cooke will be going shortly with a Bible cart into Lincolnshire. Free grants of Scripture or Gospel books would be most thankfully received.

EURASIAN CHILDREN IN JAPAN.

EUROPEAN FATHERS AND ASIATIC MOTHERS.

DEAR SIR,—I have been asked by Miss Britton, a missionary for a number of years in Africa and in India, and who has now for some time been settled in Yokohama, to appeal for practical aid and sympathy in the interest of Eurasian children. For many years this lady has been earnestly desirous of instituting a Home for these children where they will be educated and trained for usefulness in life and for Christ. Such an enterprise must surely commend itself. About £200 has been subscribed, but much more will be required to erect and furnish a school and Home.

I lay this plea before the Christians of England the more earnestly because we have now before us a painful proof of its urgent need. A little girl aged ten years, gentle, innocent, and loving, has had the misfortune to fall into the hands of a woman who has expressed the awful resolution of selling her for the most infamous purposes. The father was an Englishman, and the child has all the sensitiveness by nature and education of any of your children. The mother was a Japanese. Both parents are dead, and the child takes the nationality of the mother. I send herewith a photograph of the child and her legal guardians, hoping that many may be constrained by that innocent face to pray for her rescue, and that many more may be constrained to aid us in redeeming others like her. It is not the will of our Father in heaven that one of these little ones should perish. Read Matt. xviii. 19, and lay this case before the Judge of all the earth.

We have tried every means of turning this woman from her diabolical resolution, but with no success. We still hope and pray. I and my wife love the child so deeply that we wish to adopt her, and are ready to give up all we possess to save her from moral damnation. I have made many offers, and have gone as far as I can in endeavouring to save her. The child knows what is before her. She put her arms round my neck, and said, "I pray to Jesus every morning to let you be my papa and Mrs. Staniland be my mamma."

About £1000 will be needed to carry out this Christian enterprise, and I hope many readers will enter into the joy of helping it forward.—Yours faithfully, FRANCIS STANILAND.

THE PATNA CASE.

"The decision of the High Court at Calcutta to leave the Christian girl Luchmin to the custody of the vile man Radakissen to whom her depraved mother sold her, has not come upon us (says The Bombay Guardian) as a surprise. 'Justices' Mitter and Macpherson have done their best to make the administration of law in British India a further by-word and stench throughout the world. Their decision is flagrantly opposed to the merits and facts of the case; and the reason for it must be looked for elsewhere than in the case itself. Those friends of poor Luchmin who expected that her cause would receive impartial consideration by this Calcutta Court have experienced a rude shock. The position at the present moment is this—a Christian girl has been sold to the highest bidder, and the highest Court in India has ratified the bargain. The curtain falls for a few days only, upon this scene of slavery and lust.

"The shout of triumph which has been raised by Government organs at the defeat of Luchmin's prolonged struggle for the preservation of her virtue, will fall strangely upon the ears of the Christian public of great Britain. But these rejoicings over the agony of a girl who has been trampled and stamped upon by the chivalry of those who represent Queen Victoria in India, will necessarily be short lived. God and his people are not dead."

The Banner of Asia for April is almost entirely devoted to a description of this cruel case of oppression and infamy, and we could wish that copies of it were largely circulated among the Christian electors of this country. It may be had at the office of The Sentinel, Paternoster-square. An editorial introductory note says:—

"The fact has now to be written down, and burnt into the heart of the people of Great Britain, that in their great Eastern Empire, human slavery of the worst kind exists, and has received the sanction of the highest judicial and administrative authorities. The High Court of Appeal at the capital of India has refused to intervene on behalf of the heroic girl who has been engaged in a life-and-death struggle for her virtue through nearly six weary months. The following narrative of the contemptuous way in which the rights of Native women are treated under British rule in India, is therefore printed for the information of the British people, and especially of the Christian Churches of Great Britain, in the confidence that this tale of agony and injustice will not be told in vain.

"Luchmin's case is in several aspects a typical one. Her cause is the cause of Indian womanhood. It is even more than that. It is the cause of pure and just judicial administration in India. What is specially asked for is an independent Parliamentary Commission to investigate Luchmin's case in all its stages, and the law relating to Indian women generally; and that Luchmin be meanwhile, as she desires, allowed to return to her Christian friends, where she will be no longer a slave, and will be free from attacks upon her virtue. In order to ensure absolute impartiality, no official, and no one in any way connected with Indian official life, should be placed upon this Commission. There is surely justice and chivalry enough in Great Britain, and not least in the British House of Commons, to respond to so reasonable a request."

A BIBLE-CLASS FOR MEN is held every Sunday morning from 9 till 10.30 in the Friends' Meeting-house School, Hop Gardens, St. Martin's-lane, London, W. The conductor will be glad to see Christians of all shades of opinion to study the Word of God. Working-men will receive a hearty welcome. Christian workers will find a useful sphere for labour.

REV. L. DAHLE,

Secretary of the Norwegian Missionary Society.

THE present secretary of the Norwegian Missionary Society has himself made good proof of the Christian ministry abroad. His life story is both interesting and instructive.

Born in 1843 at Grytten, Romsdal, Norway, he was brought up for God. His father was a farmer, his mother being a daughter of a pious and gifted lay preacher. Although from his childhood instructed in the Christian faith, young Dahle did not realise the great sinfulness of sin, nor did he know the true blessedness of the Gospel until thirteen years of age, when he heard a sermon which led him to decide to serve Christ. With a young companion who was also much impressed, he gave himself to the Saviour, and entrusted himself to the guidance of God's Holy Spirit. As not long afterwards he lost his mother, and later on his father ended his course, young Dahle felt more than ever impelled to live unto Christ and know no other Lord.

On the other hand, new circumstances were influencing the young man in a manner which for a time threatened to quench his spiritual life. From his childhood he had been thirsting for knowledge; but the opportunities of satisfying his desire had been but few, as the only school to which he had had access was one of the old itinerant type, which, moreover, he had only been able to attend about five weeks in the year! Becoming possessed of a little inheritance, he at once made up his mind to spend it upon education. He entered a small institution for schoolmasters, and, after finishing the prescribed course, was thinking of entering a higher school in preparation for the University when mission work forcibly presented itself to him as his sphere of duty He at once saw that the pursuit of knowledge was as nothing compared with the service of God, and he offered himself to the Norwegian Missionary Society. Being accepted, he entered the Mission College at Stavanger in 1864, and when three years of the course of five had been completed, the directors sent him to the University of Christiania. There Mr. Dahle gave himself chiefly to the study of the Old Testament and the Semitic languages, besides frequenting the hospitals in order to acquire some practical knowledge of medicine. After two years' study at Christiania, he spent some time in Denmark, Germany, and Switzerland, principally in order to acquaint himself with the missionary and theological life of those countries.

The work of preparation being over, Mr. Dahle left for Madagascar in 1870, calling at Zululand on the way for ordination by Bishop Schrender, who then had charge of the Lutheran Mission in the island. Arrived at Antananarivo, he founded a college for the education of young natives for the work of teachers and pastors. The position was at the time not a very enviable one, as the Norwegians, who had no consul and no treaty to fall back upon, were looked upon with a little suspicion by the Malagasy

Government. It not being the desire of the Mission to interfere with the work of others, the Betselea province was chosen as the field of operations, and all suspicion was soon disarmed. An agency at the capital was a necessity, and this was connected with the college, which speedily secured the interest of other Christian labourers, so that Mr. Dahle had the privilege of numbering among his intimate friends members of all the Protestant missionary bodies in Antananarivo.

The joint work of the English and Norwegian brethren in "revising" (really retranslating) the Malagasy Bible tended to make alleel their unity in evangelical essentials. Mr. Dahle has ever since rejoiced that he was able to take his share in this work from its beginning in 1873 to its end in 1887. None of the others who were engaged, except Rev. W. E. Cousins (the principal reviser) were permitted to do this.

From 1877 to 1887 Mr. Dahle was superintendent of the Norwegian Mission in Madagascar. In this capacity he was in charge of the administration of the Mission, had to visit all the stations, correspond with his brethren in the field and the directors at home, transact with the Malagasy Government, &c. Besides, he continued to teach in the college (chiefly systematic theology and Biblical introduction) and do literary work. Amongst his works in Malagasy may be mentioned a handbook of Christian doctrine, an exposition of the Gospels, a manual of Biblical archæology, and a devotional manual. A collection of Malagasy folk-lore has in part appeared in an English form. In English he has written articles on questions bearing on the Malagasy language and ethnology. In Norwegian he has published a work on Madagascar (about six hundred pages), and a series of Biblical lectures.

On account of ill-health, for the most part owing to the Malagasy malarial fever, of which he had suffered much, Mr. Dahle was obliged in 1887 to ask permission to return home. The former secretary of the Norwegian Missionary Society being wishful to resign his position, the directors asked Mr. Dahle to take that responsible post. Though not wishing to exchange definite missionary work for any other, Mr. Dahle sympathised with the directors in their desire to utilise missionary experience for the secretariat, and accepted the office.

On his way home, in compliance with a request from the directors, he paid a visit to the Norwegian missions on the west coast of Madagascar, also in Natal and Zululand, in order to acquaint himself more fully with the whole field of the Society's operations.

Immediately after his arrival in Norway he was asked to represent the Society at the Centenary Conference on Foreign Missions in London; since then he has spent much of his time in doing deputation work throughout Norway, and lecturing on missions to the students at the University of Christiania.

"MAY MEETINGS."

Church Missionary Society.

THERE was a large and enthusiastic assembly at Exeter Hall on Tuesday, last week, in celebration of the anniversary of this great Society. The platform was filled with well-known friends and supporters, who had come together from far and near, and the spacious hall, with its galleries, was crowded in every part. The report, presented by Rev. F. E. WIGRAM was full of interest. Quite fittingly, it opened with a note of praise to God for the blessing vouchsafed on the year's operations. Some paragraphs on finances, placing the general fund receipts at £211,378, a higher figure than ever before, were followed by a rapid review of the work. With reference to India, it was contended that educational endeavour is not independent of evangelisation, but rather a means to that important end. In conclusion, the need for fresh zeal and enthusiasm was enforced, the committee being persuaded that the more ardently evangelical Churchmen throw themselves into the work of disseminating the Gospel abroad, the more manifestly will the arm of the Lord be stretched forth to protect evangelical truth at home.

Sir JOHN KENNAWAY, who presided, in a hearty address indicated some of the many grounds for rejoicing at what God has wrought through the Society. He maintained the need of a distinction being drawn between the objects and the methods of the Society; the former are essential, the latter merely accidental. Methods may be changed and improved, but the high aims remain ever the same—the evangelisation of the people of the earth. There are to-day 244 stations as against 157 in 1870; the European missionaries number 333, whereas in 1870 they were only 229.

The BISHOP OF LONDON dwelt upon modern missionary effort in its relation to the commands given by Christ to his Apostles on two distinct occasions. He said: Our Lord, when he sent his disciples forth to prepare the way for Himself, into the various towns and villages which He was personally to visit, commanded them to take nothing with them, to make no special provision for their needs. When afterwards they returned, He said to them: "Lacked ye anything?" and they replied, "Nothing." Then the Lord told them that all this was to be changed; they were not to go forth relying simply on the providence of God to supply their needs, but, on the contrary, to use all the means that men ordinarily employ for support. Using these means, they would still have his blessing, though they must no longer expect interference with the general working of human society. Our Lord did not then withdraw from his disciples the power of working miracles; but, as the ages have rolled on, that has passed from the Church, the withdrawal being, in fact, implied in the words used by our Lord.

On the second occasion the disciples were told to go forth and preach the Gospel to the whole world, and, though Christ would be with them to the end, they were not to expect anything like a miraculous interposition. As long as men were sent forth simply relying upon God's interference to supply their needs, the work would have to be done by those particular men, and all the rest of the Church could do nothing but wish them God-speed. God would Himself raise up and call forth the men to be employed upon this great duty, but the Church at large would be employed in the other concerns of life, and remain simply passive while the special instruments were fulfilling their appointed labours. But the Lord did not design such a state of things as this. He would put the duty of taking the Gospel to the people of the world upon the Church as a body. He would have ministers sent forth to do the work; but the Church would have to send them—to choose them, and supply the means to support them and extend their labours. Every member of the Church would have his share of the great duty thus imposed upon the whole. Those who could not go forth in person could supply the money to send out those who could go; those, moreover, who could neither go nor give money, could, at any rate, give their prayers, and sympathy, and encouragement. Others, at home, could help by literary and other labours, and so by various agencies the work would go on. Whatever a man's gift might be, he would not be able to consider himself excluded from his share of the great and blessed duty.

That is the position which our Lord assigned to his Church, and the position in which we stand to-day. Recognising that position, the Church Missionary Society carries on its work, and gives an opportunity for all to show the gratitude which should swell in every Christian's soul. Having declared it a real token of God's favour that the income of the Society increases from year to year, the Bishop referred to recent criticism of missionary work. He maintained that it is a good thing that public attention has been called to the subject. Nothing is more fatal to the cause than indifference, and as criticism provokes inquiry, new friends must in consequence be secured to missionary endeavours. In a word of closing counsel, the Bishop held it to be not only desirable that the work should be made efficient abroad, but also that measures should be adopted to bring it under the notice of all the Christians of the land. He was sure that, if better understood, the cause would have the hearty support of many who now do nothing to assist it.

Rev. W. S. PRICE, recently returned from East Africa, spoke of the Mission work there. Alluding to the establishment of the British East Africa Company, he said that the directors have declared their intention to work in thorough harmony with the missionaries. As to the slave trade, he said he had reason to believe that efforts will shortly be made for its suppression in the region from which he has just come. The aspect of Africa is indeed dark to-day, but the prospect is as bright as the promises of God's Word can make it.

Colonel EUAN-SMITH, Her Majesty's Consul-General at Zanzibar, in a few remarks full of sympathy with the Society's work, had no word of despondency as to Africa. His description of the present condition of the country, however, was very saddening. Few, he observed, are aware of the intense darkness that prevails; where missionary effort has not been felt, there is absolute intellectual night. The hope of the country is in light dawning upon the natives, who must themselves work the social regeneration which is so much to be desired. A quickening is already apparent. If the missionaries show the people that slavery is degrading, then the people themselves will abolish the evil; also, when once instructed in Christian truth they will spread the Gospel themselves. The work is far too great for Europeans to undertake, but native agency can carry to an issue that which the missionaries begin and superintend.

Sir CHARLES BERNARD spoke of the great importance of the educational work of the Society in India. Secular teaching does not give to Hindu boys and girls the moral education they require; hence the value of mission schools, where the instruction is on a distinctly religious basis. Rev. H. E. FOX, of Durham, who last year visited India in connection with the Special Winter Mission, said that wherever the Gospel in its purity is preached, and the gift of common-sense is exercised, there is no evidence of failure. The call is not for a new Gospel, nor for new methods, but for new measures of faith and grace, and new measures of men and means. He appealed for more money and for fresh workers to enter the field. Rev. H. D. WILLIAMSON, missionary from Central India, described work among the Gonds, in which he has for some years been engaged.

Canon HOWELL, of Wrexham, with the native enthusiasm of a Welshman, urged the admission of more enthusiasm into the good cause of missions. How many Church of England congregations are there, he asked, that are not only not represented by a missionary in the field, but never, from year to year, hear a word about the cause which lies nearest to the heart of God? The Canon's warm and earnest words closed a meeting which was throughout characterised by warmth and earnestness.

Miss Weston's Work.

THE friends and supporters of Miss Weston's important work among our bluejackets and marines assembled in goodly force in Exeter Lower Hall last week. Admiral Sir LEOPOLD MCCLINTOCK presided, and the proceedings were of unflagging interest. The chairman spoke highly of the work which God has permitted Miss Weston to do. There is, he said, no more sober set of men than the Navy, and the great improvement in their behaviour, as compared with years gone by, he attributed in no small measure to Miss Weston's devoted labours.

In the course of a vigorous talk, Miss WESTON referred to the encouragements and disappointments attending her work. She did not take the credit of all the good that is associated with her name, for both at Portsmouth and Devonport many ladies devote themselves entirely, without fee or reward, to the service of God for the good of the men and boys of the Navy, and seamen and their wives. Other volunteer workers also help the large staff of the institutions, to say nothing of the labours of Miss Wintz, who is Miss Weston's second self.

Miss Weston's tale was one of progress "all along the line." The blessing of God has been abundantly evident, and with his continued approval future prosperity may be safely reckoned upon. No doubt, observed Miss Weston, the Navy will soon be very greatly increased. That will, of course, involve an increase in our work for God. During last year 496 Gospel and temperance meetings were held at Portsmouth and Devonport, with an aggregate attendance of 171,000 men and their wives. The bluejackets and marines themselves do much towards sustaining the meetings, for they pray, and testify, and give out the hymns. On board ship, as well as on shore, the temperance cause is increasingly popular, no fewer than 3952 pledges having been taken during the year. The great majority keep their resolution, and are protected from a terrible snare. The Bible-classes, 468 in number, were well attended, and not a few men professed to give their hearts to God. Among the boys a really good work is proceeding. I look upon the boys, said Miss Weston, as the most important part of the work. If we can get the hearts of the boys, we shall have no anxiety about the men. Some of the brightest Christians in the service have come to us as boys. Miss Weston told with joy of the erection of the new Sailors' Rest at Devonport, public-houses having previously been purchased off the site. The new Rest has already been entered, and the men appreciate the dormitories very highly. The entire building is free from debt, the money having always come in when required.

Mr. T. A. DENNY spoke as one well acquainted with the good work which Miss Weston so ably superintends. He referred, in terms of warm gratitude, to Mr. H. L. Hastings, of Boston, U.S.A., who sent to the Rest a ton of tracts against infidelity; and intimated that Mr. John Cory and himself would each give £10 towards the sum of £70 which it is intended to send to Mr. Hastings to cover the cost of paper and printing. Admiral GRANT also highly praised the work. He was followed by Canon FLEMING, who observed that, as he was the young clergyman in the city of Bath who was instrumental in speaking the word of salvation to Miss Weston some years ago, he could not help rejoicing greatly at the blessing which has attended Miss Weston's grand work.

The Salvation Army.

ON Wednesday evening, last week, Exeter Hall was crowded with members and friends of the Salvation Army. Supported by Messrs. T. A. Denny, J. Cory, and Rev. E. W. Moore, on the one hand, and by a large staff of officers on the other, General Booth seemed greatly to enjoy the abounding enthusiasm of the meeting. Miss STIRLING, about to leave for Switzerland, in order to fulfil the remainder of her term of imprisonment in Chillon Castle, was in attendance, and said she went back right cheerfully to undergo her sentence for speaking of Jesus to the Swiss children. Her great desire being to save souls, it did not much matter that she had to endure something by the way.

Mrs. Booth wrote from her sick-chamber a letter heartily congratulating the Army upon its activity in the work of world-wide evangelisation. General BOOTH expressed himself delighted that his family had been brought up for the service of God on the field of action. He was pleased to observe that the Archbishop of Canterbury was announced to preside at the meeting of the Church Army. He took this as a hopeful sign, adding, "Long live the Archbishop! Who knows that we may not see him one day on the platform of the Salvation Army? He will be very welcome."

The General then delivered a long address on "The future of missions." He found much to complain of in present methods, and still more in present results. The money raised by the great societies is, moreover, contemptibly small and inadequate. He declared his own idea of earnest operations to be that the entire Church of Christ should resolve itself into one vast missionary association, and set to work on the basis that the people of the world are properly divided into two distinct classes—the friends and enemies of Christ. There are heathen and idolaters at home as well as abroad, and though we send the Gospel to the benighted living in foreign climes we set them no perfect example of godliness at home. Whether belonging to the Royal Family, or members of the Houses of Lords or Commons, whether rich or poor, the entire community is made up of those who are friends of the Lord Jesus Christ and those who are not, and the great day will make it clear that if we are not on the right hand of the Judge we shall be on the left. Having formed such a large society, he would give the people of the world no quarter until they became friends of Christ.

If, however, as seems inevitable, the present divisions must be maintained, then missionary societies can only be successful in the highest sense so long as they recognise the fact that man's miseries are the consequence of his alienation from God, and that the remedy for his evil state is a getting back to God. At home, as well as abroad, men have left God and by their sins the separation is continually being widened. All such wanderers are truly heathen, and require to be reconciled to the Almighty. Not only, moreover, must the missionary society of the future recognise this elementary fact, but it must learn that Christianity is not to be extended by means of civilisation, but rather civilisation is to be advanced by means of Christianity. Heathen in this country have been saved, and the same must be done for those abroad. But those who take the Gospel message must inspire confidence by their earnestness of purpose and holiness of life. The Queen of England has 80,000 soldiers in India; why has not the King of kings got as many, if not more, to hold the land for Jesus? But, alas, we do not go about his business as we do our own!

In the course of some further remarks, the General held that the missions of the future must be supported by the countries in which the evangelists work, and, as the Salvation Army has done in Switzerland, the labourers must "fight it out" with Governments who object to allow free course to the message from God.

Several substantial sums, amounting in the aggregate to over £800, were promised towards carrying on the work of the Army. In conclusion, Major Musa Bhai, an Indian officer of the Army, gave a stirring testimony, ending with an urgent appeal for more devoted workers. The Army has now 2713 corps, of which 1268 are foreign; and 8008 officers, of which 3694 are foreign. These figures show a considerable progress upon the year.

Bible Christian Missions.

MR. ALBERT SPICER presided over the annual meeting of the Bible Christian Missionary Society, held on Wednesday, last week, in the Lower Exeter Hall. There was a large attendance, and the friends of the cause were much encouraged at what they heard. The report, as read by Rev. F. W. BOURNE, traced the progress of the Society at home and abroad, since its formation sixty-eight years ago. The finances showed a diminution of receipts.

In the course of a hearty address, the CHAIRMAN spoke of the Society's work in Australia, as he had seen and heard of it during his travels. Rev. Dr. KEEN, president of the Conference, congratulated the Connexion on the beginning of work in the province of Yunnan, China. It is sincerely hoped that more missionaries will volunteer for this field. The fundamental article of the missionary Church, said Dr. Keen, is that God has made of one blood all nations of men to dwell on the face of the earth, and this has become a fundamental article in the creed of science. The brotherhood of man is the loftiest note of science at the present day, as it is also the loftiest note of modern missionary enterprise. Science and religion here meet and embrace one another. In reference to the success which has attended the Society's work, the speaker said it should set all the bells of gladness ringing, and fill the hearts of God's people with gratitude and joy.

Rev. EBENEZER E. JENKINS rejoiced to show his sympathy with the Bible Christians. He did not share in the feeling which has in some circles become quite a popular sentiment, that missions are going to the bad. True, young men may see visions; but he did not hesitate to say that the visions of his youth had been lost in the brighter results to which in his old age he was privileged to testify. He heard it said continually that the work of missions proceeds slowly, but he was convinced that it is progressing faster than some people think. The Lord Jesus is ahead of his disciples, beckoning them to follow Him; they are lagging behind, not He.

Rev. A. HANCOCK having spoken of the Society's "attack" on Blackburn, as the initiation of a scheme to promote evangelisation in the large towns of England, Rev. ARCHIBALD G. BROWN, in a warm speech, pointed out that the Church is not so much in need of new methods as of power from on high. Far too much importance is, to-day, attached to eloquence. What is required is the power of the Holy Ghost, by which the Lord Jesus Christ himself does the work through the agency of devoted men.

Baptist Missions.

THE Baptist Society has come in for its share of the criticisms that have lately been launched at our great missionary organisations; indeed, it had to bear the full brunt of Mr. Caine's attack. That attack does not seem to have hurt the Society much, judging from its annual meetings held in London last week. These meetings were pretty numerous, embracing breakfast, soirée, and larger assemblies of varied types. All were well attended and marked by plenty of enthusiasm, which it may be hoped will in due time crystallise into an increase of the working and giving strength of the Mission.

Probably the climax of the anniversary programme was reached at the meeting in the City Temple on Thursday evening, when that spacious edifice was crowded with the friends and supporters of the work. Sir Wm. Hunter had been advertised as the chairman, but he has unfortunately broken his ankle, and is still a close prisoner in his room. His place was taken at short notice by Dr. R. N. Cust, the well-known candid friend and critic of missions. In the course of his speech he amply vindicated his reputation in both these respects.

After hearty song and prayer, the secretary of the Mission, Mr. ALFRED BAYNES, made his statement. The report for the year, he said, consisted of eighty pages, and he would not read it, though he hoped it would be read in the pages of the current Missionary Herald, as it was well worth study. It tells of general progress, of more numerous conversions—1352 were baptized during the year as far as the statistics are known. In India there has been a wonderful desire for the study of the Scriptures. The native churches are growing more independent in the matter of support. Mr. Baynes cited a striking utterance of Ram Chundra Bose, a leading Hindu writer, to the effect that Christianity is working great marvels in the land; that the foundations of Hinduism are being washed away, and that Christianity is certainly the religion of the future in India. A testimony of similar purport from "a recent traveller" (Mr. Caine) was greeted with applause, partly ironical and partly congratulatory. Passing to China and then to Africa, Mr. Baynes was happy to report advances, particularly on the Congo. "To-day is our opportunity and our responsibility," writes a Congo missionary. Recent utterances of Canon Liddon, Sir Charles Aitchison, and others were cited, in proof of the fact that modern missions are by no means a failure, and that the workers are men of God who well deserve our sympathy and support.

Mr. RICKETT, treasurer, had the happy task of reporting that, from a financial point of view, the past year has been the most prosperous of any—over £14,000 having been received in advance of the previous year's income. Still there was at the close of the year a deficit of £2,800 caused by increased expense in connection with the Congo Mission. Part of this deficit has been made up, and Mr. Rickett made an appeal that the whole should be speedily wiped off. Let the memory of those beloved brethren who have fallen in the fight on the banks of the Congo stimulate the friends at home to hold up the hands of those who remain in the field. Mr. Baynes is going to visit the Indian Missions in the autumn, and it is desirable that the finances should be in a satisfactory state before he goes.

Dr. CUST said he counted it an honour to take the place of his old friend, Sir W. Hunter. As "an emergency man," he had not prepared an address, but he would say what came to his lips from his heart. He eulogised the work of Carey and Judson in India, so faithful in days when missions were not so fashionable as now. As to Africa, he said the Baptists had nobly discharged their task in seeking the evangelisation of the Congo; special mention was made of the geographical and linguistic achievements of Mr. Holman Bentley. The action of the German authorities in expelling the Baptist Mission from the Cameroons was roundly condemned by Dr. Cust, who said he had told his German friends that that sort of thing must not occur again.

Turning to the general subject of missions, Dr. Cust described the three epochs in the history of missions: first, they are unfashionable, and made a target for the jokes of the cynic. Then there comes the epoch of extravagant praise and self-laudation. Now there has dawned the third epoch of criticism. There are critics who love missions, and who know what they are criticising; he himself was one of those. There is also the travelling Member of Parliament critic, who passes through the country, and puts down in his note-book all the unfriendly remarks he may pick up. This was a palpable fling at Mr. Caine, and when the chairman went on bluntly to say that "There's a great deal of the old Adam in Mr. Caine," the meeting was fairly convulsed. Canon Taylor's turn came next, and his fondness for Mohammedanism as a substitute for Christianity was described as simple infidelity. Dr. Cust dilated at some length on the different missionary methods in vogue—the free lance, the sisterhoods, the brotherhoods, the organisations that do not guarantee any certain income, and finally, the "root, hog, or die" plan of Bishop Taylor's Mission in Central Africa; all came under the friendly lash of the speaker. He was specially severe on the last, remarking that the missionaries often carry out the principle of the Society—they do die. The address, which was too long, but packed full of weighty matter, was rounded off with an exposition of five essential qualities of a good missionary. These were: (1) intense love and pity for the heathen world; (2) the preaching of Christ crucified, and nothing else; (3) readiness to live at peace with others, and to abstain from perpetuating home divisions; (4) non-interference with political matters; and (5) economy in the application of public funds. Now is England's chance to evangelise the world. Let us lose no time, but give freely of our money, our prayer, and best young life; the blessing will return to us in manifold ways.

Much interest was awakened as a dusky son of Ham, Rev. J. FULLER JACKSON, of the Cameroons (West Africa), rose to move a resolution rejoicing in the increasing success of the Gospel in heathen lands, and calling for increased support. This devoted missionary made a very pathetic and moving appeal on behalf of Africa, so long neglected and unknown, but now having open doors in every part of the continent, and having teeming populations to whom the Gospel message may be sent. For forty and four years he has himself, as a missionary, seen the gross darkness in which the people on the West Coast are sunk; but he also bore personal witness to the marvellous transformation that has been effected by the proclamation of the Gospel.

The resolution was seconded by Professor ELMSLIE in a very able and much applauded speech, most of which, however, was of too general a character for a missionary meeting. He told of the intense interest with which he had read right through Mr. Baynes's printed report. In commenting on the statement that a strong desire was showing itself for the reading and understanding of the Scriptures, he told with exceedingly graphic power some personal experiences during a stay in the house of a Roman Catholic family in Rome, several members of which were brought practically under the power of God's Word. In the course of his address the Professor expressed the opinion that the recent criticisms on missions might now be severely let alone. Mr. Caine, he said, had been killed as a critic many times, and the chairman had to-night dug his grave; there let him lie! Yet another speech, and a good one, followed from Rev. J. EWEN, from Benares, who declared that he was entirely an optimist in the matter of Indian missions, and gave some strong reasons for the hopeful faith that is in him.

We hope the collection was an adequate expression of the warmth of feeling displayed, and the overflowing attendance.

British and Foreign Bible Society.

THE eighty-fifth annual meeting was held in Exeter Hall, on Wednesday, May 1, the Earl of Harrowby presiding. The attendance was very large, a goodly number of influential gentlemen supporting the Chairman. The addresses were vigorous and pointed, the work of the Society standing out prominently in its great importance and value in connection with all forms of Christian effort.

After speaking of the Bible as the bond which links together all Christian people, Lord HARROWBY briefly reviewed the work of the Society. From all the reports he gathered the general impression that there is a growing feeling of respect for the Bible, and a revival of interest in studying it. Therefore, he maintained, this is a time when the Society should redouble its zeal. Through a falling off in the amount of legacies, the receipts show a considerable diminution, and, compared with the unusually large issues during the Jubilee year, the "output" exhibits a reduction. At the beginning of the present century the Scriptures were only published in 54 languages; whereas, to-day the Society alone circulates translations in 287. In conclusion, the speaker urged all Christians to do their utmost to disseminate the Word of Life.

Sir RICHARD TEMPLE delivered an address full of sympathy with the work of the Society. Alluding to the decay of faith in countries in which Roman Catholicism prevails, he traced that sad decline to the want of knowledge of the Holy Scriptures. He inferred that people who become agnostics through not studying the Bible are likely to become God-fearing in proportion as facilities for reading the Blessed Book are afforded them. Having spoken of the triumphs of missions in India and other parts of the world, Sir Richard called attention to the literary side of the Society's achievement. He did not know that it had ever been given to any other nation, ancient or modern, to show such a mighty linguistic activity as that evinced by the translation of so elaborate a book as the Bible into such a large number of languages. Finally, he spoke words of encouragement to all who are desirous of making known to the ignorant and erring that Gospel which lights up the valley of the shadow of death.

Rev. J. MACGOWAN, of Amoy, illustrated the power of the Bible by telling of some of the victories of the Gospel in China. One of his interesting stories was of a man whose first step to God was made through reading the opening of Genesis. That man shortly afterwards became a Christian, giving up opium at once, evidently by the power which evoked the martyr spirit of olden times. Since then he has for years been a pastor in the Church, and preaching Christ. Let that man be asked whether Genesis is inspired, and he would pity the questioner! His life is evidence to him of the truth of God's word.

Archdeacon SCOTT spoke of the Bible as a gracious gift of God to mankind, and the great instrument by which the Holy Spirit works. Rev. J. JAMESON followed with an account of operations in Spain. He claimed that the Society is the grand helper of all the missions. The Missions are the army, and the Bible Society the commissariat.

Rev. E. R. YOUNG told of blessing among the Cree Indians, in consequence of Bible translation and publishing. He said that when the emissaries of the Romish Church endeavour to make inroads into the mission fields of North-West America, all that is needed is to keep the Bible open, and to keep before the people the Christ of the Bible, directly inviting them to come to Him; all the missions are then quite safe. Not only is the Bible, in the common speech of the people, the grandest barrier against heresy and sin, but the study of it is the surest guarantee of genuine Christian life.

Strangers' Friend Society.

THIS ancient Society held its annual review at the Mansion House, on Tuesday week, the Lord MAYOR, of course, presiding. Mr. B. H. GERRANS, secretary, reported that 241 voluntary visitors were at work; 3661 cases had been received; 21,571 visits were paid, at which relief was given; £1,168 12s. 2d. was distributed in relief during the year. The report cited many interesting cases out of those met with.

The Chairman expressed emphatic approval of the work. Surely the first duty of a friend is to assist another in distress. The institution is non-sectarian, though Christian in its basis; it goes to the sick and the dying, and especially to the mothers in this city.

Rev. Dr. CLIFFORD spoke of the demoralising and deteriorating influences of poverty. This Society meets a man at the top of the slope which leads to misery, and thus saves him in many cases from moral wreckage. The workers appeal to the heart, and an applicant does not have to look through a little hole at a relieving officer, nor meet a Charity Organisation officer, bristling all over with interrogatives; but two hundred and forty Christian men and women go with sympathy and help. The Society spends little, and gives a great deal, while it prevents indiscriminate charity. Sir HENRY W. PEEK, who followed, gave some encouraging incidents of the work.

Rev. RICHARD ROBERTS expressed the questionable view that God permits misery and poverty in order that it may inspire benevolence, and thus bring much moral loveliness into the world. If men were equal in talent, mental power, and ability, it might be different, but whilst they are not we must expect poverty. Rev. J. MCNEILL thought that Christians should support the Society, as a reply to the charge of selfishness often levelled at them. Christianity is the service of man, as well as the service of God, and the Society fulfils that part of the service. Mr. BUSKIN, Mr. J. H. ANDERSON, and others spoke.

Reformatory and Refuge Union.

IN presiding over the annual meeting of the Union in St. James's Hall last Thursday, Lord ABERDARE referred to the occasion as "a bright entertainment." So indeed it was, that part of it at any rate given by 500 of the children representing eleven of the six hundred and sixty-six affiliated institutions. In front of the platform a square space was reserved for one of the most interesting items on the programme—musical drill by some of the girls from the Field-lane Industrial School. The rest of the building was fully occupied by an audience which evidently appreciated the songs and varied exercises of the children under the always effective leadership of Mr. JOSEPH PROUDMAN.

Between these were sandwiched the speeches and usual resolutions. Rev. ALAN H. WATTS gave the children a ten minutes' talk on "Authors and Authorship," and succeeded in presenting life-truths to the little ones. Sir T. FOWELL BUXTON, Bart., rejoiced in the stated decrease of crime amongst the lower classes; leading us to hope that parents are becoming more alive to their duty. It is important that the children have a good start in life, and it is proposed to locate an agent in Canada, who will find openings for boys and girls leaving this country. The Union is a valuable means of co-operation, as it is helpful to the heads of the various institutions. Canon BARKER advanced the somewhat obvious suggestion that the ure of our country depends on the way we train children. With the increased facilities for cation we may cherish a hope that the e will come when destitute children will se to be a burden on the public charity. gislation should give power to the local horities to emigrate or apprentice children. want to reform the present system, which ds a child to prison before he can become lified for help. A donation of £50 from the een was announced, and by way of gratitude meeting sang the National Anthem. The ort gives full information about all the artments of the work, and makes special erence to recent legislation in behalf of ldren.

Seamen's Mission Society.

E annual meeting of this Society, held on ednesday last week in Willis's Rooms, St. nes's, was presided over by the Archbishop York. The secretary, Commander DAWSON, N., read an interesting report. The income t year was one-fifth more than during 1887, cial efforts having been made to provide rshipping accommodation for the crews of ps and fishing vessels at several seaports. kens of good continue to follow the exertions the Society, individual captains, officers, sea- n, and firemen, having borne witness in ir changed lives to the power of the Gospel. In a hearty address, the ARCHBISHOP com- ended the Society to generous support. Sir ILIP CUNLIFFE OWEN declared himself eased to find that the Society endeavours to mmend temperate habits to the sailors. aving had some experience in his early days the evil of intemperance among sailors, and owing how terribly they are tempted, he had an example for fourteen years of total stinence, and in the evening of life wished to his utmost for the benefit of those among om he was thrown in his early days. Mr. Cleeve and other friends followed with words sympathy.

Moravian Missionary Society.

ST Friday afternoon the Council Chamber at eter Hall was uncomfortably filled for the nual meeting of the London Association of is excellent Society. The report read by the retary certainly appealed to the sympathies all present, and words were not wanting in e speeches to intensify the interest awak- ed. From all quarters of the globe come eering reports of success. Probably the most eresting passage in the report is that of nother missionary attempt to enter Thibet." e attempt was made by Mr. Weber, who es at the mission station, on the borders of ibet, fourteen days' journey from the nearest st-office. Although the attempt was unsuc- ssful another is contemplated.

Rev. HUGH PRICE HUGHES alluded to the t that Wesleyanism really owed its existence the Moravian Brethren. The popular error that it began in Oxford. The truth is that esley went to America to convert the Red dians, discovered that he himself was uncon- rted, and was influenced by a Moravian ssionary. He alluded to the severe criticism at missions have undergone of late. This is t a thing to be regretted altogether; it ther indicates increased spirituality in the urches, and an intense desire to carry for- rd the work of God with greater fervour.

Sir ROBERT PHAYRE expressed the convic- n that the wonderful success of Moravian ssionaries is due to the fact that they preach simple Gospel. While questionings are heard all hands, whilst cultured centres are con- ering philosophies and sacerdotalism, it is ing proved throughout the world that the one ing that is needed for men everywhere is the nple truth as it is in Jesus Christ.

Rev. HANDLEY C. G. MOULE gave a most eresting historical résumé of the events ich led to the foundation of the Moravian urch. He commended the Mission because of the purity of its doctrine, the devotedness of its missionaries, and the unobtrusive spirit of humility evidenced in the quiet zeal of the Church.

Rev. B. LA TROBE gave an account of a trip in the Harmony to Labrador, with facts and incidents in connection with the daily life and routine on the mission stations. On behalf of the Moravian Brethren he thanked the London Association for the confidence reposed in the missions.

Mrs. Meredith's Institutions.

THE annual meeting of the Church of England Women's Missionary Association took place in Exeter Hall on Thursday week. The main object is to provide deaconesses for work in heathen and Mohammedan lands as nurses of the sick and teachers of children. Archdeacon RICHARDSON, who presided, delivered a sympathetic address, pleading for sympathy and support. Mrs. MEREDITH gave a gratifying and hopeful account of the operations of the Association, for which, she said, more workers are urgently needed, as well as liberal help.

Rev. SYDENHAM DIXON followed, with a stirring appeal for practical assistance.

Rev. Dr. BULLINGER moved, and Rev. F. WHITFIELD seconded, a resolution recognising the importance of forming deaconesses for home and foreign service, and commending the principles of the Association. The former pointed out that the work was not merely philanthropic. Mr. Whitfield declared that the last thirty years' experience in the ministry of the Church of England has convinced him that there is no agency for reaching the poorest and the worst classes of people like that of Christian women. Another resolution was proposed by Rev. W. PELHAM STOKES, and supported by Rev. JAMES NEIL, expressing thankfulness that the first deaconesses' house established abroad is in Jerusalem, and that it is remarkably ordered of God.

Midnight Meeting Movement.

THE friends of this work gathered in strong force in Lower Exeter Hall, last week. Mr. J. H. L. CHRISTIEN, organising secretary, reported that one hundred and twelve meetings had been held during the year, with an aggregate attendance of over 5,300. Thousands of special letters and tracts have been distributed, as well as copies of the Gospels. The report cites many encouraging facts, and gives letters from young women who have been rescued through the agencies of the Society. The financial year closes unfortunately with a deficit. A special effort is being made to reach foreign fallen women in the Metropolis.

Mrs. EVERED POOLE gave a touching address, making a strong appeal for help and workers. She recounted many pathetic incidents of the rescue work. She asked if it were really true, as stated in the report, that modesty and virtue are declining amongst our English girls. She much feared that they are. Theatres, music-halls, pernicious literature, and careless speech, are doing their deadly work. We must make a determined effort to reach mothers and persuade them to train their daughters more thoroughly in habits of virtue, and to keep a stricter watch over them. Mrs. Poole made the startling statement, which she admitted might scarcely be credited, but which was nevertheless true, that in Southampton there are mothers and fathers who hire out their little girls as prostitutes.

Rev. W. D. WALTERS, alluding to East-end experiences, said that poverty is at the bottom of much of the sin. The tide of misery and evil seems to increase. People swarm into London from the provinces, and, failing to secure work, they fall into sin. Many of the houses of the poor are a disgrace to Christian civilisation. In a house with ten rooms, ten families will live, parents, grown up sons and daughters, all huddled in one room; it is a shameful thing. If we would save our Empire from decay, we must conserve the purity of our people. Rev. E. D. BRAIMBRIDGE thought that good laws and improved dwellings would not of themselves do the work, although they would help. It must be saturated with the Christian spirit. Major EVERED POOLE spoke of the tremendous difficulties of rescue work. We save one here and there, and it seems terrible that we can only reach this small percentage. The men need to be reached on this question; we must appeal to their chivalry if we cannot appeal to any higher sentiment.

Church of England Zenana Missions.

THIS Society celebrated its anniversary this day week in Prince's Hall, Piccadilly. There was a numerous audience, composed chiefly of ladies. The report contained many cheering facts, showing that the past year has been one of success. The Society has now fifty-one stations—forty-six in India, four in China, and one in Japan. There are one hundred and six missionaries in home connection, fifty-one assistants in local connection, and four hundred and eighty-eight Bible-women and native teachers—a staff in all of six hundred and forty-five, not including accepted candidates now in training for the work. There are upwards of 1000 associations and 550 working parties in support of the Mission. The general income for the year amounted to £24,866.

The Chairman (Rev. Canon HOME), in an interesting address, congratulated the Society on the progress it showed according to the report, and directed special attention to its extending operation and the development of women's sphere in Christian work through its instrumentality.

The meeting was afterwards addressed by Lieut.-Col. VAN SOMEREN, from the Madras Tresidency; Rev. E. SELL, B.D.; Dr. VAN SOMEREN TAYLOR, medical missionary from China; and Rev. WALTER ABBOTT; all of whom bore ample testimony to the devotion of the workers and the fruitfulness of the work of the Society.

Young Abstainers' Union.

EXETER LOWER HALL was well filled on Saturday afternoon when the annual meeting of this juvenile temperance organisation was held. Abundant testimony was borne that the promotion of total abstinence among the children of the wealthier classes is being successfully promoted. The total strength of the Union is 7719, an increase of 111 on last year. Five new branches have been formed, each of which is in a healthy and promising condition, and the work in most of the older branches is going on well. The cabs at the Temperance Hospital are a specially interesting part of the work. Mr. Algernon Cooke submitted the financial statement, which showed a deficiency of £181.

Sir S. ARTHUR BLACKWOOD, who presided, delivered a very encouraging and practical speech, in which he proved that the Union is doing a great work in influencing public opinion, which, he said, is gradually coming round to their side. The amount of alcoholic liquor consumed in society is much less than it was a year or two ago. The consumption of liquor at our City banquets is diminishing. Three or four years ago the quantity consumed was something like an average of a bottle and a half per head. Last year that came down to a bottle and a quarter, and at a banquet the other day the amount was reduced to a bottle. This is a striking proof that the temperance people are influencing public opinion. He dwelt on the necessity of extending the work of the Union, pointing out the great need there is for neutralising the baneful effects of strong drink, and in training up our young people in habits of abstinence. Thus we may by God's blessing work great and lasting effects upon the progress of the Gospel, the prosperity of our land, and promote the welfare of innumerable people.

Appropriate addresses were also given by the Hon. and Rev. W. TALBOT PRICE and the Misses LEITCH.

South American Missionary Society.

THE Bishop of Lichfield presided over the annual meeting of this Society, held in Exeter Lower Hall last week. Mr. SYDNEY GEDGE, M.P., delivered an address in warm commendation of the Society's work, the field extending from the icy south to the hot north of the continent. Not only is Christian truth disseminated, but civilisation is promoted, and towards carrying on its work the Society receives encouraging assistance from the Chilian Government, the railway companies, and the natives themselves.

Sir LEOPOLD MCCLINTOCK having spoken on the beneficial operations of the Society among British sailors in South American ports, Captain KENNEDY, R.N., detailed the work at Ooshooiya. He spoke highly of Bishop Stirling, who, being an excellent pilot, goes about in a three-ton cutter, in which no seaman would trust himself. Picturing the scenery of Tierra del Fuego as like Devonshire, the Captain referred to its 2000 fine war-like natives, originally cannibal wreckers, but now so reclaimed as in some cases to rejoice in kindly guiding wrecked tars to the Mission station. The place is, however, fast being "peopled up" by the Chilian and Argentine Governments, and the natives, sad to say, shot or "poisoned down." Captain SNOW, who went out in 1855, and other speakers, bore testimony to the growing importance of the Society's work.

London City Mission.

THE fifty-fourth annual meeting was held in Exeter Hall on Thursday last. Mr. WILLIAM ELLICE, who presided, spoke with joy of the development of the work. Some five hundred in number, the missionaries go from house to house, and are much cheered by what they see and hear of the results of their labours. The mission to cabmen continues to be a specially interesting one. There are within the area of operations about 15,000 men of this class, upwards of 1000 of whom are believed to be true Christians.

A short abstract of the report, read by Rev. T. S. HUTCHINSON, showed that the receipts slightly exceeded the expenditure. Mission-halls have proved a fitting complement to visitation, for many people who were unaccustomed to attend the ordinary places of worship have entered those humble buildings, and heard the Gospel plainly and earnestly preached. There are no fewer than 105 missionaries engaged in special work, among bakers, Jews, and butchers, in lodging-houses, &c.

Canon MONEY delivered a hearty address. The Society, he felt, was one in which all the churches ought to be interested. It was his privilege for many years to superintend the working of a city missionary, whose work was in the public-houses, and he was surprised and delighted to find the almost universal welcome accorded him by the publicans. On one occasion a missionary was addressing some men in a room behind the bar of a public-house, when he found the door behind him opened, and, there being a draught, he closed it, but as often as he closed it, it was opened again. Some time afterwards a note was received from the man who had been the publican, who had, it seemed, listened behind the door, and been favourably impressed with the words of the missionary. He had changed his course of life, had given up his public-house, and he wrote that he was a publican no longer, but a sinner still. Referring to last year's diminution of expenditure on wines and spirits, the speaker attributed the improved state of things in some measure to the operations of the Mission and other similar organisations. The Gospel preached is that which was preached by the Apostle Paul, in all its living power.

Mr. BRODIE HOARE, M.P., maintained that there is but one way of curing the great social disease of vice, misery, and sin, and that is by the means employed by the Mission. It strives to make not only good citizens of this world, but also good citizens of a heavenly kingdom, and thus appeals to two sentiments, either of which is enough to cause a man cheerfully to lay down his life—the love of country and the love of God.

Rev. PETER THOMPSON spoke pleasantly of Christian work in the East-end of London. He declared that if the Church would pray, and give, and be true, the problems of London life would be solved. Mr. BARNETT, missionary to the common lodging-houses in Westminster, having addressed the meeting, some words were spoken by the Hon. H. NOEL and Rev. H. SHARP.

The Church Army.

ARCHDEACON ANSON, of Manchester, presided over the annual meeting of this organisation, held on Wednesday last week at Princes Hall, Piccadilly. Rev. J. J. CHAMBERS, central secretary, reported progress in many respects. There are now 154 officers and twenty-four mission nurses in the field, with sixteen more picked men in training.

Rev. C. H. MOLINEUX, vicar of Staveley, Derbyshire, told how, though originally having great objections to the Army, he introduced it among the colliers of his parish, and had rejoiced in the results. "Captains" Davidson and Winfield having graphically described their work, Nurse Emmett, of Billinghurst, related how God had blessed her labours. Rev. WILSON CARLILE followed with an account of some of his endeavours among the degraded. We want, he said, to do something for the poor fellows who are polishing their backs up against the gin palaces. The Church Army has made a good many people ratepayers who used to be on the rates. They are anxious now to build a more commodious Home for the nurses, for whom the demand is practically unlimited.

Canon MONEY thought the Church was now on the right tack for reaching the working classes. In Cheltenham the respectable classes had greatly opposed the Army, but in two years about eighty converts had come out, with every evidence of sincerity and zeal. The effects of Church Army work, in the speaker's belief, arose from personal religion, personal effort, loving sympathy and perseverance.

"Captain" Kelly, of Oxford, and Nurse Way, of Stockport, having related some of their experiences, Rev. L. W. DAVIES, of Esclusham, the first to introduce the Church Army into Wales, bore an interesting testimony. Mr. EDWARD CLIFFORD followed with a narrative of his visit to Father Damien in the leper settlement at Molokai. He stated his conviction that Father Damien is a truly converted man. The meeting was enthusiastic throughout.

Sunday School Union.

UNDER the presidency of Lord KINNAIRD, the annual meeting of the Union was held in Exeter Hall, on Friday evening, when there was a large audience. The report, which was read by Mr. TOWERS, showed that abundant blessing has attended the varied and important operations during the past year. The various training classes are in a flourishing state. The Band of Hope movement is becoming more and more an integral part of the Sunday-school system, and the Union is doing all it can to foster and encourage it. Out of 5800 schools affiliated with the Union, 3397 have bands of hope connected directly with them. The completion of twenty-five years' work of the Continental Sunday-school Mission marks an era in its history. When the Union was started, there were in Berlin and Germany very few Sunday-schools. There are now more than 60 in Berlin, and about 3000 in Germany; in Holland there are 1471 schools; in Switzerland, 400 schools, with about 23,000 scholars; in France the statistics are about the seme; in Sweden there are 220,000 scholars and 15,000 teachers; there are now in connection with the Union 6241 schools, 147,000 teachers, and 1,450,000 scholars. In the schools connected with the Union 16,546 scholars have been brought t decision for Christ during the year, being in th proportion of 12 per 1000. The number o scholars in the London and county schoo who are communicants is reported as 76,860 being 56 per 1000 of the total number o scholars, so that the work of the Sunday-schoo teacher is both a ministry and a pastorate.

Encouraging, suggestive, and pointed speeche were delivered by the chairman, Rev. J. B MEHARRY, of Crouch-hill; Rev. W. J. WOODS of Clapton-park; and Rev. J. JACKSON WRAY Alderman BELSEY, J.P., and Mr. J. E. TRESID DER, also took part in the meeting.

British and Foreign Sailors' Society.

ON Monday the seventy-first annual meeting was held at the Mansion House, under the presidency of the LORD MAYOR. Summarising a voluminous report, the secretary, Rev. EDWARD MATTHEWS, gave facts and figures showing the great extent of the Society's operations at home and abroad. Working in harmony with the American Seamen's Friend Society, it does much for the temporal and spiritual good of sailors; the two societies together occupy, with houses, rests, and other permanent agencies, 71 ports, while 20 or 30 others are occasionally visited for special work.

The LORD MAYOR, in an appreciative speech, spoke of what he had seen of the Society's institutes in various parts of the world. When it is remembered that the actual amount of British shipping is more than 50 per cent. of the mercantile marine of the world, it will, he said, readily be understood how great a necessity there is for the operations of such a Society as this not only being carried on, but extended from year to year.

A few hearty words having been spoken by the BISHOP OF LONDON, Mr. MCGREGOR, a shipowner, bore testimony to the great moral improvement among seamen in the last thirty years. Mr. J. HERBERT TRITTON supported the Society on the ground of (1) good work unostentatiously done; (2) efficient attention to detail—the grand secret of business success; and (3) economical management.

Ragged School Union.

THE anniversary of the Ragged School Union was celebrated on Monday, when the EARL OF ABERDEEN presided over a large meeting in Exeter Hall. The secretary, Mr. JOHN KIRK, read an abstract of a very inspiring report, showing that the Union last year did a vast amount of good with the money placed at its disposal by friends of the poor children of London. The hungry have been fed, the ragged clothed, and besides being educated and industrially trained, the children have also, in many cases, been afforded much-needed recreation and cheer in their struggles with poverty and other difficulties. Instruction in righteousness and temperance has ever been of the essence of the work, and in not a few cases parents have been reached and benefited through the medium of their children.

The Chairman having delivered a hearty address, Lord COMPTON, M.P., spoke highly of the Union and the grand purposes it serves. Incidentally, he emphasised the importance of the young girls being taught the art of cooking. Lady ABERDEEN, who was accompanied by her young children, distributed the prizes with grace and despatch, afterwards speaking in a happy manner to the hundreds of Ragged-school children present. She impressed upon them the importance of regarding the education they receive in the schools as simply a key with which to gain access to treasures of knowledge. She further counselled them to learn, through the example of their teachers, that the highest happiness can only be attained by putting duty first, that self-sacrifice should be learned at the foot of the cross, and that there is nothing more worthy of ambition than to endeavour, in the spirit of Christ, to spread the blessings of the Gospel among men. In conclusion, Lady Aberdeen urged the children to make the most of their present opportunities, and boldly to step out for truth and God.

Revs. R. H. LOVELL, C. H. GRUNDY, and G. W. MCCREE delivered addresses, which were highly appreciated. The prize-takers from sixty-eight ragged-school missions were constituted a choir for the occasion, and, under the direction of Mr. JOSEPH PROUDMAN, rendered several melodies in capital style. The offices of the Mission are at Exeter Hall.

Religious Tract Society.

LAST Friday the friends of the Religious Tract Society celebrated its ninetieth anniversary. The large Exeter Hall was crowded on the occasion, many being attracted to the meeting doubtless by the announcement that 600 children from the elementary schools were to sing during the evening under the direction of Mr. Joseph Proudman. Needless to say, this part of the programme was excellently carried out and contributed greatly to the enjoyment of the gathering. The various speeches were very hearty and well to the point, and during the evening much satisfaction was expressed at the useful work which has been done through the Society's instrumentality.

The report, judging from the extracts read by Dr. BORRETT WHITE, must be a really inspiring record of work. It mentioned that during the year over seventy-seven millions of publications were circulated, of which more than twenty-five millions were tracts, granted free or at greatly reduced price. In the twelve months 905 new publications, either of a distinctly religious or of an elevating moral character, were issued, 172 of these being tracts. The fact was emphasised that every penny subscribed towards the Society's missionary work is used for that purpose, as all working expenses are defrayed by the profits derived from ordinary sales.

Mr. GEORGE WILLIAMS, who occupied the chair in the enforced absence, through ill-health, of the Bishop of Bedford, expressed the indebtedness of the Y.M.C.A. and other institutions, with which he is connected, to the Tract Society, and referred to its great value as an antidote to the immoral and infidel literature that is so largely in circulation.

Rev. F. B. MEYER spoke of the prodigious character of the Society's operations, expressing himself delighted that such a good undertaking should be so thoroughly self-supporting. The magnificent work of the Society in defending the truth of the Gospel, in promoting sound education among the people, and in disseminating the Gospel by means of tracts, was described, and the claims of the Society upon Christian consideration were heartily enforced. Mr. SYDNEY GEDGE, M.P., dwelt upon the present-day thirst for something to read, and for religious knowledge. The Society's work in foreign lands was shown to be as much needed as it has been truly blessed to many people in various countries. Rev. W. EVANS HURNDALL followed with an address on the power of the Society. Speaking of the spiritual needs of East London, he said: We want tracts with real grit in them, with plenty of backbone, for out there we believe that the most manly and common-sense thing in all the world is the glorious Gospel of the blessed God. We want the tracts to be full of this, for you cannot have too much of the real, old-fashioned Gospel in tracts. Because this Society supplies just such publications, we say: "Long may it flourish!"

MR. SPURGEON AND THE Y.M.C.A.—In a letter expressing regret at his inability to be present at the recent annual meeting of the Aldersgate-street branch, Mr. Spurgeon says: "The value of your Association to our great City cannot be rated too high. May it be maintained in the highest degree of efficiency. Every Christian man who is gaining wealth in London is under bonds to uphold the Y.M.C.A. It should be his delight, as well as his duty."

BAPTIST UNION.

THE Baptist Union meetings, held in Bloomsbury Chapel last week, were made interesting by the discussion of some very practical subjects. Rev. Dr. Clifford gave place to the new president, Rev. J. T. WIGNER, who delivered a vigorous address on "Our Life in Christ—that life for Him; or, Christ living in us—we living for Him." Descending from passages of deep spiritual import, the speaker reviewed the work of the Union at length, maintaining throughout a tone which was highly appreciated. Rev. Dr. BOOTH, the secretary, presented the report, which exhibited some large figures. It was computed that during the year there had been an increase of about 20,000 in church membership, and about 23,000 Sunday scholars. Rev. James Owen, of Swansea, was elected vice-president.

At the second session on Wednesday, Mrs. MEDLEY, of Nottingham, read a paper on "Guilds for Young Women." Sensible means of brightening the lives of young people were explained, reference being made to very successful work at Nottingham, on lines suggested for further adoption. Mr. D. F. GOTCH, of Kettering, followed with a paper on "Guilds for Young Men." He pleaded for more general recognition of these societies, which are capable of doing good work in connection with the churches. In the course of a discussion, Rev. G. R. Thorne, of Wolverhampton, described the "Pleasant Sunday Evenings," a very useful institution in South Staffordshire.

On the third day it was resolved that the autumnal assembly should be held in Birmingham. Rev. Dr. TODD read a paper on "Recent Biblical Criticism, and the Higher Scriptural Instructiou of our People." He strongly maintained the demand for a higher, deeper, wider, and more thorough measure of Biblical instruction in our families and schools, as well as in our churches and congregations. Rev. T. G. ROOKE, of Rawdon College, followed with an able address. He held that the entire Scriptures were undoubtedly written "that we might believe in the Christ, the Son of God, and that, believing, we might have life through his name." Mr. T. W. BUSHILL read a practical paper on "The Relations of the Employer and Employed in the Light of the Social Gospel." After some discussion on National Education, Rev. G. Short, of Salisbury, delivered an earnest address on "Sympathy with the Saviour: its influences on piety and devotion." He called for consecration and prayer, with renewed and more loving effort in evangelisation.

THE WELLESLEY COLLEGE GIRLS (U.S.), within a very few days, raised nearly 400 dollars for the famine sufferers in China. A part of this sum represented genuine self-sacrifice, since it involved the surrender of certain pleasures in connection with the annual junior promenade, the one festival dear to every undergraduate's heart.

RAILWAY MEN.—The ladies who have the welfare of the Metropolitan Railway men at heart, held their usual happy gatherings a few days ago in a large hall in Bayswater. Some 750 sat down to a social tea, after which addresses were given by Mr. T. A. Denny, Dr. Schofield, Lieutenant Mandeville, and other friends. The workers have been much encouraged at hearing of one and another having decided for the Lord at these meetings. Miss Jackson, 28, Topstone-road, S.W., is hon. sec.

SCANDINAVIAN YOUNG WOMEN.—On Thursday evening, last week, there was a very interesting meeting of Scandinavians at the Y.W.C.A., Morley Hall, 316, Regent-street, in connection with the Continental Division of the Association. After tea, and an excellent entertainment, Miss Manning, the secretary of the Continental branch, described the objects of the Association. The meeting was most successful, and will be repeated on the first Thursday in each month. The co-operation of any musical Scandinavian ladies resident in London is cordially invited.

MAJOR WHITTLE IN STIRLING.

THE annual Christian Convention at Stirling was held on Tuesday, April 30, at 10.30 a.m. and 2.30 p.m. Major Whittle presided, and addressed a large evangelistic meeting in Allan-park U.P. Church, where the other meetings were held at 8 p.m. The subject chosen was, "Evangelistic Work: its Needs, its Methods, and its Results." The ministers of Stirling and its neighbourhood were largely represented, and prominent Christian workers from Edinburgh and Glasgow helped to swell the numbers. After singing and prayer by several of the ministers, Dr. Moxey read from 2 Cor. v. 9—21 and vi. 1, 2, and John iv. 31—38. In reference to the last verse read, Major Whittle remarked that the words, "I sent you to reap," formed the keynote of this dispensation. The subject was opened by Rev. Henry Montgomery, Belfast, on the needs of evangelistic work, followed by Rev. George Wilson, of Cramond.

The afternoon was occupied by some most touching and interesting testimonies, closed by addresses from Rev. J. Macpherson on the methods, and by Major Whittle on the results, of evangelistic work.

The Stirling Convention has usually occupied three days, and like others was getting into a rut. We doubt not that these bright, crisp addresses and testimonies, with the evangelistic meeting in the evening with which Major Whittle's ten days' mission was commenced, have made more mark than a three days' conference would have done. We hope this example may be followed in other places. We regret that the pressure on our space, owing to the May Meetings, prevents our giving the addresses this week.

"WILD WEST" BAZAAR.

SIR,—My attention has been called to a paragraph in your issue of April 12 in which you do me a serious wrong. You make it appear that the remark quoted about the Bazaar being "as good as a prayer-meeting" applied to the entertainments. How you could do this I am at a loss to know, for I definitely stated that it did not apply to them. I trust you will correct this misrepresentation.—Yours respectfully, G. PARKIN.

8, Cyril-street, Northampton.

VILLAGE WORK.

DEAR SIR,—There is tremendous need throughout the country of the help of earnest Christians who would devote at least a portion of their summer holidays to evangelistic work. Every year I place an advertisement in your paper for a cottage to which I can take my family in some part of the country where Gospel meetings would be welcome, and you would be surprised at the number of almost entreaties to come which I receive.

Amongst your readers there must be a great many who would gladly consecrate their holidays in this way. Would it not be useful were you to give a list of places where evangelistic help is really wanted? I gather from the letters which have come to me that there must be hundreds of villages in Christian England where the Gospel is never preached.—Yours truly,

Putney. H. WILFRED SCRIVEN.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For blessing on special services by Mr. Opie Rodway, at Baptist Chapel, Waltham Abbey, May 11 to 13.——For blessing on a mission at St. Peter's Church, Paddington, conducted by Rev. W. Hay Aitken, Rev. D. Bontflower, and Mrs. Crouch, from May 12 to 26.——For blessing on evangelistic services, to be conducted by Mr. Henry Collins, of the Evangelisation Society, during May, at Castle Cary.——For blessing on services by Mr. W. Forbes, in Paris, in connection with Miss Leigh's (Mrs. Lewis's) work.——For my only son, a lad of seventeen, who is causing us great grief; nothing but God's grace can arrest him.

CHILDREN FOR CANADA.

MISS MACPHERSON attended the noon prayer-meeting at the Y.M.C.A., 186, Aldersgate-street, E.C., on Monday last, with a party of children shortly to sail for Canada. About a hundred in number, the little ones are of both sexes and various ages, many of them being very smart and bright in appearance. Not a few friends who looked upon them blessed God that, by the activity of Miss Macpherson and her helpers, and through the kindness of such as feel for the woes of neglected youth, the youngsters have before them not only careers of usefulness, but the various and great opportunities which a comparatively new country affords. In a few words, Miss MACPHERSON told of the reports she is constantly receiving of truly blessed experiences on the part of the children already in Canada. Many of the present party are without parents, while some have been taken from such sad domestic surroundings that their emigration is an immediate as well as a prospective advantage.

Miss STOCK read some deeply interesting letters received from Canada that very morning. In one of them a boy from the Home of Industry, related, in terms remarkable for spiritual cogency, his decision for Christ during a recent revival in the town in which he is living. That motherless lad (now seventeen) was "picked up" in one of the streets of Whitechapel, having been deserted by his father. Another boy was desirous of some information about London, as he was going to read an essay before some little society to which he belongs! The poor lad's early days were passed in a common lodging-house, so he is likely to know just a little of one side of London life. Doubtless, however, his essay will be devoted to the delineation of the more attractive scenes and activities of our Metropolis. Of a third lad it was reported that he was about to enter college for theological training, in the hope of proving an able preacher of the Gospel.

Mr. EDWARD MERRY gave some account of the educational and training work in connection with the Home. It was pleasing to hear him say that a real work of grace is at the present time in progress among the little ones. A WORKING MAN in the audience having urged the boys not to be afraid of work, nor ashamed of the Lord Jesus Christ, Mr. R. PATON gave the children some sound spiritual counsel. Addressing the public, he intimated that some years ago, before a similar party, he told the little ones of a good servant of God named John Thompson, adding, "Who knows there may not be a John Thompson among you children?" Strange as it might seem, there was among that party a boy named John Thompson, and to-day he is doing a worthy part, preaching the Gospel of Christ in Canada. Earnest prayers went up to the God of all grace to take the children safely to the Dominion across the water, and bless them there.

MR. W. J. ORSMAN, Hon. Superintendent of the Hoxton Costers' Mission, has returned from a trip to Algeria, feeling better for the change of air and rest. He fears that the benefit is only temporary, and regrets his stay was not prolonged. The journey outwards was marred by a dreadful storm, which nearly shipwrecked the passengers, in the Mediterranean Sea.

PROPORTIONATE GIVING.—Amongst the May Meetings which took place last week there was one of a very unpretentious character, which was held at St. Jude's Vicarage, Kensal Green. It was composed of a few of the members of the Proportionate Giving Union, who met to discuss the desirableness of taking steps for the extension of the Union, which has hitherto been under the sole management of its founder. A council and committee were appointed. The object of the Union is to extend the practice of proportionate giving amongst the various branches of the Christian Church.

MESSRS. HYDE AND STEVENSON.

THESE evangelists from Mr. Moody's Northfield College are now in the south of Ireland. The need of the smaller towns has been laid upon their hearts. They have gone uninvited, and at their own charges are going from town to town. God has heard and answered prayer; the people listen willingly and attentively to the Gospel message, many of them for the first time.

The evangelists are now holding a mission in Carlow; thence they proceed to Tullow, and so on, as the Lord may direct. The singing of Mr. Stevenson attracts all classes and prepares the way for the preaching of Mr. Hyde. Will our readers pray that God would signally bless the effort. Letters for the evangelists may be addressed, Y.M.C.A., Lower Abbey-street, Dublin.

RAILWAY WORK IN SCOTLAND.

THE annual conference and meetings in connection with the Railway Mission in Scotland took place at Glasgow, on Saturday and Sunday, April 27 and 28, and proved exceedingly interesting and successful. On Saturday afternoon a meeting of delegates from various branches of the Mission throughout the country was held at the Christian Institute, and was presided over by Mr. R. NIXON, London secretary. Encouraging reports were received from different places, that from Edinburgh being especially interesting. A new iron hall was built there a few months ago, and has already been the birthplace of many souls.

In the evening, a large meeting was held, when the chair was taken by PROVOST COLVILLE, the hall was crowded by railway men and their wives. Interesting and stirring addresses were delivered by several friends of the Mission, including Rev. William Ross, Rev. John Robertson, Mr. John Wilson, M.P., Mr. R. B. Stewart, of Stirling, Mr. Nixon, and Railway men. On Sunday a large mass open-air meeting was held on Glasgow-green, led by Mr. Nixon. It lasted, without intermission, for three hours, during which about forty railway men gave testimonies to the vast crowd gathered around, and on Tuesday evening the Tent Hall in James Morrison-street was crowded with 2500 people, to hear an earnest address from Rev. John Robertson.

The various meetings proved seasons of refreshing to all present, and must have a stimulating and rousing effect on railway workers in Scotland.

CRUELTY TO CHILDREN. — Everyone is familiar with the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, and its great services to the world it seeks to protect. Without one bit of jealousy of that institution, or any other feeling than one of pain at the thought of its suffering to the extent of a single shilling in the interests of our own society for the benefit of children, it is with restless anxiety that we look to occupying the same position in the esteem of the good, and the same position in the dread of the bad; and, with adequate resources, it must come. It is natural, it is surely inevitable that the wrongs of anguished babies should be redressed, at least, as freely and as universally as are the wrongs of suffering dogs. —The Child's Guardian.

HOUSE OF REST, KILBURN.—At the all-day meeting, last Friday, there were frequent notes of praise for answers to prayers offered at previous meetings. A short address was given in the morning by Miss Mason, on 1 Sam. xxiii. 1—14, showing the contrast between Saul's calculations and their results (7—14), and David's action of seeking counsel of God at every step of the way. In the afternoon Mr. Wilkinson, of the Mildmay Mission to the Jews, descanted in his usual happy and profitable way, on the theme ever nearest his heart. Dr. Miller, in the evening, brought very vividly before the large audience the importance of the exhortation in Eph. v. 18: "Be filled with the Spirit." The testimonies given at the close of the address demonstrate the intense interest which this subject always excites among the Lord's people.

THE PRESBYTERIAN SYNOD.

THIS august Church Court held it annual sittings last week in Regent-square Church. The meetings received a fairly large share of public attention, though there was no very burning topic down for discussion. The sermon by Dr. Dykes, the retiring Moderator, and the address by Dr. Macleod, of Birkenhead, the new Moderator, were weighty and well-considered, but do not call for very special remark. Dr. Macleod maintained that the spiritual influences of the sixteenth century Reformation are still at work. A little breeze was caused by the debate on the new Confession of theological belief that has been in the mint for the past five or six years; as there were some active opposers of its immediate adoption, it was shelved again for another year's consideration.

One of the most interesting of the Synod gatherings was that of the Home and Foreign Missions. As to the latter, the Presbyterians appear to have kept out of the current of contemporary criticism. There were reports from India, China, Singapore, &c., and these had in them a fair admixture of light and shade.

Rev. J. McNeill was the leading speaker on the subject of Home Missions, and he held the interested attention of the Fathers and Brethren. The more he saw of London's misery the more he seemed to hear God saying to him, How can you preach for forty-five minutes from my Word and not come up against the sweater? Their preaching should have a direct reference to that word Righteousness. Temperance entered largely into the home mission problem, and on this point, as usual, Mr. McNeill was very thoroughgoing. He favoured unfermented wine at the Communion, for their Band of Hope children often received their first taste of alcohol at the Lord's Table.

A reception at the Mansion House one evening afforded a new and welcome break in the programme of church legislation, and showed that Presbyterianism in England has fully regained its social status.

PARIS EXHIBITION.—The Times' correspondent, in describing the opening ceremonies on Monday, remarks on the absence of any religious observance. He thinks that if the clergy had been present to invoke a blessing on the Exhibition the ceremonial would have been much more impressive and less prosaic.

STRANGERS' REST, RATCLIFF HIGHWAY.—The usual monthly meeting for workers was held on Friday evening. An address was given by Rev. Marcus Rainsford, Jun., on Rom. vii. 24, 25. Mr. Reginald Radcliffe also gave an address, which was followed by a season of prayer. Mr. J. T. Isaac, hon. secretary, said helpers are much wanted who can speak to the Swedish and Norwegian sailors.

MR. F. S. ARNOT'S MISSION TO CENTRAL AFRICA.—A meeting in token of the approaching departure of Mr. T. H. Morris, Dr. Walter Fisher, and others, was held on Thursday last in Hampstead Vestry, Mr. J. E. Mathieson presiding. The proceedings were highly stimulating, and earnest prayers went up to God to bless the workers and make them a great blessing in the Dark Continent. Explaining his own plans, Mr. Morris said that, on account of his family, he intends stopping at Nana Kandunda, and not to push on to the wilder country of the Garenganze. Dr. Fisher told with delight the story of his way being opened to go to Central Africa as a medical missionary. Mr. Eugene Stock gave an interesting address on the rapid growth of missions in the interior of the Continent; being followed by Mr. Reginald Radcliffe, who insisted that the churches need to be aroused to a sense of their great duty in regard to the work of evangelising the world.

Rev. W. Ross, of Glasgow, in a powerful temperance tract, "Barabbas or the Christ?" says that out of 2272 visits made to one public-house in one day, more than one-half were young men between sixteen and thirty years of age.

Blankenburg, Schwarzathal.—The annual Conference for the Deepening of Spiritual Life will take place here on July 2—5. Dr. F. W. Baedeker will preside, and the presence of English friends interested in evangelistic work in Germany is much desired.

A. VON WELING.

Evangelistic Notes.

Mr. E. J. Parker has concluded a ten days' mission at Chesterton, Cambridge, it has been a time of sowing and reaping.

Mr. Sydney Black has closed the Gospel services held in the Chelsea Town Hall on Sunday evenings for the last eight months.

Dr. L. W. Munhall, by latest accounts, was evangelising at Macon, Georgia, with great audiences, and the Spirit of God energising the preacher.

Miss Smith and Miss Bax have held a Gospel Mission at Culeavey, near Hillsborough, co. Down. The results were cheering, some being found each night in the inquiry-room. A considerable number of backsliders have also been restored, and the Christians have been much encouraged.

Mr. Wm. Forbes conducted a seven days' Gospel Temperance Mission last week at the Friends' Meeting-house, Uxbridge. Each afternoon there was a meeting for prayer which was well attended. The meetings in the evening were very much appreciated and the interest well maintained throughout.

Torquay.—An Evangelisation Society worker has held meetings in the Room at St. Marychurch with which the untiring efforts of the late Mr. Gosse were largely identified. Much blessing has resulted. On Sunday last Lord Radstock addressed a crowded meeting on "Love and Unity from the Presence of the Lord."

Hadleigh, Suffolk.—Mr. and Mrs. Evens have concluded a successful series of services in this town. A special feature of the mission was the sweet singing of the Gospel by Mrs. Evens. Many, both old and young, found their way into the inquiry-rooms, and not only here the "lost" found, but Christians generally received a season of true refreshing from the presence of the Lord.

Messrs. Crossley and Hunter, the Canadian evangelists, have been the leading workers in a genuine spiritual awakening in Peterborough, Ont. The local papers state that over a thousand persons have professed conversion during the six weeks' services. At the closing meeting a number of ministers bore testimony to the reality of the work, and bade the evangelists God-speed. The ministers of the town arranged to continue the special meetings when the two visitors had departed for Woodstock.

The Southern Freedmen.—I am again home from the winter's work in the Southern States among the Freedmen, and am glad to report a prosperous time. I visited Louisville (Ky.), Sherwood (Tenn.), Fisk University, Nashville. Florence, Athens (Ala), Baton Rouge, New Orleans (La.), Mobile, Birmingham, and Montgomery (Ala.), where I held revival services. There were some remarkable cases of conversion. I hope to return about the first week in October, and would ask for the continued prayers of your readers. JAMES WHARTON.

Barrow-in-Furness.

Village Home for Girls, Ilford.—I write with much thankfulness to record a very gracious work of God amongst our girls at the Village Home during the mission held here in the month of April by Messrs. Middleton and Hogben. From the first it was evident that the power of the Holy Spirit was working with our brethren. Through their earnest, loving presentation of the Gospel a very large number of our girls have been, so far as we can judge, truly converted. Our Christian workers have also experienced much help and blessing from the Bible-readings, and we have great cause to praise God for bringing them amongst us. J. W. GODFREY, Governor.

Mr. J. C. Rainey has been having a good time at Aldershot amongst soldiers, officers, and their families. This is the second visit he has paid to the camp during the last few months, and on each occasion great blessing has resulted. At the close of the mission Mr. Rainey will return to his home at Paignton, South Devon, to prepare for summer work there, where he has a very attractive and commodious hall, with a membership of 100 persons, and as many children in the Sabbath-school. In the summer tent and village work is organised, and a very strong feature is the branch of the Children's Special Service Mission, the sands of Paignton being peculiarly suited for sea-side services. Mr. Rainey especially hopes that a good company of Christians will make Paignton their holiday resort in the ensuing summer, and co-operate with him in this work.

Dakota.—A religious awakening has been experienced in the little Dakota town of De Smet. Between forty and fifty, principally young people, have professed saving faith in Christ. The tracts I received through the readers of THE CHRISTIAN have been much appreciated, and I believe will result in great good. I have just taken another county to canvass for the American Bible Society, and should be glad to receive a further supply of tracts. I meet with many interesting incidents in connection with my house-to-house visitation.

HERBERT GREGORY.

De Smet, Kingsbury Co., Dakota, U.S.A.

Cleveland Hall.—Mr. Nix conducted the opening service at Cleveland Hall, W., on Sunday evening last. The hall was full, and many were refused admittance. The address was based upon the text, "Now is come salvation." He referred to the fact that the devil of scepticism had reigned in that hall, and afterwards the man of pleasure, and the demon of lust, but these brought misery and wretchedness. Now, said he, salvation is come to the house, and this was subsequently proved by the fact that at the close about thirty men and women sought and professed to find the Saviour. One of the first was an atheist, who had attended the hall during the time when it was used by the infidel party.

Mr. Leonard Weaver purposes visiting the hiring fairs in Herefordshire with the Bible-carriage.

Church Parochial Mission Society.—The following missions have been arranged for the month of May. It is hoped they will be made a subject of prayer by our readers:—Rev. W. Hay Aitken: May 12 to 26, St. Peter's Church, Paddington. Rev. Canon Atherton: May 11 to 20, Fremington, N. Devon. Rev. A. R. D'Arcy: May 20 to 28, Great Stainton, Durham. Rev. W. Haslam: May 24 to June 3, Old Radford, Nottingham. Rev. J. H. Haslam: to May 13, Mitcham, Surrey. Mr. Swann Hurrell: May 19 to 27, St. Mary's, Hornsey-rise, N. Rev. R. D. Monro: May 18 to 22, Emmanuel Church, Weston-super-Mare. Rev. Dr. Morris: to May 13, Leake, Boston. Rev. F. E. Rogers: May 18 to 28, All Hallows', Bromley-by-Bow, E. Rev. J. Stevens: May 11 to 23, St. James's, Jersey.

THE LONG-LANE MISSION.

CROSSBY-ROW CHAPEL, in the Borough, built in 1764 by John Wesley, and lately occupied by the Welsh Presbyterian Church, has been secured by the Long-lane Mission, associated with the London City Mission, for use as a mission-hall; the premises previously occupied in Long-lane having become too small for the audiences gathered by the energetic missionary, Mr. W. Baker.

The opening meeting was held on Wednesday, last week, and the report presented showed that the enlargement had become absolutely necessary owing to the overcrowding; also that the work of the Mission had been very specially blessed "in teaching the outcasts of society (for the district is one of the poorest) that Christianity opens, even to them, a path of virtue, along which they, too, may travel and reach a higher life." Nearly sixty of the dwellers in the courts recently accompanied the missionary to communion at St. George's Church, while many are members of Mr. Spurgeon's Tabernacle and other places of worship. To those who know the district, these facts are very significant.

THE CHRISTIAN HARBOUR LIGHTS.—A most blessed season was spent at the monthly muster of the above at the Seamen's Chapel, London Dock, E., on Thursday last, under the presidency of Mr. George Lampard. Many seamen bore witness to the safety and blessedness of the Christian life, and urged their shipmates to put their whole heart's trust in Jesus. During the evening, Rev. G. J. Hill, on behalf of the workers at this Institution, presented a beautifully bound copy of the Teacher's Bible, with suitable inscription, to Mr. R. W. Peters, who, ever since his conversion at this chapel, seven years ago, has been one of the most useful and energetic workers.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

Rev. James Hind, of Queen's College, Cambridge, curate of All Souls', Langham-place, W., has been accepted by the C.M.S. for missionary work. Mr. Hind is the second curate from All Souls', Langham-place, who has, in little more than two years, offered himself for work in the foreign mission field.

Rev. S. A. Selwyn, a son of the late Bishop Selwyn, of Melanesia, is a hard-working and successful clergyman. He is vicar of St. James's, Hatcham, a church that attained an unenviable notoriety some years ago in connection with Ritualism. Mr. Selwyn has built two mission-halls, and he and two curates like-minded with himself keep these and the parish church crowded. Every Sunday they have ten services.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

John T. Dorland earnestly invites young men to meet him at London Yearly Meeting on May 22.

A branch of the Missionary Helpers' Union was recently started in Adelaide, and now another has just been opened at Rockhampton, Queensland.

Dublin Yearly Meeting opened on Wednesday, May 1. The meetings for worship were very solid and deeply instructive times. John T. Dorland held meetings with young men, as well as Bible-readings for all. George Gillett dealt with "The Armed Peace of Europe," in a meeting at the Centenary Methodist Church, on Wednesday, May 1; and also on Thursday evening at Eustace-street Meeting-house; while eloquent denunciation of the opium traffic, in the splendid meeting on Thursday, stirred many hearts. Not only Geo. Gillett and John Taylor, of London, but local Friends had excellent Gospel service in the meeting. The morning prayer-meeting is very helpful; and Rebecca Grubb had arranged for a children's meeting. "The meetings have been seasons of blessing and power, and despite the political unrest, and the tried condition of some of the members, the Society of Friends is filling a useful place, and doing a good work in this island."

PRESBYTERIAN.

The Committee of the English Synod have secured another missionary for China in the person of Mr. Duncan Ferguson, a Free Churchman of Greenock.

Revs. Jas. Wells and Alex. Andrew, of Glasgow, and Rev. Jas. Spence, of Galashiel, are among those appointed to officiate at Continental stations during the summer.

The bi-monthly Gaelic service will be held in Crown-court Church, Covent-garden, W.C., on Sunday afternoon next, when Rev. Peter Macdonald, of the Free Gaelic Church, Edinburgh, is to preach.

Rev. J. A. B. Cook, of the English Presbyterian Mission, who returned from the East almost hopelessly invalided, has so thoroughly recovered that it is fully expected he will be able to return to Singapore in the autumn.

English Presbyterian missionaries and their wives at Swatow, numbering seven in all, had a very narrow escape from drowning recently by a boat becoming swamped. Mrs. Gibson, while struggling in the water, lost hold of her infant, and it entirely disappeared. The mother, however, felt about in the muddy water until she found the little one.

The Open-air and Evangelistic Committee of the London Presbytery, North, are making a new departure in evangelistic work. In order to inaugurate the open-air services in connection with the various Presbyterian churches, united open-air May meeting services are about to beheld in the public parks. The first of this series was held in Regent's-park, at the bandstand, on Sunday afternoon, when Rev. Dr. Monro Gibson presided, and powerful addresses were delivered by Revs. John McNeill and Duncan Sillars.

BAPTIST.

A new mission-room in connection with the Bristol Baptist Itinerant Society has been opened at Littleton, near Winford.

Rev. E. G. Gange, of Bristol, is mentioned as the probable successor of Rev. Dr. Maclaren in the pastorate of Union Chapel, Manchester.

Rev. T. Philpot, of Burwell, baptized six persons in the river on Easter Sunday, in the presence of about 1500 persons, to whom he delivered an address from a boat prior to the ceremony.

In his magazine notes for the present month, Mr. Spurgeon says:—"The pastor has been sitting at the Tabernacle every Tuesday to see those who wished to confess the Lord Christ, and a large addition has been made to the church each month. The two months have yielded 142 who have been actually enrolled, besides others who are waiting till they can come and receive the right hand of fellowship. This number is equal to many a church."

The work at Regent's Park Chapel (writes Rev. F. B. Meyer) has been very encouraging, and it is very seldom that the evening prayer-meeting does not witness several decisions for Christ. We are still studying the Epistle to the Hebrews in the morning, and are finishing the course of sermons on the Book of Daniel at night. We would gladly bear our testimony to the value of systematic exposition. The habit secures freshness and variety, and leads to unexplored portions of the Bible.

On Sunday week a Baptist movement at Harlesden was formally inaugurated by services in the Willesden High School, conducted in the morning by Rev. G. D. Hooper, of Hendon, and in the evening by Rev. W. Stott, who preached powerfully on "The precious blood of Christ." Both services were well attended. In the morning Colonel Griffin, president of the London Baptist Association, was present, and spoke a few words of encouragement.

SALVATION ARMY.

The Army have celebrated the ninth anniversary of their formation as a corps in Aberdeen. Interesting details were given regarding the work. A "Drunkards' Rescue Brigade" is to be established.

METHODIST.

Two Bible Christian ministers have been labouring at Blackburn for about nine months, and have received much encouragement in their work. Nearly one hundred persons have been admitted as members of the newly-formed Society.

The Primitive Methodists are bestirring themselves to put forth some extra efforts on behalf of London's masses. The two London "districts" are united in a strong appeal to the approaching Conference for a really earnest and connexional effort to be made to develop and extend work in the metropolis.

Since the beginning of the year a gracious work has been going on at Epworth, the birthplace of the Wesleys. Mr. J. Gledhill commenced a series of missionary services on January 6, which have been greatly blessed of God. At Gunthorpe, a village with only twenty-seven occupied houses and seven members in society, forty people, mostly adults, came out as penitents, and the entire place was moved. Mr. T. Langton, of Malton, was also engaged to conduct special services in seven places, and the results have been real and durable.

CONGREGATIONAL.

Rev. Dr. Gwynne Jones, secretary of the Freedmen's Mission Aid Society, London, has undertaken the pastorate of the English church at Langharne, South Wales.

Rev. William Marshall, of the Cambridge Heath Congregational Church, has resigned the pastorate through ill-health, and has taken farewell of his congregation.

The church at Bridport has closed a series of four months' evangelistic services. Each service, which was limited to one hour, was held in the chapel schoolroom at the close of the ordinary Sunday evening service. The address was given by the minister, Rev. W. J. Bain.

A new chapel at Tylehurst, Berkshire, which has been built by the Broad-street Church, Reading, to which it is affiliated, has been opened. The chapel accommodates about 300, and will be used both for evangelistic purposes and a Sunday-school. The village of Tylehurst has been an out-station, worked for nearly 100 years by the deacons and members of Broad-street Chapel, with occasional visits from the pastor.

The forty-ninth anniversary of the Robin Hood's Bay, Scarborough, Congregational Church, has been celebrated under very encouraging circumstances. Compelled by persecution to erect schoolrooms, and refused even waste land by both the landlords, who between them own all the unoccupied space near the village, they were obliged to purchase house property, which made an addition of about £50 in the estimated cost. God had again fulfilled his promises, and the future was very bright before them.

NOTES FROM IRELAND.

A City Mission is to be formed in Belfast under Methodist auspices.

Mission services have been conducted in Lurgan during the past fortnight by Messrs. Byers and Davidson, students of the Methodist College, Belfast.

During the past week Mr. and Mrs. Caldwell, American evangelists, have been holding meetings, which have been attended with great spiritual blessing, in the Methodist Church, Parsonstown.

Rev. Dr. Hamilton, Presbyterian minister of York-street, Belfast, and Editor of The Witness, has been appointed president of Queen's College, Belfast, as successor to the late Rev. Dr. Porter.

Pastor Theodore Monod (of Paris) during last week addressed several meetings in Dublin on the subject of the deepening of spiritual life. He had the support of a large number of leading evangelical clergyman.

For the past few months a good work, conducted on undenominational lines, has been going on in Monaghan, where through the instrumentality of Revs. Messrs. Grubb, Rutledge, and others, many have professed to give themselves to Christ.

The Sunday-school Society for Ireland is doing an excellent work. During the past year gratuitous assistance was afforded to 361 schools, and 320 schools were supplied with Reference Bibles and other requisites. The income of the Society was nearly £2350.

Miss Smith and Miss Bax have during the past fortnight been conducting evangelistic meetings in the Methodist Church, Stewartstown, and such has been the interest created that members have had to go away on various occasions for want of room. Moreover, several have professed to have decided for Christ.

NOTES FROM SCOTLAND.

Glasgow has 125,000 human beings living in single apartment dwellings. There is need of radical reforms, as well as praying lips.

Mr. M. B. Nairn, of Kirkcaldy, has granted a site of the value of £500 to the Y.M.C.A. of that town for their proposed new buildings.

It is stated that a "University Settlement" is to be established on an evangelical basis among the poor of Glasgow by the students of the University.

Messrs. Marshall and Maclean, U.P. Synod evangelists, are conducting Gospel services in the Govan U.P. Church. Mr. Marshall's previous visits to Govan have been productive of great good.

Rev. R. Lawson, of the Established Church, Maybole, is likely to stir among the Ayrshire churches a quickened interest in India and its missions. Already he has begun to lecture on his recent tour in the East.

There has of late been much spiritual activity in Leith. Messrs. Walker and Steedman have succeeded wonderfully in the fishing and catching of men. Meetings for dock-labourers and their class have been conspicuously successful.

Rev. Fergus Ferguson, Queen's Park, by Glasgow, will receive £500 and a three months' holiday to celebrate his semi-jubilee as a minister. Mr. Whillas, of Matherwell, and Mr. Murison, late of Glasgow, now of Stenness, Orkney, each were lately gifted with £100 by their congregations.

A public meeting was held in the Christian Institute, Aberdeen, last week, to memorialise Her Majesty's Government regarding the critical condition of British missionary and commercial enterprise in Nyassa Land, Central Africa, in consequence of Portuguese aggression. It was decided to send a deputation to London to lay the views of the meeting before the Prime Minister.

During the past winter the two Established Churches, the Free Church and the United Presbyterian Church, of Girvan, have combined in a united evening service, held alternately in the different churches, and conducted in turn by the ministers of the several congregations. These harmonious services were brought to a close on Sunday week by a service of praise in the parish church, in which all the ministers and the choirs of the four churches took part.

FALLEN ASLEEP.

At Kingstown, Rev. Jas. Adams, late rector of Kilbride, Castlecor, aged 85.—At Dublin, Rev. Thos. Tomlinson, for twenty-two years incumbent of St. James', Dublin.—Rev. George Gordon Macleod, a Free Church of Scotland minister, well known throughout the North and West Highlands.—Rev. Robert Davies, for twenty-three years pastor of the Welsh Church at Shrewsbury.—Rev. Nathan Rouse, Wesleyan minister, Ripley.—Rev. John Morris, late pastor of the Welsh Calvinistic Methodist Church at Gronant, Flintshire.—Rev. Reginald Yonge, senior incumbent of St. Paul's Church, Liverpool.—Rev. John Brame, rector of St. Peter's, Manchester.

Aged Pilgrims' Asylum, Hazelville-road, Hornsey Rise, N.—The annual sale of useful and fancy articles is to be held on the day of the anniversary, Friday, July 5. Contributions of ladies' work, especially useful articles, needed in the home circle, will be thankfully received at the Asylum, and at the Society's office, 83, Finsbury-pavement, E.C. Parcels, &c., and all communications, should be addressed to Mr. W. Jackson, Asylums' secretary.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, MAY 12.—Leviticus XXVI.

THIS chapter contains an epitome of Israel's future history. First, we are reminded of their failure to obtain the blessings promised to obedience (1—13); but the fulfilment of this part of the chapter may be looked for hereafter, when the nation is restored and converted. Secondly, of their successive downward steps of sin and rebellion, culminating in the horrors of the siege (29), and consequent desolation (32), and dispersion among the nations (33).

Mark five successive warnings ("if ye will not") in vv. 14, 18, 21, 23, 27, each followed by a threat of increased punishments. These are: (1) Deliverance into the hands of their enemies, (2) Scarcity, (3) Wild Beasts, (4) Pestilence and Famine, (5) Horrors of Siege and Desolation, followed by sharp distress in their dispersion. The Book of Judges illustrates the first, and the destruction of Jerusalem by Titus the last of these judgments.

There is a remarkable expression used in ver. 41, and again in ver. 43: "Accept of the punishment of their iniquity." It might be more literally rendered, "Accept their guilt," as though God's controversy with them was as to their owning and accepting their true position as guilty in his sight. We see them thus in Zech. xii. 10, accepting their guilt, especially as to having "with wicked hands crucified and slain" the Son of God. This will be the prelude to their blessing.

The last words of the chapter seem intended to close the book, the next chapter being afterwards added as supplemental. It sums up all the previous "statutes, judgments, and laws" which the Lord made between Him and the children of Israel in Mount Sinai "by the hand of Moses." Is it not to this that St. Paul refers (Gal. iii. 19), when he uses the very phrase "in (or, by, R.V.) the hand of a mediator"? If so, the assertion here of there being two parties to the covenant "between Him and the children of Israel" suggested St. Paul's comment: a "mediator is not a mediator of one, but God is one," i.e., the Abrahamic covenant was unconditional, a covenant of gift involving but one party—the giver. The law, on the other hand, is a covenant of works, and the failure of one party to the covenant is the failure of the whole. Thank God, believers in Jesus are "not under law, but under grace."

MONDAY, MAY 13.—Leviticus XXVII.

The redemption by money payment of persons, or things, which had been consecrated by vow to the Lord, forms the subject of this chapter. As to vows in general, see Deut. xxiii. 21.

"The vow of a person was perhaps most frequently made in cases of illness or danger. A man might dedicate himself, his wife, his child, or his bond-servant on condition of recovery or deliverance."—Sp. Com.

In viewing the valuation of a person according to age (3—7), one cannot but think of Him "whom they of the children of Israel did value" (Matt. xxvii. 9), and whose value, viewed only as a man according to his age, (3) would have been fifty shekels; but He says, "they weighed for my price thirty pieces of silver." Well might He add: "A goodly price that I was prised at of them" (Zech. xi. 13).

Things that belonged to the Lord were not to be dedicated to Him by vows, for they were his already (26). We should not as Christians dedicate by vow ourselves or our services to the Lord, for we are his already: "Ye are not your own, for ye are bought with a price, therefore, glorify God in your body."

The word rendered "devoted thing" (ver. 28) is mostly applied to persons doomed to death as the inhabitants of Canaan—God's judgment for their wickedness—or property devoted to destruction as under a ban or curse; such could not be redeemed. A practical application of this principle might, perhaps, lead Christians to destroy things that have been a snare to them rather than, as the saying is, sell them for charity." The Word of God records with approbation the destruction rather than the sale of books of the value of 50,000 pieces of silver, and adds: "So mightily grew the Word of God and prevailed" (Acts xix. 20).

THE BOOK OF NUMBERS.

THIS BOOK is so called, because it records the numberings of the people of Israel, of which the first was made at Sinai, in the beginning of the second year after their departure from Egypt, and the second, thirty-eight years afterwards, just before their entrance into Canaan (i.—vi. and xxvi.). The Book is therefore the divinely inspired history of the wanderings of the Israelites in the wilderness for the interval between these two episodes, a period of some thirty-eight years and ten months. It is the Book of the Wilderness, full of the story of journeyings, service, and all the vicissitudes of wilderness life. It is therefore a most valuable vade mecum for the Church in her journey through the wilderness world to the true home and rest of God (1 Cor. x. 1—11).

The divisions of the Book are as follow:—

(1) The first numbering of the Israelites (i.—iv.).

(2) The right ordering of the camp and march (v.—x.).

(3) The journey from Sinai to the borders of Canaan (x.—xiv.).

(4) The outlines of the history between the turning back at the borders of Canaan, and their return to the same spot after thirty-seven years (xv.—xix.).

(5) The first victories over the people of Canaan (xx.—xxxvi.).

TUESDAY, MAY 14.—Numbers I.

Thirteen months had elapsed since the Exodus. About one month had been occupied with the journey, and the rest of the period spent over the events recorded in the two previous books. Before starting on the march, their Divine Leader commissioned Moses and Aaron to take a census of the people. This census had already been incidentally mentioned (Exod. xxxviii. 26); but it is now described in detail, to show the relative strength of the tribes.

The figures are given in fifties; it is probable, therefore, that all less numbers are omitted. And the men of twenty years old and upwards were alone counted, who were able to go forth to war; whilst the Levites were excluded (47, 48). But notwithstanding these deductions, the total number amounted to 603,550 (46). Including, therefore, the Levites, the women and children, the whole population, according to the usual average, must have amounted to 2,400,000—a prodigious host, living always on the bounty of God, who dwelt in the midst of them as Father and King, sustaining and controlling them.

Every child of God should be able to go forth to war against the evil that assails the inner life, and the evil that is in the world (Eph. vi. 10—17, and 2 Tim. iv. 7). But before doing so we should be able to tell our pedigree (18). We must be able to appropriate the repeated we know of the first Epistle of John. The witness of the Spirit will ever accompany simple faith in Jesus Christ (Rom. viii. 15).

The Levites were not included, because in a very special manner they were God's, having taken the place of the firstborn of Israel. They were, therefore, typically, a dead and risen people, not available for the purposes of war, but of holy Tabernacle service.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 15.—Numbers II.

It was not enough for every man to be able to declare his pedigree; he must also know and pitch beside his standard. Hebrew writers say that the standards of the tribes were symbols borrowed from the prophetic blessing of Jacob, Judah's being a lion, Benjamin's a wolf, &c.; and that the ensigns or banners were distinguished by the same colours respectively as shone in the breastplate. We are not informed certainly on these points. It is enough that God was the promoter of order in the camp, and that every tribe, family, and individual knew exactly where to pitch around the central Tabernacle, where God dwelt as King. It must have been a fair spectacle, and we cannot wonder at Balaam's exclamation (Num. xxiv. 5, 6). The camp must have extended over an area of twelve square miles.

Judah, with two other tribes, Issachar and Zebulun, lay on the east of the Tabernacle, and took the lead in the march (3—9). Reuben, with Simeon and Gad, occupied the south, and followed (10—16). Then came the Levites, who encamped immediately before the Tabernacle, and who bore the most sacred possessions of the host (17). Ephraim, with Manasseh and Benjamin, occupied the south, and came next (18—24). Whilst Dan, with Asher and Naphtali, occupied the north, and brought up the rear (25—31).

What a fit emblem is all this of the unity of the Church of Christ in different positions, with varying emblems, but all part of the same great host circling around the invisible Lord and King. Let us not fret about our position therein, whether it be in the van or rear, but let us be only careful to be where God would have us be, doing every man his work (Mark xiii. 34).

THURSDAY, MAY 16.—Numbers III.

In this chapter the Levites are the theme. Aaron's family constituted the order of priesthood; the rest of the tribe performed the more laborious duties of ministering in and transporting the Tabernacle. The term bring near (6) is a sacrificial term, denoting the presentation of an offering to God (Lev. xvi. 9). The Levites were subordinate to the priests, who alone possessed the privilege of entering the holy place (9, 10).

The consecration of this tribe to the service of God was due to the special appointment of God. In memory of the last judgment on Egypt, from which the firstborn were redeemed through blood-shedding, the eldest son in every Jewish family was regarded as specially God's. But after the affair of the golden calf a change was made, and Levi was taken instead (12, 13). Is not this the position of every child of God? May not God rightfully employ about each of us the term mine (1 Cor. vi. 20); and may not we look up and say, "I am thine; save me"? We have been redeemed by the blood of the Lamb, that we might be God's, and minister to Him, caring for his own holy work in the world.

The Gershonites, as oldest, pitched westward of the Tabernacle, and had charge of all the hangings and curtains. The Kohathites, because Aaron belonged to that division of the tribe, pitched southward, and had charge of the sacred vessels. The Merarites pitched northward, and had charge of the boards and sockets, &c. It was enough for each to know that God had appointed their place and charge. Even the carrying of pins became honourable work when the bearer remembered that God had appointed it as his work.

All the firstborn who were over the numbers of Levi were redeemed by money (40). None of us would have had any right to live unless the blood of Jesus had redeemed us to God.

FRIDAY, MAY 17.—Numbers IV.

Thirty is the age of full maturity (3), hence it was the period of life at which John the Baptist and our Lord entered on their respective ministries.

The sacred vessels were hidden from the gaze of the people, whilst being carried on the march, by the rough covering of badgers' skins. Aaron and his sons covered them in the first instance, and then the Kohathites came to bear them. Badgers' skins were the universal covering, except in the case of the ark, which had a cloth wholly of blue over the coarser material, setting forth, doubtless, the heavenly character of the Lord Jesus. The table of shew bread had cloths of blue and scarlet, under the badger skins, whilst the golden candlestick and altar had only blue. The brazen altar was covered with "purple" instead of "blue" or "scarlet," because it prefigured the blood-shedding of the cross, which led to the royal enthronement of the Redeemer. There is a meaning in every word of God's appointments, hidden from the wise and prudent, but revealed to babes (Matt. xiii. 11). The greatest care was to be exercised in the performance of this work. Neglect might lead to death (17); and an inventory must be carefully kept (32). How careful should we be who bear the vessels of the Lord (Isa. lii. 11).

What a marvellous exchange all this was for Levi! Remember what old Jacob said of him (Gen. xlix.) But now, in consequence of one noble act (Exod. xxxii. 25—29), it seemed as if the whole destiny of the tribe were altered, and the curse was transformed into blessing (Deut. xxxiii. 8—11; Mal. ii. 4—6). Ah! how much depends on the response to the challenge, "Who is on the Lord's side?"

SATURDAY, MAY 18.—Numbers V.

Three topics occupy this chapter. (1) The removal of the unclean from the camp.—The reason is given in the announcement of God's indwelling (3). We may not judge each other's innermost thoughts, but directly there is anything manifestly evil in the life, we are called upon to exclude such a one from our fellowship. This is the clear teaching of 1 Cor. v. 12, 13. But should we not also put away all such evil things from our own hearts and lives? The exclusion of lepers has been acted on ever since.

(2) The law of restitution (5).—God looked not for confession to Himself only, but for confession to the injured party, and restitution with the addition of the fifth part. This law holds also for us (Matt. v. 24). We should carefully cultivate a tender conscience, exercising ourselves thereto (Acts xxiv. 16). There is a species of introspection, which is very harmful, but there is a self-judgment, a mercilessness to self, a habit of confession and restitution, which we do well to practise.

(3) The trial of jealousy (11).—This law strongly discouraged conjugal infidelity on the part of the wife, and protected her from hasty and groundless suspicion on the part of the husband. Holy water was water from the laver. Dust was an emblem of vileness and misery and contrition (Ps. xxii. 15). The fragile earthen vessel was afterwards destroyed. The whole of this awful ceremony, her position, her uncovered head, the bitter potion, the adjuration of the priest (19), all was calculated to make a deep impression. This, too, bears on us. God loves us unutterably, and is jealous of our love. If there has been any unfaithfulness on our part it must be thoroughly judged, we must be true in the inward parts to the great and faithful lover of souls (Ps. cxxxix. 1).

International S.S. Lessons.

Sunday Afternoon, May 19.

THE LORD'S SUPPER: MARK xiv. 12—26.
GOLDEN TEXT: LUKE xxii. 19.

IN this lesson the commemorative and the typical aspects of the Passover Feast are beautifully blended. The event of which it was the memorial can never lose its interest; but that which it foreshadowed is of infinitely greater importance. And the Old Testament Feast here shades off into that of the New Testament in celebration of that death by which our sins are put away. With what feelings must our Lord have eaten of the roasted Passover Lamb on that last night of his life! Before the next day shall close his blood will have been shed for the life of the world (John vi. 54).

We have no record of what Jesus did after his discourse on the Mount of Olives. He is supposed to have spent from Tuesday night to Thursday morning in retirement at Bethany. This lesson takes up the narrative again on Thursday—"The first day of unleavened bread, when they killed the Passover" (12). From Lev. xxiii. 5, 6, we learn that "the Lord's Passover" was on the fourteenth day of Nisan in the evening; and the seven days' Feast began on the fifteenth. On Thursday the fourteenth, therefore, the lamb was killed, and the Feast prepared; but at night when they were at the Feast the fifteenth had already commenced.

The Passover feast (12—17).—The "two disciples" (12) sent into the city were Peter and John (Luke xxii. 8). They had a strange commission, and one that required on their part the spirit of unquestioning obedience. But they "went forth, and found as He had said" (16). However strange his commands, it is always our highest wisdom to obey promptly. "The goodman of the house" (14) is not named, but was probably a disciple of Jesus, though not publicly declared. The demand, "Where is the guest chamber?" (14), appears stranger to us than to the man whose ideas of hospitality, especially during Passover week, would prepare him for it. But whether "the large upper room furnished and prepared" (15) was the result of a previous arrangement, or was known to the Saviour by his superhuman foresight, cannot be determined. "They made ready" (16).—They needed a lamb, which must be slain in the Temple (Deut. xvi. 5, 6), then roasted. And with this they needed unleavened bread, herbs, and wine.

The betrayal announced (18—21).—"They sat and did eat" (18).—Ellicott thus pictures the scene:—"Think of our Lord as reclining, not sitting, in the centre of the middle table, John next to Him, and leaning on his bosom (John xiii. 23), Peter probably on the other side, and the others sitting in an order corresponding, more or less closely, with the threefold division of the twelve into groups of four." The events at the supper were: the dispute of the disciples, perhaps about the places they were to occupy at the table (Luke xxii. 24); the foot-washing by which our Lord rebuked their strife (John xiii. 1—11). Then the meal went on "in silence, while the countenance of the Master betrayed the deep emotion which troubled his spirit" (John xiii. 21) before He announced the betrayal. "One of you" (18).—By not naming Judas He gave him an opportunity of repenting, while at the same time He roused the rest to a searching examination of themselves. The guilt of betraying Christ for thirty pieces of silver appears very awful; but it does not stand so much alone as to render the warning valueless to others. The disciples used it wisely: "Is it I?" (19). Each one suspected himself. It indicates how skilfully the traitor had acted his part, that none seemed to suspect him. The spirit that in self-distrust asks the question, "Is it I?" is the best safeguard against committing the sin. Judas only asked the question after all the others (Matt. xxvi. 25), and evidently not in the same spirit of sincerity. (In contrast with this spirit of conscious weakness, note the self-confidence expressed in ver. 27—31, and the sad result in ver. 50). "One that dippeth," &c. (20).—Compare John xiii. 22—36. Even in declaring who the traitor was our Lord observed a measure of secrecy. And in the solemn words of ver. 21 He seemed to be warning Judas still further of his awful doom. What a combination of majesty, of pity, and of sorrow the words contain! Even the act of Judas could only do to the Saviour what was "written of Him" (Acts i. 16, ii. 23), and without naming Judas the words expressed the severest condemnation of his guilt and the certainty of his awful doom. The same guilt and the same doom apply in measure to every man who prefers the gains of this world to the person of Christ.

The Lord's Supper (22—26).—How significantly this is connected with the betrayal. See Matt xvi., Luke xxii., and 1 Cor. xi. 23: "the same night in which He was betrayed," as though that were the prominent event He would keep in our mind, probably because the right observance of that ordinance is an excellent safeguard against the spirit of the traitor. To remember the death of Christ—its painfulness, its purpose, and the blessings we receive through it—is a means of grace to us.

The bread (22) and the wine (24) represent the body and the blood of Jesus Christ. It is not the beauty of his earthly life, nor the power of his life now in heaven, but the death of Christ which this supper sets forth. The bread broken points to the painfulness of the death (Isa. liii. 5); the words "for you" (1 Cor. xi. 24) declare the substitutionary character of his death; "remission of sins" (Matt. xxvi. 28) indicates the blessing his death brings to us; eating and drinking set forth our appropriation of his death as that upon which alone we rely for salvation; "this do in remembrance of Me" (1 Cor. xi. 24, 25) is the command to observe the ordinance, and expresses the purpose which the ordinance is intended to serve. It is essentially a memorial service. To use it as though it were a means of obtaining eternal life is a sad mistake.

But it is anticipatory as well (25). See also 1 Cor. xi. 26: "till He come." It connects the first with the second Advent. To observe it aright requires not only memory to recall the past with grateful praise, but hope that joyfully anticipates the future.

THE NEW CHURCH AT NORTHFIELD, Mass., erected largely through Mr. Moody's influence and just finished, is soon to be dedicated, and is to have for its pastor a Rev. Dr. Cook, of Chelsea, Mass. It has a seating capacity of about 1200, and is said to have cost 28,000 dollars.

MR. SPURGEON'S ECCLESIASTICAL POSITION.—Friends will have noticed the anxiety of the public press to put us into some ecclesiastical position which they can understand. To be the pastor of a church of Christ is enough for us; but it seems to them that we must join some one of the great religious communities; one day it is the Presbyterian, and the next the Episcopalian. Meanwhile, nothing has been said or done by us indicating any alteration in the position we have always held as to doctrine and church government. When we make a change, our friends will not need to learn it from the secular press: that when will not, probably, occur in this century, nor in the next. It does not yet dawn upon some minds that to quit a society like the Baptist Union involves no change in our position or sentiments. Baptist ministers are pastors of separate churches, which may associate with other churches, or cease to associate with them, as they judge best; but the minister and the church are not dependent upon the associations they may choose or decline. We are in fellowship with all the churches of our Lord Jesus which hold the truth, but have never entertained the thought of changing this way or that. Certainly we never dreamed of entering the Church of England.—Sword and Trowel.

"THE SECRET OF REST."

MATT. xi. 28, 29.

"REST! Give me rest, dear Master. From my way
Remove those things that try me day by day,
Those small annoyances, each heavy care
That sometimes seems too much for me to bear
With Christlike patience and humility.
O Master, give me fuller liberty!
Thou knowst I'd gladly live apart with Thee
But there are earthly ties that fetter me.
There are so many things to think about,
Small things, and yet, if they should be left out,
Someone must suffer. Only little things,
Poor service, which but little glory brings
To thy dear name. And I am wearied sore
Each day I only get perplexed the more.
Oh, give me rest, dear Master; set me free
To spend my life in greater work for Thee."

. . . . .

And Jesus heard my cry, and gave me rest;
Not as I prayed—I knew not what was best.
Not by removing from my lot all care,
Not by allowing me in grief no share,
Not by withholding all that grieved or vexed me,
Not by explaining all that had perplexed me,
Not by permitting me to take my ease,
And only do such things as I should please.
No; a rebellious child I was. He knew
That greater work for Him I could not do,
While in the "little things" I failed and fell.
O Jesus, Master, Thou hast loved me well,
In that Thou answeredst not my foolish prayer.
Thou knewst I could not rest me anywhere
While selfish ease I sought. And far from rest
I still had been, unsatisfied, unblest,
Hadst Thou but granted my unwise desire.
Instead, Thou showdst me a life far higher,
Where I might sweetly rest, and yet fulfil
That daily work which was for me thy will.
It was not service grand Thou gavest me,
Such as but few are given to do for Thee;
But, in the common things of daily life,
I proved how sweetly Thou couldst calm all strife,
And put an end to all the discontent
Which once my weary heart so sorely rent.
Thou gavest rest just in those very things
Which once my spirit chafed. And now it sings
A quiet song of joyful praise to Thee,
And does no longer wish to be set free [given,
From those dear bonds which thy blest hand has Since now it sees in them but steps to heaven.

COUNTRY AIR FOR POOR CHILDREN.—SIR,—I earnestly ask help towards a fund I am striving to collect for sending delicate children of the very poorest class for three weeks into the country, where they will enjoy the benefit of fresh air and good food. Parents who have no difficulty in sending their ailing little ones for change of air, can hardly imagine what it is to have eight children in a small two-roomed house in a stifling street, with two or three struggling into convalescence after measles, and no possibility of sending them away for a while. I promise that any help I may receive will be well appropriated for their benefit.

Faithfully yours, ROSE BENN.

OXFORD SUMMER MEETING FOR STUDENTS.—The University delegates have arranged a second meeting of University Extension and other students. The objects are to stimulate and direct systematic home-study by means of short courses of lectures; to supplement University Extension teaching by a brief period of residence and study in Oxford; and to afford opportunities for conference between teachers and others interested in education. The meeting will be divided into two parts; the first to begin on July 30, and last ten days, while the second will be devoted to three weeks' quiet study, commencing on August 10. The programme includes arrangements for the pleasures as well as the profit of students, who have already in considerable numbers secured tickets. For the sum of £1 10s. all the lectures may be attended. Intending students should lose no time in securing tickets. Circulars giving details as to terms may be had from Mr. W. A. S. Hewins, "Summer Meeting" Office, 35, Corn Market-street, Oxford. A special list of hotels and lodging-houses is to be published, giving the terms on which students may secure accommodation.

MUSIC HALLS.

By the Local Government Act the licensing of these demoralizing places of amusement passed into the hands of the County Councils.

Prompt, earnest, and united action from without is earnestly needed to support those Members of the London County Council who are exerting themselves to restrict and suppress the gross evils of these abominable places.

ON FRIDAY EVENING, the 17th instant, a Special Meeting, to which you are earnestly invited, will be held at 200, EUSTON ROAD, N.W., at 7 o'clock, to adopt a means of concerted action, on the lines as follow:—

1st. That licensed victuallers and vendors of strong drink ought not to be entrusted with music licenses.

2nd. That Working Men's, and other Clubs, where strong drinks are consumed, should be compelled to be licensed, as licensed victuallers, &c., are now.

Mr. A. MORDAUNT SMITH has kindly consented to act as Hon. Secretary to this movement. The attendance and personal co-operation of earnest Christians who desire to protect the young is solicited.

CONTINENTAL & FOREIGN NOTES.

A SUNDAY-SCHOOL UNION has been established in the Bombay Presidency.

DR. CLOUGH, the Baptist missionary at Ongole is reported to have baptized over one thousand adults since the new year began.

THE SLAVE TRADE.—Cardinal Lavigerie has convened an International Congress against the slave trade at Lucerne, to sit from August 3 to 10.

A DETERMINED ATTEMPT has been made by some immoral men in Barbados to reintroduce the repealed State-licensing of vice there.

PREACHING IN PARIS.—The Continental Committee of the Presbyterian Church is arranging to share in the conduct of Presbyterian services in Paris during the Exhibition.

ONE OF THE GREATEST HINDRANCES to the Gospel in Ceylon is said to be "the coquetting with Buddhism which has become fashionable among Europeans." Buddha's birthday is now a Government holiday in the island.

COLONEL PASCHKOFF has made an extended tour of Belgium and the North of France. With fellow workers he preached the Gospel in many places, while many tracts were distributed, and copies of the Holy Scriptures sold from the Bible-carriage.

EAST AFRICA.—Mr. Hooper, the missionary, has reached Zanzibar. The report of the death of Mr. Stokes is untrue. He was in a most critical situation, but he passed through the country safely, and is now on the Victoria Nyanza, arranging for communication by water with Uganda.

THE SABBATH IN FRANCE.—The Minister of the Interior of the French Republic has authorised an International Congress on the Sabbath question, to take place in September next in the Paris Exhibition buildings. The subject is to be treated only from social and health points of view, but the religious bearings will by no means be forgotten.

DR. CHURCHER is in urgent need of further help for the good work in which the Lord has planted him at Tangier. God has given to the Doctor and his fellow-workers a great vantage-ground in their struggle with the Mohammedanism of Morocco. It is important that there should be no halting in their endeavours to carry forward this good work.—Medical Missions.

GERMANY.—The jubilee of the introduction of Sunday-schools was recently celebrated. When Mr. Woodruff presented the novelty to the attention of the German Christians twenty-five years ago, he was vigorously opposed. To-day 45,000 children in Berlin alone attend Sunday-school, while in the empire at large hundreds of thousands enjoy the blessings of the institution.

JAPAN.—Miss C. T. Alexander, an American Presbyterian missionary in Japan, testifies not only to the multiplying of the churches in that country, but also to their growth in spirituality. The great need at present is for ladies to go out into the country as evangelists; and a Christian literature is wanted for women and children. Miss Alexander believes that Japan, which is already talking of sending missionaries to Corea, will be the progressive power in the East for many years.

WE HAVE SELDOM HEARD, says The Indian Witness, of a more striking illustration of the power of vital Christianity than is found in the news which reaches us of a great revival among the Boers of South Africa. It is not merely that a religious revival has taken place among them; the miracle reported is that the Boers have learned how to love the Zulus, and that the two races worship together and work in harmony. It is truly a miracle not only to make a Boer regard a Zulu or a Kafir as a man, but to love him as such, and join him in serving the common Father of all.

RELIGION IN SWITZERLAND.—The Federal census of December 1 last, recently made up, shows the religious profession of the population to be:—Protestants, 1,750,000; Roman Catholics, 1,200,000; Jews, 8300; of other or no forms of faith, 10,700. On the whole the Protestants increase in number more rapidly than the Romanists. The gradual depopulation of the country villages to the numerical advantage of the large towns is, however, a disquieting element in the situation, for it is in the large centres that the Romish Church mainly gathers strength.

REV. DR. E. G. THURBER, late of Syracuse, N.Y., is at work in his new field, and the opening of his ministry among Americans in Paris is most encouraging. The congregations have steadily increased, the Sunday-school is growing, and the various branches of church work are well sustained. Dr. Thurber has a large Bible-class of young men, and is laying out much work in other lines. He is deeply interested in the McAll Missions. The large number of Americans who will visit Paris during the Exposition will find the chapel in Rue de Berri an attractive and homelike place.—New York Evangelist.

PALESTINE.—A square tower, 210 ft. high, has just been erected upon the Mount of Olives, for the Greek Church. From the dome, which is reached by three flights of steps, an excellent view of the Mediterranean is afforded. Bells have been hung, and images of the saints fixed, but the great strategic value of the position is as remarkable as the ornamental effect of the structure. A missionary, who sends these facts to a Continental paper, says: "The spot which our Lord made holy by retiring thereto for reflection, is thus defiled by idolatrous practices. From this spot He ascended, and here his feet will stand when He returns. Then, when, in accordance with the word of prophecy, the mountain divides into two parts, this tower will, in all probability, sink in ruins into the valley below" (Zech. xiv. 4).

CHEFOO.—Dr. A. W. Douthwaite reports in China's Millions that at the hospital dispensary in Chefoo 5539 out-patients have been relieved, 217 surgical operations performed, and ninety-six in-patients treated and brought under spiritual influences. Not a few of them are believed to have accepted Christ as their Saviour. All this has been done at the small cost of £143, showing that medical missions can be conducted with great economy.

The Folkestone Tramps.—The good work begun among the tramps last year by Gipsy Smith still continues. There have been cases of blessing and rescue in the lodging-houses. But a separate hall is sadly needed in which to hold the meetings, where the people could be much more effectively dealt with than in the lodging-houses which are in connection with public-houses. Such a hall, belonging to the S.E.R. Company, is now available if £50 per annum could be guaranteed. Contributions may be sent to Mr. GAWIN KIRKHAM, 14, Duke-street, Adelphi, London, W.C.

CUCKOO CLOCK and WEATHER HOUSE (COMBINED).

A handsomely carved wood clock, 22in. in height, with ivory hands and figures, strikes the hours and half hours on a powerful wire gong Each time the clock strikes a charming little cuckoo pushes open a door at top of clock, and comes out, and cuckoos the hours and half hours, then retires, and the door closes after it. Above the clock is the Weather House, containing beautifully modelled figures of male and female peasants, 5in. high. The man comes out if about to be wet, and woman if fine We warrant these clocks to go for years, and for time-keeping qualities no better clock can be obtained at any price, while they are ornamental and fit to decorate a palace.

Packed in case free and sent to any address on receipt of 21/-.

The Evidences of Christianity;
Or, THE WRITTEN AND LIVING WORD OF GOD.
By ARTHUR T. PIERSON, D.D., of Philadelphia.

Tinted Covers, 2s. Cloth Boards, 2s. 6d.
Presentation Edition: Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, 3s. 6d.

"A handbook of Evidences of Christianity by which the author found his way out of the deep darkness of doubt into the full light of day; and found too that the Bible was the Book of God and Christ the Son of God. May it help many out of Doubting Castle!"
Methodist Times, Feb. 7, 1889.

"In this book the able author has met a great want, and laid a large class under obligation. It is too often the case that treatises on the Christian Evidences are so learned and scholastic that they are of use to students only. Here, however, is a book of such a plain, practical, common-sense stamp that it cannot fail to be highly popular."—Footsteps of Truth, March, 1889.

NERVOUS EXHAUSTION.

PULVERMACHER'S WORLD-FAMED GALVANIC BELTS, for the cure of NERVOUS EXHAUSTION and DEBILITY, have received Testimonials from three Physicians to Her Majesty the Queen and the leading Physicians of Nine London Hospitals, including Forty Members of the Royal College of Physicians of London.

The distressing symptoms of NERVOUS EXHAUSTION and DEBILITY are speedily removed by means of Pulvermacher's World-famed Galvanic Belts, which are so arranged as to convey a continuous electric current direct to the affected parts, gradually stimulating and strengthening all the nerves and muscles, and speedily arresting all symptoms of waste and decay.

Dr. C. HANDFIELD JONES, F.R.C.P., F.R.S., Physician to St. Mary's Hospital, says: "I am satisfied that Mr. PULVERMACHER is an honest and earnest labourer in the field of science, and I think he deserves to meet with every encouragement from the profession and scientific men."

Dr. H. A. ALLBUTT, M.R.C.P., 24, Park Square, Leeds, writes, October, 1888: "I always recommend with confidence Mr. PULVERMACHER'S BELTS. Ladies recovering from illness incidental to their sex will find these BELTS of vast assistance in restoring lost nerve power."

ST. JAQUES' TOWER, PARIS

LADIES OF ENGLAND

WHO have not yet honoured us with commands for patterns are respectfully invited to do so.

OUR May visit to the French Capital has just been made, and Ladies who desire to have a dress which shall be beau idéal will find this fait accompli by purchasing from us.

THE advantages we offer to English Ladies are threefold:—

1ST.—THE CERTAINTY OF OBTAINING MATERIALS THAT ARE WORN IN Le beau monde.

2ND.—THE EXCLUSIVE CHARACTER OF OUR COMMODITIES, MANY DESIGNS BEING CONFINED TO OURSELVES FOR GREAT BRITAIN; AND bon gré, mal gré, ENGLISH FIRMS CANNOT SUPPLY THEM.

3RD.—THE ASSURANCE THAT WE GIVE TO OUR PATRONS, OF THEIR BEING ABLE TO DO BETTER WITH US THAN DEALING DIRECT WITH THE HOUSES IN PARIS. Our knowledge of the prices ruling in the Parisian Boulevards, for identically the same goods as we are offering, enables us to say this sans peur et sans reproche, and but a slight acquaintance with the taxation attached to the French Capital, will make this easily understood; AND BY PAYING CARRIAGE ON ALL ORDERS, HOWEVER SMALL OR LARGE, WE NEATLY GIVE THE coup de grâce to our French Rivals.

LADIES OF ENGLAND,

WE are Specialists in FRENCH DRESS FABRICS, and our esprit de corps in laying before our Patrons the Choicest Productions obtainable, is á faire l'honneur aux chefs-d'œuvre de la Belle France.

A POSTCARD, letter, or telegram will receive prompt attention, and Ladies will be pleased to find among our Tomes d'Echantillon, many Novelties personally selected but a few days since in Paris.

ALL patterns are sent (on approval) post free, and all orders, small or large, are sent carriage paid.

NOTICE TO THE READERS OF "THE CHRISTIAN"
Who may be personally or relatively
INTERESTED in THIS MATTER.

MR. CONGREVE will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED in this Journal BEFORE, EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

THE FOLLOWING IS AN EXTRACT FROM A LETTER RECEIVED AT THE END OF THE YEAR FROM A VERY OLD PATIENT. I simply give it as an example of

PERMANENT CURE.

Mr. W. MANN, of 139, Hyde Park-road, LEEDS, says:—"In the early part of the year 1857 I got cold, which was followed by inflammation of the lungs. I called in the first physician then at Leeds. He blistered me severely, treated me for 5 months. Then he gave me to understand that I should get no better. I consulted another, who said I was in a decline, and if I had gone sooner he could have done something for me. Then hearing of you from the Gospel Standard, I obtained your book, and determined to place myself under your treatment. Accordingly I paid you a visit at Coombe Lodge, and was carefully examined by you. You said my lungs were congested, and I was in a very weak state, through long-continued illness and want of proper treatment. I fully carried out your iustructions as to medicine, diet, and regimen, and in three months I was well. I have not been troubled for 31 years. I ever have you in grateful remembrance."

This patient has recommended my treatment far and near.

NOTE. — Days of Consultation. — TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

THE

Scripture Readers' Society FOR IRELAND.

SPECIAL FUND.

IN consequence of the lamented decease of a munificent Supporter of the Society, and the reluctant withdrawal of the subscriptions of other friends in Ireland through reduced circumstances, the Committee are grieved to announce that this year's accounts have closed with a balance of £186 4s. due to the Treasurer.

The fact has been made known to a few friends, who have already most kindly promised assistance.

The work of the Society has never been more urgently needed or more highly valued than at the present time, and donations towards the Special Fund will be most gratefully received by the President, by any member of the Committee, or by the Secretary,

CAPTAIN J. KEARNEY WHITE.

The Christian.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give portrait and sketch of Rev. Burman Cassin, rector of St. George's, Southwark.

Some of the pictures in the Royal Academy Exhibition are offensive enough against decency; we regret that the burlesque imitations of them in Punch, by Mr. Harry Furniss, should accentuate and intensify their indelicacy, and suggest an impurity even where it was not intended in the original. We hope our contemporary is not going to lose its character; it used to be said that there was nothing in Punch to offend the delicacy of the most sensitive.

Foremost among the names of heroes will abide that of Joseph Damien de Venster (better known as Father Damien) who gave himself up to a loathsome and fatal disease that he might benefit the unhappy lepers of the Sandwich Islands.

Rev. Hugh B. Chapman, of St. Luke's, Camberwell, hon. sec. of the Damien Fund, writes to The Times to say—> that the "Damien Fund" will continue, since its need is unaffected by his death. At present some £60 remains in hand; and whenever it reaches the sum of £500, it shall be regularly forwarded to Father Damien's successor "for the benefit of the lepers under his charge, and totally irrespective of their creed."

Nothing could be more fitting, and it is to be hoped that the pledge here implied will be fulfilled.

Mr. Chapman also earnestly suggests, —what all must feel would be a worthy outcome of the death of Father Damien—

> a conference of experts on the subject of leprosy, to be held in Paris, London, or Christiania, in which last capital evidence of the disease is on the spot. Let the Powers interested in the question take prompt and quick action for the extirpation of this evil, and let the prayers of the devout take the form of personal labour to remedy existing abuses. For the last eighteen months a proposition, emanating from the Hawaiian Government, has been virtually pigeon-holed, and threatens to be forgotten. Forgive me if I try to take a humble advantage of the momentary romantic grief which has been telegraphed from New York, and to call on every civilised community to make such laws as shall effectually stamp out this curse from off the face of the earth. God helps those who help themselves.

It must, however, be deeply regretted by all who value Father Damien's memory for the grace of God shown forth in him, that Mr. Chapman's letter should have contained the following paragraph:—

> In addition to this I am anxious to open "A Memorial Fund to Joseph Damien de Venster," which I would respectfully hand over when completed to his Eminence Cardinal Manning to be disposed of exactly as he thinks fit. I will also make inquiries at Louvain to see if any practical assistance is required by the family of the late priest. "Honour to whom honour is due." This man was essentially a Catholic, and any memorial to perpetuate the story of his heroism must be essentially Catholic if it is to be entirely genuine, and as he would have wished it. No one, therefore, need send anything who feels the slightest qualms on the subject of the Church to whose glory this latest martyrdom accrues.

Surely it was because Father Damien feared God and loved his fellow-men, not because he was "essentially a Catholic," that he gave himself up to die for the poor lepers of Molokai. If it was only as a Roman Catholic, and for the glory of the Romish apostasy, then his heroism is degraded to fanaticism. We prefer to rank him among the saints of God, who have been in the Romish system but not of it, and we regard it as deplorable that a professedly Protestant clergyman should make this an opportunity of playing into the hands of Rome. It is a reflection on the memory of Father Damien to make this a sectarian fund; and it belittles the dignity of martyrdom to confine the glory of it to any section, even of the true Church of God, which Popery as a system is not.

The action of the police authorities in making a raid on two gambling clubs in London, in the early hours of last Sunday morning, will be heartily applauded by all the friends of social morality. Some very aristocratic names figure in the list of those involved in this scandalous breach of the law, but we hope that equal justice will be meted out to all the offenders. In a leading article on the gambling mania, after describing how young men are inveigled into the net, The Daily Telegraph says:—

> Everything has to give way to this one debt, ironically styled "a debt of honour," which never could have arisen but for an impudent defiance of the law on the part of those who trade upon such folly. It is the duty of the Home Secretary to search out and put an end to these schemes for defying the law — schemes worked coldly and cleverly by men who pander to the weaknesses and vice of young men, acquiring therefrom great profit to themselves and very often procuring absolute ruin to their victims...If it were known how widespread is the ruin caused by such hells, the public would, indeed, heartily thank Mr. Monro for his energy and success in this double raid; and, certainly, many of those who, directly or indirectly, have been sufferers by such ill-favoured institutions, will be most grateful to the new Commissioner of Police for having at last relentlessly put forth the strong hand of the law.

Among a few Nonconformist Churches in the North of England there is much agitation respecting what is demanded for "the freedom of the pulpit." It is admitted that there are to be observed "certain well-defined limits as to doctrine." Laymen, however, complain that the men who demand the freedom define the limits, and that this practically lays congregations open to every fresh wind of doctrine which an ever-varying negativism may wish to propound. A correspondent writes in remonstrance in a Northern contemporary, and closes with the words:—"There has been much stout talk about the freedom of the pulpit. As to the pew it is—'If you do not like it, you can leave.' These are painful things, sir, to an Old Disciple." Well they may be.

In solicitude for the success of their sons, and in the difficulty of finding openings for them elsewhere, many fathers are just now turning their thoughts to South America. Doubtless, Scotch and English youths have founded flourishing businesses there, and won professional success. A paper, however, on Rio de Janeiro, in a New York journal, may well make Christian fathers pause, so far as Brazil is concerned. A missionary says:—

> I receive many letters from young men asking about business openings, but I dare not take upon myself the responsibility of advising anyone to come. I have made careful inquiries and estimates upon the subject, and find that, of all who come here from English-speaking countries for business purposes, not more than one out of fifty makes a financial success without becoming a physical and moral wreck. Only about one out of twenty-five escapes a drunkard's grave; but even drunkenness does not mark the worst depths of moral degradation to which they fall.

The Theological Monthly is an able exponent of current Christian thought, but a sixteen-page article in this month's issue, full of quotations from a book on "The Evolution of Christianity," could well have been spared. The work referred to is a hash of the infidelity of Tom Paine, modernised by the atheism of the Hall of Science. It may be necessary to utter a word of warning concerning such productions, but to set forth their offensive ribaldry in relation to our blessed Lord, is, in our judgment, a mistake, whether done in the pulpit or the Christian press.

We in Great Britain are too apt to complain of American boastfulness. But some moderating words were pressed home by The Christian Union, amid the huzzas of the recent centennial celebration. There are orators enough, and writers enough, it says, to declare what great people Americans are; but let them ask whether the men of to-day are more or less temperate than their fathers; whether the liquor traffic was as powerful and defiant of law a hundred years ago as it is now; whether the liquor sellers, or the clergy, had then the greater influence on public life; whether, if proportionally, there are more millionaires now, there are not also more paupers; in short, whether the American Republic as powerfully recognises now, as it did in Washington's time, that it is founded on the Christian religion, and that without faith in God, liberty cannot exist? These are useful questions for any people to ask themselves.

"The Story of the Uganda Mission and the Church Missionary Society's Work in Eastern Equatorial Africa" (C.M.S., Salisbury-square, 6d.), is a profusely illustrated and timely narrative of most pitiful and heroic events relating to a region of absorbing interest, second to none in the whole history of missions, or in their onward movement in the present day. It should be widely circulated.

There is a vigorous paper, by Rev. W. A. Blake, a Congregational missioner, in a northern journal. It asks reflection as to whether an uninterrupted one-man ministry can meet the perils and difficulties of these days, and pleads that the genius and common sense which are shown by church members in business should be consecrated to the success of the church. Their objection about reaction after mission services should be exchanged for the warnings of Scripture against inaction; and ministers, the paper contends, had better leave their discussions about eschatology and similar problems, and address themselves to meet the wide-spread and deep craving of men and women to learn what God has addressed to them. Assuredly the breath of the Lord is sweeping across the valley of vision, and the formal, unchangeable routine of Sunday services is fast becoming an unbearable anachronism.

Mrs. Ormiston Chant is writing in The Methodist Times a series of papers on "Our Barbarous Prison System," which demand the serious attention of all lovers of God and of men. An extract will show the view of punishment taken by the writer, and what has been done in this direction:—

Amongst the many employments followed by the women in Sherborn Prison, Massachussets, is that of the rearing of hot-house flowers, which are sold in the Boston market, and are a very fair source of revenue to the prison. It was most encouraging to witness, as one passed through the gay and perfumed hot-houses, the evident pride and pleasure the toilers took in their toil. "You see the flowers can't answer them back, or irritate them," said the governor. "And it is amazing how soon they become gentle and well-behaved, and how greatly they enjoy being set to work in the houses. Then the women who have attained the fourth—that is the highest—grade of good conduct are allowed to have flowers on the table at which they have meals, also a white table-cloth." It seems as if the reformative, instead of punitive, spirit were a great success; for, roughly speaking, out of the 325 prisoners in that model prison when the writer was there, in 1888, 187 had worked their way up to the fourth, 75 to the third, 48 to the second, and only 15 were in the lowest or first grade, and most of the latter were new comers.

As an illustration of the susceptibility of even the lowest to the tender influence of the flowers, here is one experience from the lips of a warder, who was an eye-witness. Great pains had been taken to rear a pure white pansy, and much excitement was felt for the opening of the first bud on one particular plant, not only by those immediately concerned in the rearing, but by all the women. One bright morning a "hardened criminal," who had been in other prisons for uttering false coin and for drunkenness, dropped down on her knees, and prayed thus, through passionate tears: "Oh, God! you have been good to me, and I've been real bad to you! You've let my flower be a white one after all, and I never felt so glad in all my life! Don't let it die. Let 'em see as I'm good for something after all." So though no word or sign to others had shown the least symptom of sorrow, contrition had been at work, and the softening influence of gratitude, whispered up from the white heart of a heartsease, had thrown penitence into prayer, and brought heartsease to others beside the woman herself.

It needs, however, that those who punish be themselves delivered from the prison-house of self into the glorious liberty of the sons of God, in order that punishment should become of a kind like this.

Last week we commented upon the excessive hours that certain railway companies require of their servants. A painful illustration of this was afforded a few days ago by the sudden death, from rupture of the heart, of a goods porter at one of the London stations. It transpired at the inquest that the poor man had been required to work, carrying heavy loads, from six o'clock at night till seven or eight the following morning, seven nights a week. Such a fact speaks for itself.

The papers by "A Friend of Missions," to which we referred a fortnight since as having been reprinted from The Methodist Times, are, as we expected, calling forth temperately written, but uncompromising, contradiction of the chief position taken up. The editor, however, stands bravely by his correspondent, and defends him in several "Notes." This discussion will do good, but for the work's sake and for our own souls' sakes, let it be carried on without personalities, in good temper, with mutual respect, and in the fear of God. The investigation of missionary operations during the past century is only beginning; inconsiderate and unkind criticism will damage missions, discourage missionaries, and injure the critics most of all; and passionate replies will have results no less pernicious. But a just and generous recognition of all that has been, and is being, well and wisely done will win a willing ear to the suggestion of improvements and even to the consideration of faults in present methods.

The following extract from a church record in Boston will be of interest to our readers:—

No. 1079. Dwight L. Moody. Boards 43 Court-street. Has been baptized. First awakened on the 16th of May. Became anxious about himself. Saw himself a sinner; and sin now seems hateful and holiness desirable. Thinks he has repented. Has purposed to give up sin. Feels dependent on Christ for forgiveness. Loves the Scriptures. Prays. Desires to be useful. Religiously educated. Been in the city a year. From Northfield, this State. Is not ashamed to be known as a Christian. Eighteen years old.

The walls in Dublin have been placarded with adverse opinions on the Welsh Sunday Closing Act. If this points to public opinion being divided on the proposed extension of the measure the Justices appear to have made up their minds upon the subject. A memorial, extensively signed by magistrates of every county and of all shades of religious and political opinion, has been sent to the Lord Lieutenant supporting the Sunday and Saturday Night Closing Bill, and praying for a reduction in the number of licensed houses. Much of the distress in Ireland would be removed by that Saturday Night Closing Act. It is far from improbable that if legislation began to deal with the temptations of the Saturday there would soon be less need to enact measures dealing with the Sabbath.

To those of our readers who may be in doubt about the wrongness of vivisection, we commend Miss Cobbe's masterly volume, "The Modern Rack" (Sonnenschein & Co.). In this little book perhaps one of our greatest authorities deals with the whole question in an exhaustive manner, and we do not think that anyone could rise from its perusal without deep feelings of indignation against those who practise, and those who defend, cruelty to animals, under the plea of scientific research. Referring to the common assertion that the lower animals have no feelings of pain, or have the feeling in a far less degree than man, Miss Cobbe urges that the so-called scientists who use the argument are the men who teach that the human race is not only allied to the brute, but is descended from it, and who also assert that the weeds of the roadside are joint possessors of the psychic life.

UNION TABERNACLE (Wandsworth-road, S.W.).—The anniversary of the opening of this building was commemorated last week. On Lord's Day Messrs. R. Paton and Reginald Radcliffe, and Dr. Fisher (who is shortly proceeding to Central Africa), took part in special services, in which prominence was given to the great subject of the evangelisation of the world. On Monday afternoon and evening the addresses were devoted to a consideration of the revival of the work of God, for which earnest prayer was offered. Mr. J. E. Mathieson presided, and a number of visiting friends took part.

CONVENTIONS IN ITALY.

The first Christian Convention in modern Rome has been held, and, small though it necessarily was, it was well and regularly attended. From many quarters grateful testimonies have been given of definite blessing received, and thankfulness for the privilege of enjoying the meetings. The ministers and workers in Rome rallied around Rev. Dr. Elder Cumming and Rev. Evan Hopkins, and gave them a hearty and affectionate welcome, and almost all attended the daily conferences regularly. The absence in America of the Waldensian pastor, Rev. Dr. Prochet, was much regretted, but he was represented by his colleague, Rev. Signor Ruffa, who translated at the meeting for Italian evangelists and workers. The Wesleyan minister, Rev. T. Piggott, was also unavoidably absent in the north of Italy.

Bishop Cheetham presided at some of the meetings, and Rev. Dr. Gray at others. Rev. J. Wall, of the Baptist Mission, took the chair at the meeting of the Italian workers, and Major Colquhoun, in whose Central Mission-hall most of the meetings took place, gave effective support. Dr. and Mrs. Young threw open their spacious rooms three times during the week. Indeed, from all the evangelical labourers in Rome the most cordial sympathy was received. Before the first meeting was held, all the necessary funds had been received from kind friends, who had contributed of their own accord, so that there were no collections of any sort made at the door.

It is hoped that this first Convention in Rome is but the foretaste of what may be in the future, and prayer is being offered that, if it be God's will, there may be another after Christmas. The Florentine Christians begged the delegates to hold some meetings there also, and accordingly they had three large drawing-room meetings—one in the house of Rev. Mr. McDougall and the others in that of Mrs. Ginoulhiac. They were requested to preach also in the churches in Florence and Venice, but were unable to do so. Altogether, there is a large band of friends who are now thanking God for the Convention in Italy in May, 1889.

A SALE OF WORK will be held at the Albert Hall, on the 22nd and 23rd inst., on behalf of the Society for Promoting Female Missions. This Society embraces twenty-four individual Missions, such as the late Miss Whately's Girls' Schools, Cairo; Madame Rodriguez' Girls' School at Figueras; Miss Robinson's Soldiers' and Sailors' Wives' Aid Society, and other such valuable institutions.

SOUTHSEA.—The eighth annual conference at Southsea will be held, God willing, on Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday, June 4, 5, and 6. The afternoon intervals will be devoted to Bible-readings and addresses on Home and Foreign Missions by well-known workers. Hospitality will be provided, as far as possible, for those who signify their need of the same to Rev. F. Baldey, St. Simon's Vicarage, Southsea, before the 28th inst.

THE LORD'S DAY is being observed by the large majority of the English-speaking exhibitors at the Paris Universal Exhibition. Many Continental Protestants have joined British and American firms in honouring the Sabbath. In thus dispensing with the services of their attendants one day in seven, the exhibitors will not only get more cheerful service, but at the same time set a good example, which, it is hoped, the French people may be led in some degree to imitate.

REV. EGERTON R. YOUNG, whose portrait we recently gave, has been in great demand for sermons and lectures all over the country. He has been as far north as Newcastle-on-Tyne, and last Sabbath he preached and lectured in Cornwall. His engagements are now so many that he can entertain no more during his present visit to England. So pressing are the invitations to return that he expects again to visit our shores in September, accompanied by Mrs. Young, who sings the Indian songs very sweetly.

"Unconscious Sanctification."

"LESS paper and more power" was Mr. Spurgeon's description of his desire concerning the Conference held last week. The hope in both its parts has been fulfilled. Never have there been fewer papers read at the Conference; and never has there been greater power realised. The address of the President; the few papers that were read; and, especially, the freer and more fervent talks and prayers of Wednesday morning, all had the one aim—the increase of power. By unanimous consent it has been the most hallowed and profitable season ever experienced in Conference week. Every brother present will have reason to thank God for its holy and inspiring memories.

Mr. Spurgeon has a keen eye for detecting what he believes to be the mistakes of the Higher Life movement. The paper on "Unconscious Sanctification," with which Wednesday morning's session began, was evidently directed against one of these mistakes; and the President's talk, following the paper, was in the same direction. But we venture to express our conviction that there are excellent features connected with the holiness movement, which might with advantage have been introduced into the Conference itself. The feeling so deep and fervent, which was excited on Wednesday morning needed something more to make the effect permanent. It was no doubt this impression that prompted brethren Frank H. White, A. G. Brown, W. J. Mayers, and others, to call a special meeting on Friday morning at 10 o'clock, for prayer and testimony upon the same subject. Definite and public acts of surrender are no doubt attended with some sort of danger, but they are often the condition of advance in the Divine life; and when the feelings have been deeply stirred, and desire is fervent, and hope is strong, then is the time for such surrender to be made.

The phrase "Unconscious Sanctification" is one which proved very useful in rebuking the claims of those who, instead of pressing eagerly forward to a prize that is always beyond them, seem content to look at their own holiness with evident self satisfaction. But, after all, is the idea of unconscious sanctification scriptural? No doubt "Moses wist not that his face shone"; and one essential condition of sanctification is "the forgetting of those things that are behind." But can a man be unconscious of victory where there was formerly failure, of rest where there was formerly anxious care? Mr. Fullerton's paper on "The Life which is Life indeed," certainly recognised a conscious distinction between the life which every converted man has and that in which intimate fellowship with God is enjoyed. We must be conscious of it in order to give God praise for it. Paul was not afraid to speak of his experience of a conscience void of offence; of a constant triumph in Christ; of the gentleness with which he treated his Thessalonian converts, and of his holy and blameless walk (1 Cor. ii. 14; 1 Thess. ii. 7, 10). To be conscious of sanctification in such a way as to tell it to others in the spirit of boasting is a delusion, and cannot be too severely denounced; but to be conscious of it so as to give God thanks for it, while we eagerly press on to something more, is a different thing. The idea of unconscious sanctification is not only unscriptural, but may lead to an opposite extreme as evil as that which it is intended to correct. Is there not a danger of resting in the unconscious want of sanctification? If we may have it and not know it, we may be without it and not know it; and those who are indifferent may mistake the unconsciousness of indifference for sanctification itself. Let not the phrase mislead us. It is directed against those who make a boast of their holiness, not against those who humbly give glory to God for every victory won through Christ, but who cannot rest satisfied with what they have attained.

It was impossible to forget the "Down-Grade" controversy. The absence of many brethren who were formerly prominent and useful members of the Conference suggested it, and many of Mr. Spurgeon's utterances were evidently intended to refer to it. Would to God the breaches it has made were healed. The result of it thus far has been not so much to separate the teachers of the new theology from the evangelicals as to divide evangelicals from each other. The great need is that the churches that are true to the Word of God should receive a fresh anointing with the Holy Ghost. Very wisely did Mr. Spurgeon set this before the Conference. A controversial victory is of little value. "Not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord of hosts." "Power from on high" would decide the matter, as the fire descending on Mount Carmel gave Elijah the victory against the prophets of Baal. A fresh anointing with the Holy Ghost would unite those who are agreed as to the truth they preach, and would do much towards restoring to the truth those who have gone astray. We devoutly pray that this end may be hastened by the hallowed Conference week just spent. ONE OF THE PASTORS.

With the Independents.

THE absence of formal organisation which so largely marks the Independent churches makes it impossible to gain an adequate idea of the activity and usefulness of these churches only from the meetings of the Congregational Union of England and Wales. Some of the richest and rarest fruits are produced apart from the Union. On Monday morning, as early as ten o'clock, a prayer-meeting was held in the mission-room of the London Missionary Society, which I have several times heard spoken of as one of the most powerful and most useful meetings of the week. The place itself is sacred; prayer, thanksgiving, and self-sacrifice have consecrated it to God. Although only one hour was spent together by the brethren, some six or seven offered prayer and thanksgiving. The Chairman of the meeting read Heb. i. as affirming the Kingship of Christ based upon the sacrifice of Himself for the sins of men; and also the end of Mark xii. as showing how the eyes of Christ are still upon the Treasury, and the gifts his servants put therein. Missionaries, ministers, and laymen joined in earnest praise for the help that God has given to the Society in its time of difficulty; and in prayer for men and means to be given for the work.

The work of this Society, which has been passing through a time of financial difficulty, occasioned by its great successes, was again brought forward on Wednesday at the City Temple, when preached on its behalf. The sermon was characteristic of the man, and was heard by a large audience. The annual meeting, which was held as usual in Exeter Hall, hardly seemed so large as we have seen before; nor was the tone quite so spiritual as could be desired. Perhaps a large meeting must be to some extent distracting and dissipating. The news, however, was good; abroad, the work of the Society is extending in every quarter, while at home the churches are arising to do their duty. They have removed a deficit of £16,000, and also added £5000 to the annual income. Could anything like a fair proportion of the wealth of rich Independents be obtained for missionary work, more might be done at once. It was pathetic to hear that the missionaries had sent £1000 out of their small incomes towards the deficit; what a rebuke to the men of hundreds of thousands! At the Friday morning's sitting of the Congregational Union. the first place was given to the foreign secretary of the L.M.S., to advocate the Society's claim upon the churches; then came a resolution in the same strain. I doubt whether any good will come directly from the suggestion the resolution contained; but that the Independents are more earnest, more prayerful, and more resolute than ever in their determination to carry the Gospel to the heathen is happily very apparent. For besides these occasions, on which foreign work was brought forward, two meetings were held to promote missions among women, and an evening meeting was given to young friends of the Society.

The address of Dr. Falding, as Chairman of the Congregational Union, had the good quality of comparative brevity—i.e., it was an address and not a treatise. It had the still better qualities of warmth of feeling and clearness of utterance touching the faith of Christ and the application of that faith to the great social and moral questions of the day. Less ambitious and less brilliant than some former addresses, it maintained the best traditions of the chair and of the churches. It could not be heard without doing good. The same may be said of most of the speaking, both on Tuesday and Friday. Tuesday's meeting went beyond denominational lines by unanimously and heartily passing a resolution in favour of simultaneous disarmament by the European Powers. This movement, we believe, will grow.

Much attention was given to

THE COLLEGES AND PREACHING.

Professor Cave pleaded for the use of extemporaneous speech; others pointed out that the Holy Spirit uses different methods. As long as we have Dr. Chalmers as a specimen of a reading preacher, James Parsons, of a memoriter preacher, and C. H. Spurgeon, of an extemporaneous preacher, we may well leave each man to adopt his own method. A noticeable feature of one meeting was the passing of a resolution of sympathy with Miss Stirling, of the Salvation Army, on her return to prison in Switzerland, and calling on the Government to use its influence to procure her liberation.

The temperance men had a service in the City Temple, and also a business meeting, where it was reported that out of 2700 ministers 1400 are abstainers, and out of 273 students for the ministry 247 are abstainers. In Scotland all the Independent students are abstainers. The condition of the colonies, of the churches at home, and of Ireland was laid before the Union; and a meeting was held in connection with the Guilds of Young People, a movement which has had a most auspicious beginning. The ministers and delegates must have been refreshed in spirit by the words of truth they heard, and by the zealous devotion to the Saviour which was apparent in every meeting of the week. A much more devotional feeling was present than was the case some years ago.

AN INDEPENDENT MINISTER.

TO CHRISTIAN BUSINESS MEN.

DEAR SIR,—With the view of helping on the work of missions abroad, the following vacant openings have been put before us for Christian men:—

A firm dealing in hardware, machinery, paints, &c.. require two Christian men as travellers for South America and the East. Agents are required for a firm of manufacturers of similar description of goods, to represent them in various commercial centres abroad. We have a request from an English Company, for an under manager for Madagascar, to take charge of a small sawmill, and to oversee native labour. Only earnest Christian men will be accepted. Communications should be sent to me. JOHN M. PAMMENT, Secretary.

Missionary Bureau, 186, Aldersgate-st., E.C.

THE QUESTION OF THE HOUR:—FOREIGN MISSIONS.

Some Remarks on the Papers of "A Missionary."

VII.—Varieties of Missionary Work.

I DESIRE now to have done with controversy. I have found myself compelled to deal in very plain terms with what seemed to me inaccuracies and fallacies in the articles of "A Missionary"; for I felt that large numbers of readers were liable to be grievously misled, simply through not knowing the facts of the case. I have not indeed taken up every one of his many points, though I have made careful notes on all, and believe that all could be easily disposed of. But I think I have said enough to show that his articles are not a safe guide, either as regards exposition of Scripture, or as regards the facts of Modern Missions. And I wish now to turn from the examination and refutation of what seems to me erroneous, and to confine myself in the present paper to the pleasanter task of giving some fragments of information regarding Missions as practically carried on, especially by the one Society for which I have the best right to speak; although what I have to say will necessarily take the form of a further reply to certain statements and arguments of "A Missionary."

The point I desire to make is this, that Missions to the Heathen and the Mohammedan world are, and ought to be, most diversified in their operations; and that to exalt one method of evangelisation, that of itinerant preaching, into a position of solitary authority, is to ignore all the lessons which God has taught us by nearly a century of experience. "Diversities of gifts, but the same Spirit"—"differences of administrations, but the same Lord"—"diversities of operations, but the same God which worketh all in all": this, the Apostle Paul's great motto in 1 Cor. xii., is my motto in the present article.

It is a principle which we all do acknowledge in home work. No one dreams of suggesting that preaching in mission-halls or in the open air is the only right method of evangelising the masses. Take Miss Annie Macpherson's noble work for many years in rescuing boys and girls from evil surroundings, and emigrating them to Canada. Should we pronounce her efforts not missionary, but only "philanthropic"? We know what her great object is: not merely to put the children into a way of earning their living, but to bring them to Christ. Or take Gospel Temperance, in which material and social and moral and spiritual benefits are aimed at all together. Is that only "philanthropic"? Or take the Mildmay Medical Mission at Bethnal Green. Is that to be denied the right to be called a mission, because it has a hospital and dispenses medicines? Or, again, suppose a man of high University distinction were inquiring in what way he could best consecrate his gifts to the work of soul-winning, could he possibly do anything more effectual than take the head mastership of a great public school? He would have to teach Greek plays, perhaps; but think of the personal influence he would gain over boys who would by and by be the leading men of the country. And suppose that in ten years he were the instrument of the conversion to God of ten young noblemen, but of none besides, would not his work even then in its far-reaching results be grander than that of any open-air preacher in the same period? I do not think I shall be misunderstood when I say this. No one, I am sure, will suspect me of doubting that all souls are alike before God. But all souls are not alike in the influence they may wield. The conversion of Saul of Tarsus was, in its results in the world, worth that of a thousand ordinary men.

Now, I ask that these well-understood principles be applied to the mission field. They will at once justify a great many agencies which "A Missionary" calls upon us to abandon if we would escape the brand he will otherwise fix on us of being merely "philanthropic." Let me take a few examples.

(2) I stand on the shore of East Africa. Behind me is a piece of rising ground, covered with tropical vegetation, but with clearings here and there where huts and sheds have been hastily put up. Before me is an arm of the sea, upon which I see three or four boats coming in from a British ship-of-war lying in the offing. Presently those boats discharge four hundred lately rescued slaves on to the shore, naked, half-starved, degraded, and miserable, and then return to the ship. Why are those slaves brought in here? Because this is a new mission station, and the huts and sheds behind us have been put up for their reception. What shall be done with them? Feed them? Clothe them? Set them to work for their living? Teach them A B C? Oh, but all this is only philanthropic work; what business has the missionary with that?

I stand on the same spot just ten years after. Another cargo of slaves is being landed. Who receives them? A missionary again; but this time his burden is less, for a party of black helpers are with him, men and women, bright and intelligent, who themselves can take care of the new arrivals and tell them of the Saviour. Who are these black helpers? They are some of the naked slaves of ten years before! That is the result of "philanthropic work." Shall we pronounce it unworthy of a missionary society?

Two years later that same spot is visited by another ship-of-war. Her commander himself lands and visits the station. He is a Christian man. At the invitation of a black man, who also was once a slave, but is now an ordained minister, he addresses the assembled people, most of them also once slaves, on the words, "Jesus Christ, the same yesterday, and to-day, and for ever"; and then they sing, "Rock of Ages." That naval officer writes a letter to THE CHRISTIAN, telling of what he has seen, and his letter appears on July 27, 1888, whence I take the incident. Need I point the moral?

(3) I am in South India, in the terrible famine time of 1877—8. I see the missionaries labouring hard to save life, and thousands of pounds sent to them from England. But it is purely "philanthropic" work: ought they to engage in it? What is the result? "The conviction prevails among the people that whilst Hinduism had left the famine-stricken to die, Christianity had stepped in, like an angel from heaven, to comfort them with its sympathy, and cheer them with its effectual succour." Some twenty thousand persons cast away their idols in consequence in Tinnevelly alone, and put themselves under Christian instruction. I ask myself, Can these be correctly called "rice-Christians"? No. They did not join the Christian community to get rice, for it was given to the heathen just as freely; they joined partly from gratitude, and partly from being led to think that a religion that could do such a thing must be true. But, of course, they are weak and ignorant; of course, some will presently go back; of course, the responsibility of the Mission for the vast majority who remain steadfast will be very heavy. Taking the figures of John xxi., we may say that the "fishing" has been done, but the "shepherding" has yet to be done. Taking the Divine commission in Matt. xxviii., we may say that the "making disciples" has been effected; the "baptizing" follows in due time; and the "teaching all things" will continue long after. I leap forward to the year 1889. I see another great famine in China. I see the China Inland brethren doing the same "philanthropic work." I say, "God bless them in the same way," and I am sure He will.

(4) I am in Uganda, any time between 1878 and 1888. I see a missionary with a dozen men and boys round him, teaching them to read; and I see another working a little printing-press, and producing from it, after much pains and labour, a quantity of sheets of paper, with fragments of the Word of God upon them in a strange tongue. Surely, I say, that is not "apostolic"! I find nothing in Matt. x., or in the Acts, about teaching people to read; and as to the printing-press it is a fruit of that modern civilisation which has so spoilt modern missions! But I look again at Uganda. I see the missionaries expelled, and the converts scattered. Converts?—Who are they? They are the men and boys, yes, and women, too, for whose sake those unapostolic missionaries were content to sit down day by day to the drudgery of teaching them their letters; and now they can read and understand the blessed Book of God, and though their teachers have been banished, they have got portions of that Word in their hands to be "a lamp unto their feet, and a light unto their path."

(5) I see an old man dying at Chatham. Half a century ago he was in Africa, but for the last forty years he lived quietly in England, almost buried in books—dictionaries, and grammars, and commentaries—and totally unknown to the young pioneers of our own day. And I see one of those young pioneers preparing to go up the Niger to the Mohammedan Soudan, and taking with him several books, vocabularies, Scripture translations, &c., in the principal language (Hausa) that he will require. Where did he get them? They are the work of that old man's retirement; and so the veteran Schön and the youthful Wilmot-Brooke are associated in the great enterprise. What would the latter have done without the former? Shall we say that one is more "apostolic" than the other? Is it not exactly a case of the head and the feet, neither of them entitled to say to the other, "I have no need of you"?

(6) I go back to the very year when Schön went up the Niger and collected the first materials for his translations, 1841, and I see two other young missionaries sailing for India. Their names are Fox and Noble; the former from Oxford, the latter from Cambridge. They mutually resolve to work in different ways. Fox goes into the villages, and spends his whole time going about preaching and speaking of Christ, until in a few years sickness drives him home to die; but his successors carry on the work, and reap a harvest of souls from among the simple country people. Noble starts a High School, and gives a first-rate English education to the high-caste boys who flock to it. Daily, for one hour, he reads the Bible with them; out of school, he makes them his friends, and by word and life pleads with them for Christ. Twenty-four years he continues, without once coming home; and dies at his post. A few converts, not twenty, are the fruit of his work; but they are picked men.

I come down to 1887, and I see the son of that preaching missionary, Fox, going forth to visit that very mission field. What does he find? He finds some thousands of Christians, mostly in the villages; but he finds also that the leaders and teachers of the church are the handful of high-class educated men brought to Christ at that school. Shall Fox be commended, and Noble be condemned? Has not God manifestly used both? And when Fox's son, in the Lord's Supper, hands the same cup of wine to the lordly Brahmin who found Christ in the High School, and to the lowly Pariah who heard of Him by the wayside, will he not thank God for both agencies?

These six illustrations could easily be multiplied; but they will perhaps suffice. I may, however, be allowed to add a few further words on Educational Missions.

SOCIAL PURITY ALLIANCE.—The annual meeting of this Alliance was held at Westminster, on the evening of Thursday, May 9. Mr. W. T. Malleson presided. The report showed that, with an income of barely £200, a large amount of useful work had been done in an unobtrusive way, including meetings in London, Birmingham, Newcastle, &c., and the distribution of over 13,000 books and leaflets. The cause of purity has also been brought before the soldiers at Shorncliffe, Aldershot, and Rosslyn, and several of them enrolled as members.

XXX.—SINAI AND SION.

HEBREWS xii.

To how great splendour had these Hebrew Christians been accustomed—marble courts, throngs of white-robed Levites, splendid vestments, the state and pomp of symbol, ceremonial, and choral psalm. And to what a contrast were they reduced—a meeting in some hall or school, with the poor, afflicted, and persecuted members of a despised and hated sect. It was, indeed, a change, and the inspired writer knew it well, and in these magnificent words, the sublime consummation and crown of his entire argument, he sets himself to show that, for every single item they had renounced, they had become possessed of a spiritual counterpart, a reality, an eternal substance, which was compensation told over a thousand times.

"Ye are come." He refuses to admit the thought of it being a future experience, reserved for some high day, when the heavenly courts shall be thronged by the populations of redeemed and glorified spirits. That there will be high days of sacred festivity in that blessed state is clear from the Apocalypse of the beloved Apostle. But it is to none of them that these words allude. Mark that present tense, "Ye are come." Persecuted, weary, humiliated, these Hebrew Christians had already come to Mount Sion, to the city of the living God, and to the festal throngs of the redeemed. That they saw not these by the eye, and could not touch them by the hand of sense, was no reason for doubting that they had come to these glorious realities. And what was true of them is true of each reader of these lines who is united to the Lord Jesus by a living faith.

I. WE BELONG TO MOUNT SION.—"Ye are not come unto the mount that might be touched and that burned with fire...but ye are come unto Mount Sion." At the bidding of these words, two mountains rise before us. First, Sinai, stern and naked, rifted by tempest, cleft by earthquake, the centre and focus of the vast sandstone passages which conducted the pilgrim host, stage above stage, until it halted at its foot.

But, grand as Sinai was by nature, it must have been grander far, on that memorable day in which all elements of terror seemed to converge. There was the flash of the forked lightning out of the blackness of the brooding clouds. There was the darkness of midnight; the peal of thunder, the reverberations of which ran in volumes of sound along those resounding corridors; the whirlwind of tempest, and the voice of words which they entreated they might not hear any more. And all was done to teach the people the majesty, the spirituality, and the holiness of God. The result was terror, struck into the hearts of sinners, trembling at the contrast between the greatness and holiness of God and their own remembered murmurings and shortcomings. Even Moses said: "I exceedingly fear and quake."

In contrast with this stands Mount Sion, the grey old rock on which stood the palace of David and the Temple of God—sites sacred to Jewish thought for holy memories and Divine associations. "The Lord hath chosen Sion, He hath desired it for his habitation. This is my rest for ever; here will I dwell; for I have desired it." To the pious Jew, Mount Sion was the joy of the whole earth, the mountain of holiness, the city of the Great King. Her palaces, grey with age, were known to be the home and haunt of God. The very aspect of the hoary hills must strike panic into the heart of her foes. And her sons walked proudly around her ramparts, telling her towers, marking her bulwarks, considering her palaces, whilst fathers told to their children the stories of her glory which in their boyhood they too had received (Ps. xlviii.).

The counterpart of this city is ours still, ours for ever. The halo of glory has faded off those ancient stones, and has passed on to rest on the true city of God, of which the foundations are Righteousness, the walls Peace, and the gates Praise; which rises beyond the mists and clouds of time, in the light that shines not from the sun or moon, but from the face of God. In other words, somewhere in this universe there is a holy society of souls, pure and lovely, the élite of the family of man, gathered in a home which the hand of man has never piled, and the sin of man has never soiled. Its walls are jasper, its gates pearl. Into it nothing can enter that defiles or works abomination, and deals in lies.

The patriarchs caught sight of that city in their pilgrimage, it gleamed before their vision, beckoning them ever forward, and forbidding their return to the country from which they had come out. And the Seer of Patmos beheld it descending from God out of heaven, bathed in the Divine glory.

To that city we have come. It has come down into our hearts; day by day we walk its streets; we live in its light, we breathe its atmosphere, we enjoy its rights. We have no counterpart in our experience of Mount Sinai, with its thunder and terror; but, thank God, we have the reality of Mount Sion, with its blessed and holy privileges. Sinai is the law, temporary and intermediate; Sion, the Gospel, eternal and abiding. Sinai is full of human resolutions and vows, made to be broken; Sion is the election of grace. Sinai is terrible with the thunder of law; Sion is tender with the appeals of the love of the heart of God.

II. WE BELONG TO A GREAT FESTAL THRONG.—The converted Jew might miss the vast crowds that gathered at the annual feasts, when the tribes of the Lord went up, whilst kinsfolk and acquaintance took sweet counsel together, as they went to the house of God in company. But, to the opened eye of faith, the rooms where they knelt in worship were as full of bright and festal multitudes as the mountain of old was full of horses and chariots of fire. And these are for us also.

There is an innumerable company of angels.—Myriads. Thousand thousands minister to our Lord; ten thousand times ten thousand stand before Him. When, therefore, the saintly spirit ascends the altar-steps of true devotion, it passes through a vast host of sympathetic spirits, all of whom are devoted to the same Master, and are joining in the same act of worship. Listen! Do you not hear the voice of many angels round the throne, as you draw nigh?

There is also the general assembly and Church of the firstborn.—We meet the Church of the redeemed, each time we sincerely worship God. We may belong to some small section of the visible Church, unrecognised and unknown by the great bulk of our fellow believers. We may be isolated from all outward fellowship and communion with the saints, imprisoned in the sick-chamber, or self-banished to some lone spot for the sake of the Gospel; but nothing can exclude us from living communion with saintly souls of all communions, and sects, and denominaticns, and names.

Your name may be written on no communicants' roll, or church register. But is it written in the Lamb's book of life in heaven? If so, then, rejoice. This is more important than if the spirits were subject to you. And, remember, whenever you worship God, you are ascending the steps of the true temple, in company with vast hosts of souls, whether on this side, or on the other, of the veil of sense. Neither life, nor death, nor rite, nor church-order, can divide those who, because they are one with Christ, are for ever one with each other.

There are also the spirits of just men made perfect.—If the former phrase rather speaks of the New Testament believers, this may be taken to describe the Old Testament saints. Or, if the one designates those who are still serving God on earth, the other probably refers to those who have passed into the presence of God, and have attained their consummation and bliss.

Who can be lonely and desolate, who can bemoan the past, who can disparage the present, when once the spirit is able to realise that rejoicing company, in earth and heaven, circling around the Saviour as planets around the central sun, and sending in tides and torrents of love and worship. Yea, who can forbear to sing, as the ear detects the mighty harmonies of every creature which is in heaven, and on the earth, and under the earth, saying, "Blessing, and honour, and glory, and power, be unto Him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb for ever."

III. WE ARE COME TO THE BLOOD OF JESUS.—We dare not approach the august Judge of all, were it not for the Mediator between God and men, Jesus Christ the righteous. Nor would He avail for his chosen work, unless He had shed his most precious blood, which has ratified the new covenant, and cleansed away our sins, and now ever avails to sprinkle us from an evil conscience, removing each stain of guilt so soon as the soul confesses and seeks forgiveness, with tears of penitence and words of faith.

It speaks better things than Abel's.—That was the blood of martyrdom, this of sacrifice. That accused, as it cried from the ground, this only pleads for mercy. That denounced wrath, this proclaims reconciling love. That led to punishment which branded the murderer, this issues in salvation. That was unto death, this is unto life.

All blood has a cry.—Listen to the cry of the blood of Jesus. It speaks to man for God. It speaks to God for man. It tells us that there is no condemnation, no wrath, no judgment, because the thunderstorm broke and exhausted itself on Calvary. And when we go to our Father, it pleads for us from the wounds of the Lamb as it had been slain.

Oh, precious blood, if better than that of Abel, how much better than all the blood of all the beasts ever slain, than all the sacrifices ever offered, than all the tears or prayers ever presented in the strength of human virtue; we cannot, we will not refuse thee, or turn away from thy pleading cry, or reject Him who once spake from the cross, and now speaks from Heaven.

X.—THAT SAD BOY.

IN the middle of a mission, there came to me a gentleman from his office in the city. He had been as usual to his place of business, but somehow he could not attend to his letters today.

He said that he felt such joy coming over him at times, and at others, unbidden tears came to his eyes. "They are tears of joy, sir," he added, "and not of sorrow—no, not of sorrow. And the refrain of that hymn of yours (I never heard it in my life before)—

I do believe, I will believe,
That Jesus died for me—

I cannot get it out of my head by any means. I do not know what has come to me!"

"Sit down, my friend," I said, "and I will tell you what has happened. You are converted to God—God has adopted you into his family, to be not only his child, but his heir, and joint heir with Christ. I do not wonder at your being full of joy. How long has this joy been upon you?"

"Only this morning, sir. The fact is, your preaching quite upset me and my old ideas. I prayed to God to search me, and to know my heart, to prove me, and examine my thoughts. Every sermon I have heard you preach has shown me more directly that you had something I did not know about."

"Then," I said, "thank God, and you will know about it more and more perfectly. May I ask your name?"

"My name, sir, is ——."

"Yes," I replied, "I thought so. Did not you write to me last night?"

"No, sir, that I did not."

"You surprise me," I said. "Do you not live at ——?"

"Yes," he replied, "I live there, sir."

I then produced a letter I had in my pocket, and asked, "Is not that your writing?"

"It is very like it," he answered, taking out his glasses. Then, looking at the signature, he said, "I see how it is now, this letter is from that sad son of mine. Ah, he is a great trouble! What has he been writing to you about, I wonder? Does he want money?"

"Oh, no," I replied, "nothing like that."

"Ah, sir, he is a great trouble to us; he came home last night after eleven o'clock, and ran past us without saying good night, or anything."

"Perhaps," I said, "his heart was too full to speak; or, perhaps, he thought you would not understand him. I must say, from his letter, I am inclined to judge of his action upon that occasion, in this way. Will you like to read it for yourself?"

The surprise and emotion on the father's countenance as he read the letter was a real study. He presently looked off the paper into my face, and then again at the writing, as if he would not miss a word. He read on to the end, and said, "Well, this is the most wonderful thing that ever happened!"

"It may be so," I replied; "but now let us thank God for him, and for you too."

The dear man began to shed tears, and added, in a somewhat choking voice, "My eldest daughter is happy also. She was telling me about it, when her brother brushed past us and ran upstairs to his room last night."

"The Lord has been good to you," I said, "and to your house. Look to it, for Scripture says, 'Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved, and thy house,'—all of it, mind, the servants as well. Now let me tell you about 'the sad boy,' as you call him. I have had a long interview with him. He gave me to understand that he had been more or less unhappy for months past. He told me that at the first announcement of the coming mission, three months ago, when he heard the object of it, a sudden fear fell upon him, and that he trembled, as if some sentence had been passed upon him. He tried to laugh it off, but it would not go; he went to places of amusement to divert his mind, but still he could not forget it. It hung over him as a cloud in business, and at home too."

"I have observed," said the father, "that there was something brewing, but I did not think it was like that. Poor fellow! I am afraid I maligned him, and scolded him all wrong."

"Never mind that now," I said. "I have no doubt you added to his misery, and that may have helped to deepen his convictions."

I continued, "He came on Saturday evening to the introductory sermon of the mission, and heard the words, 'Fear not, ye shall catch men.' 'There,' he said to himself, 'that is me; they are going to catch me.' He would not hear more, so went out of the meeting."

"Yes, he did," said the father, "but I did not know why. Poor fellow! I remember it was very hard to persuade him to go to church next morning, but he did."

"Yes," I continued, "he did, and more than that, thank God, light and hope began to dawn upon him; but in the evening all hope was taken away again. On Monday evening he would not venture to church, but said he felt all the worse for missing the service. Last night (Tuesday) he came again, and remained behind after the service, to be spoken with. He had an impression upon his mind that God was pursuing him with a sword to cut him down; but he found out that God is love, and that He willeth not the death of a sinner. He was going away, when I said, 'Stop a little, I have something more to say. God loves you; He so loved you that He gave his Son, that if you believe in Him, you shall not perish, but you—what is your name?—you shall have everlasting life. Why not believe this now, and at once thank God for what He has done for you? It is all done and finished; there remains nothing more to be added—not another drop of blood to be shed—your debt is paid for you. What do you say to that?' He looked perplexed, so I continued, 'The fact is, you do not believe God. The Scripture says, "All we like sheep have gone astray." Is that true?'

"'Yes, certainly it is, as far as I am concerned.'

"I added, 'We have turned every one to our own way.'

"'Yes, yes, that is true also,' he said.

"'And the Lord has laid on Him the iniquities of us all—yours as well as mine.'

"He made no reply, so I said, 'Why do you not answer? Shall I answer for you? You believe what you feel and know about yourself; but you do not believe what God says of Himself.'

"I went on to say, 'God makes here three statements upon his own veracity. Two of these you know to be true, and the other you do not. He gives you two easy steps by which you may reach the third, and so believe in Him for all three.'

"'Yes,' he said, 'I do believe.'

"'That is right, praise God.' In a moment, his face changed from perplexity to joy. He could scarcely contain himself in the church. After letting his heart out in thanksgiving, he seemed afraid, as if he had done something very wicked, to speak in the church. It was then past eleven o'clock, when I wished him good night."

"I see it all now," said the father. "I suppose the dear fellow was too full of joy, when he ran upstairs, to tell us what had happened."

"And," I added, "I expect it was out of the fulness of his heart that he wrote that letter to me, before he went to bed."

"I see my own way more clearly, too," said the father, "while you have been speaking."

"That sad boy" is transformed indeed; his life has been for years the joy of his family, and he is a kind of sunbeam in the Sunday-school, where he chiefly labours. The children are devoted to him, and the teachers look up to him for guidance.

Certain it is that grace has a transforming power, in private and in social life, as also in the sanctuary. It puts reality into every action. That once "sad boy" is now gladly going on his way to heaven, but by no means intending to go thither alone. He is continually rejoicing over others who are to be his companions here; and hereafter, will be as stars in his crown of rejoicing. A very blessed thing it is to be thus changed.

A SIX MONTHS' JOURNEY BY NATIVE MISSIONARIES.

THE following is a translation of a letter lately written in Arabic by one of the first native converts of Southern Morocco, whose conversion occurred only about seven months ago. He wrote it with the desire of communicating to his many brethren in Christ in other lands, of whom we tell him, and of whose love and prayers we assure him, the tidings of his joy and service. He is a man of great natural intelligence and tact, well educated for a native, thoroughly acquainted with the religion he has renounced, of a quiet and tender spirit, and with a refined and winning manner.

He is not an Arab, but a Shluh (a division of the Berber aborigines), from which most of our converts have been won in these few wonderful months since we were led to commit ourselves to the practice of the long-held principles and methods laid down in Matt. x. He knows both Shillah and Arabic. Musa, of whom he speaks, has been to Timbuctoo, and is willing to go again with the Gospel. These two, Musa and Abraham, expect to spend the hottest months with us in Mogador, translating parts of the New Testament into Shillah, in the Arabic character, the need of which appears from the following letter. Already friends have undertaken the financial responsibility of the printing.

May I urge to special prayer for Abraham? He bears already in his body the marks of the Lord Jesus, where "they hurt his feet with fetters." I trust he has been called of God to be the apostle to his people, the Shluh and Sous who fill the Atlas range, on whose yet unexplored and scarce visited slopes are the several groups of native believers, of whom the letter tells. May he be to these vast and populous tribes what Ko-Thah-byn was to the Karens of Burmah!

I will only mention further that this letter well merits publicity and perusal from the fact that it is a succinct record of, as far as I know, the first modern missionary journey taken in definite and intelligent obedience to the directions of Matt. x. Let its success commend it. Its beginning preceded by some weeks our own first attempt to embody these methods in the "Missionary Journey according to Matt. x.," the story of which has already appeared in these columns. The quiet faith and prompt obedience of this chosen vessel left us no alternative but to follow where Christ and his disciples and now Abraham, the Soosie, led. E. F. BALDWIN.

In the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost.

From Abraham Ben Mohammed, the Soosie, to the gathered ones, brethren, the Christians everywhere, the holy ones in our Lord Jesus, the Christ, the Good Shepherd, the Faithful Keeper: grace and peace upon you from God the Father and the Lord Jesus Christ. Know you that this peace is not from us, but upon us, and upon you, and upon all Christians in all the earth.

I wish to acquaint you with my conversion (from Mohammedanism) to the right way, in which is salvation and eternal life and cleansing from impurity. I was in Larache with Miss Caley,* who gave me a Gospel of Mark (in Arabic), and I read it. And again, they gave me also a Gospel of John. I read, and my faith grew, but I did not fully believe in them until after eight months, when I arrived in Mogador, at the house of Mr. Baldwin, the preacher of the word of the Lord, and he exceedingly helped me concerning the way. I then fully believed and rejoiced in the salvation from sin, and was baptized of him in Mogador. Then I ascended to Morocco city,† where was my home, and preached to men there. One of them, by name Musa, believed. He had had a Gospel before I spoke to him. He believed, and was baptized by me, and began to preach in Morocco city.

There was there a girl of eight years, who had had the fever a year, and they had found no remedy. We prayed over her. She was healed in the name of the Lord, and in that hour the fever left her. When one there, by name Abderraham, saw this, he also believed and his house. I then returned again to Mogador and helped Mr. Baldwin in preaching the word of the Lord, and men in that city were baptized by Mr. Baldwin and me.

After not many days we counselled together about my going forth with another native Christian to proclaim the glad tidings. Then all the members of the church fasted and laid their hands on us. We embarked in a steamer and landed at Casa Blanca. We left there without money, or a bag, or food for the journey, as spake the Lord Jesus. The people nourished us without our asking anything from them. If we needed aught, we prayed concerning it, and so received it. One whom we met with, to whom we spake concerning the way, believed while still in the road. We continued with him until we came to his country in Tadla, where he was baptized of us. We remained there perhaps twenty-five days, and baptized there also many men in the River Morbea. We gathered in the house of the first believer, Abdsalaam Ben Aka, on the first day of the week, and observed the Lord's Supper.

It may be that the ancestors of this people were Christians, because, when they wish to pray the prayers of Mohammedanism, they place a sword before them. This they do, not every day, but on the day of the mosque (Friday). The meaning of the sword is that the religion of Mohammed was received by them at the sword's point; by force, not by their will. Therefore, when the Gospel appeared to them they rejoiced and received it. Abdsalaam Ben Aka, who was an old man, told me that their forefathers searched much for the book of the Gospel of Christ.

When I went to another region, I found there a Shluh, whose language was not Arabic but Shillah, and he heard from me the word of Jesus the Christ, and rejoiced, and knew it was the truth, because they have in his country a cave, with an inscription in Hebrew cut in the rock, that Jesus, the Christ, is the Good Shepherd. He said I must go to his country. He wrote for me its name, Shakran, and his tribe, Ait Yacob.

After not many days my fellow-labourer and I arrived there, and read to them from the Gospel, and there believed and were baptized of them that one and several others. We were with them eight days, when we left, and preached the word of the Lord in the Shluh mountains, until we reached the coasts of Mequinez. There we separated, agreeing to meet in Fez at Miss Herdman's. I ascended a high mountain in the coasts of Fez and spoke to the men there. But they took me and put me in irons, and deprived me of my clothes and books, and imprisoned me nine days. I passed every day in prayer, and after those days there came one of them and unfastened the irons and told me to go.

I went to Fez, but found my friend had returned, when I did not come in the time fixed. I saw there Miss Herdman and two other Christian women, preaching the word of salvation. I helped them, and remained about eight days. I baptized one man there. I left with some Shluhs living in the coasts of Fez. I spoke to them, and three of them believed, and were baptized by me in a tank filled from a spring. After a little I returned again with them to Fez, that they might know where Miss Herdman lived.

From Fez I went to Kasbah Sidi Kassam, between Fez and Rabat. At night I was speaking with the people, and there came to me a man, a Christian, one of those I had baptized in Shakran. He was travelling to Tangier, wishing to find someone who could translate for him the book of the Gospel into their language. He informed me that many men of his region came to them and inquired of them how there can be salvation in this world before the judgment. But they could not read to them from the Gospel in Arabic, which I gave them. When I was with them I had read to them from Arabic, and translated into Shillah. He returned with me to Rabat, to the house of the preacher, Doctor Kerr,* where we remained eighteen days, until I had translated the Gospels of Matthew and John for him. Then he returned to his country, taking the translation with him.

I received from Musa a letter, saying that he had left (been banished from) Morocco city, and was preaching in Dimnath. He wrote me that there were now there many Christians, and so also in Morocco city.† But some had been taken by the Government and put into prison for not a long time, when they were released.

After these things, Mr. Baldwin sent me a letter to come to him in Casa Blanca. Here I found him and Mr. Martin and two native Christians preaching the word of the Lord. Great numbers come to them, both Moors and Jews. I am helping them.

I beseech you, O brethren, pray much for me, that faith may increase in my heart abundantly, and that God will help me in my preaching; and so also I pray for all Christians, because we are brethren. The time has been six months since I left my home.

ABRAHAM BEN MOHAMMED, THE SOOSIE.

* This is the late lamented Miss Constance Caley, of the North Africa Mission. The Gospel of John of which the letter speaks, and which was much worn with constant reading, was sent by me as a souvenir to Miss Caley's relatives.

† He left at once after his baptism, and only thus avoided arrest. Two other of the native converts were that day apprehended, but were also released that night in answer to prayer.

* I wish to acknowledge the exceeding kindness of Dr. Kerr, English Presbyterian medical missionary in Rabat, and of the devoted Miss Herdman, of the North Africa Mission, at Fez, to our "Matt. x." native preachers on different occasions.

† I ought to state that in Abraham's Arabic letter, of which this is a translation, and in the letter of Musa referred to above, the number of believers in Dimnath and Morocco city is mentioned, as is also the number baptized by Abraham in the river Morbea and at Shakran. But it seemed wise, in giving publicity to a translation, to leave these figures unmentioned, at all events until I shall have had opportunity of visiting these distant groups of believers. E. F. B.

GORBAL'S CROSS, GLASGOW. — Gorbal's Mission (writes a correspondent) is being carried forward by a hearty band of workers, and much blessing attends their labours. About eighteen months ago the workers started operations in the National Halls, Main-street, which accommodates about 700 people; it is filled to its utmost capacity with most attentive audiences. During the warm summer months, it is purposed to have a tent. The president of the Mission, Mr. F. Dickie, 6, Buchan-street, Gorbal's, Glasgow, will be glad to hear from any friend who can lend or hire a tent.

EMIGRATION.—On Thursday night, last week, from Mr. F. N. Charrington's Great Assembly Hall, Mile End, E., the fourth batch of emigrants this season left for Euston, en route for Canada. They consisted principally of those who were going to friends formerly sent out by Mr. Charrington, and who are now doing well in Canada. After supper, 'busses conveyed them to Euston, where a special train was provided by the London and North-Western Railway. Mr. E. H. Kerwin and Sir Morville Wraxall, Bart., accompanied them to Liverpool, and saw them embark on the Lake Ontario, of the Beaver Line.

A New Missionary Order.

[The following is the letter referred to last week, at the end of Mr. Radcliffe's article.]

IN the face of the world's seven or eight hundred millions of heathen, the handful of missionaries whom the Christian Church has sent to succour them is ridiculous, shameful, sinful. We are beginning to feel this, and to wake up to the fact that hitherto we have been but playing at missions; that it is high time to be serious, and that instead of ones and twos, hundreds of missionaries must go forth.

But to be practical, what prospect is there of any such increase at the present cost of missionaries? Our societies, for the most part, tell us they can barely maintain the existing agencies, nay, some are actually—(I am ashamed to write it, but it is true) actually retrenching! There is no doubt God's people can, and must, and will, give far more than they have done. Still, there is no possibility of meeting the world's need on the existing lines alone. Evidently, there must arise a new order of missionaries. (A beginning has already been made in some places.)

Alongside of this fact, place another fact. Without reflecting upon the good work which is being done by our various missions, the task of witnessing to the heathen is so stupendous, and so difficult, that there is wide room and urgent need for a new order of missionaries, who will dwell amongst the people, live as they live, and be unencumbered with goods and money. I do not say, neither do I think, that all missionaries are called to live in this way, but that there is plenty of room for such an order of missionaries, and that they would be a most valuable addition to the present staff, needs no saying.

To my mind these two facts, complementary to each other, deserve at this time our most serious thought. I believe God's children at home do not know how little it costs to live in China. I am not writing what I do not know. I say, first, that £100 a year* would support two missionaries, or a married couple dwelling in a native house, wearing the native dress, but living in foreign style, simply and comfortably. This would include the wages of two servants and the salary of a teacher of the language; £20 a year would provide for two children. Secondly, £50 will support a bachelor, living comfortably in native house and style, allowing for a servant and a teacher, also living on the premises for convenience. Ladies in ordinary health could live at the same rate. Thirdly, £25 a year will support a missionary living really simply, and in thoroughly native style, but providing him with abundance of wholesome food, good clothes, and a tidy little house. This includes the wages and keep of an intelligent man to act as teacher and help. Female missionaries in health, who have been accustomed to do the work of the house at home, could live on the same scale, which I call that of "the new order of missionaries." To these amounts must be added, passage from London to Shanghai, £33 17s. 3d., P. and O. second class; in European dress first-class travelling is compulsory. Journey from Shanghai to interior, £5 and £7 each; foreign dress, £15. Outfit to be got in Shanghai from £5 to £10 each; furniture and books, from £7 to £30 for two. Itinerating costs 2s. 6d. a day extra, including a sedan-chair and coolie to carry your things; 1s. a day for a coolie, but no chair.

These figures refer to the interior of China, more particularly to the Sz-chuen province. Ten per cent. must be added if living near the coast; twenty per cent. where there are foreign houses. The "new order" might leave their belongings at a central home conducted on the £100 and £50 a year scale of missionaries; thither they might also repair for rest and change. The sums named do not include extraordinary requirements, such as during sickness; something may be needed for carrying on the work, but experience shows that to have much money to give away, or for the foreigner to employ many native agents, is a direct hindrance to real success. Some would say that, however desirable, these plans cannot be acted upon. We often do not know what can be done till we try. There are people, I know, whose appetite flees at the sight of a pair of chopsticks, and who can in no wise sit down to dinner without a tablecloth. Some perhaps really cannot take to Chinese food and Chinese ways, though they do try. But these are the exceptions. As a rule, those who are serious in the matter would soon get over their prejudices, and settle down in the new life quite comfortably. As regards health, my own conviction is that, instead of dying off rapidly, the "new order," if they itinerated as they should, would stand at the top of the list in China.

It is true that English roast-beef and plum-pudding must be laid aside in favour of the more wholesome rice and bread and vegetables, and that instead of lighting a fire in winter, you must put on an extra coat. And that is about all it really amounts to. My own health has not been so good for many years as it has been lately whilst living simply in Chinese fashion. Some people fail, because they do not begin simply enough. If every meal is a Chinese feast, no wonder they cannot stand it very long! But, supposing your health does suffer, is that quite conclusive against it? It may be worth while to suffer. I am not sure that he who has lived five or ten years among the natives will not in reality have lived longer than the man who has spent fifteen or twenty years in the ordinary way. And entering into rest a little sooner should not be of much account to the Christian.

And now to be practical. The question is, WHO WILL COME? Will you? And will you send one, or two, or twenty, or more? Our brethren and sisters might come out connected with some society or not, as the Lord leads them. In any case, the missionaries already in the field would gladly and thankfully help them in starting. Men could begin at once living in an inn with a teacher. Women should at first stay with sister missionaries. The cost of living in an inn, including two meals a day, is ten shillings a month. And it is sufficiently comfortable. My own plans are just now uncertain; but, if in the interior, I should be rejoiced to do anything in my power to welcome new missionaries. Who will come? Some are waiting for a "call." If China were a Christian country such as England, and if there were in China as many thousands of ministers and Christian workers as there are in England, China's need would THEN be about fifteen times as great as England's. What it is NOW, as a heathen country, with a proportion of perhaps one (experienced) worker amongst a million souls, I am unable to calculate. IS NOT THAT A "CALL"? Had I waited for any other, I should not have been in China to-day.

I am quite sure, too, of this, that, if we are indeed sorry for our past neglect, and mean now, at last, to be faithful to God and to our trust, many real excuses (and whole hosts of fancied ones), which are keeping God's servants back, will have to be quietly but firmly shelved, and many of those who have settled down comfortably, in the idea that their home ties, or home work, preclude their coming, and that they are called to stay at home, will have to wake up, or else be put to shame by seeing others coming forward, whose reasons for staying in England are a hundredfold more cogent than their own. The fact is, we do not in the least realise the urgency of this other call—the paramount, the overwhelming urgency of the heathen's need, which stares us in the face, though, alas! we see it not—a need from which, if only we did see it, nothing, nothing but the distinct leading of God, would turn us aside. Yet with many, even earnest Christians, some small excuse is considered a sufficiently good reason for ignoring it, so far as they themselves personally are concerned! (Oh, if this is God's word, may He use my pen!) And possessors of titles—why is it that to a man, they feel themselves excused? Men of title go abroad for pleasure, and for worldly gain. Why not for Christ? Titles are not divine, but this—the command of God—is. Oh, take care, take care, how we set it aside!

But are not "special gifts" required? No, that is all nonsense. At the same time, remember, the man who is no use at home will be worse than no use in China. And most seriously do I say it—Count the cost. Know what you are doing. The missionary calling is no child's play. Are you content, with Jesus, to be a pilgrim and a stranger on the earth? Are you prepared to endure hardness as a good soldier of Jesus Christ in the enemy's country? And will you patiently continue in well-doing, in spite of many disappointments, and rebuffs, and difficulties? Above all, do you love? And can you, for Christ's sake, love those who at first may seem repulsive to you? If you are not prepared for trials and temptations such as perhaps you have never known at home, the life in China may strike you with blank dismay, and possibly end in complete discomfiture. But those who know their God, and who come weak in themselves but strong in Him—the indwelling Saviour—to do and to suffer and to win, will find Him here as everywhere, their faithful God, and to them there will be much of pleasant and thankful surprise.

"Lovest thou Me?" "If ye love Me, keep my commandments." "Whosoever he be of you that forsaketh not all that he hath, he cannot be my disciple." (But) "Verily I say unto you, there is no man that hath left house, or brethren, or sisters, or father, or mother, or wife, or children, or lands, for my sake and the Gospel's, but he shall receive a hundred-fold more in this time, houses, and brethren, and sisters, and mothers, and children, and lands, with persecutions; and in the world to come eternal life." "And, lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world." Remember these are the words of Jesus your Master. Now then—for Jesus' sake, and in his companionship and keeping, into China, into India, into Africa, into Persia, into Palestine, into all the world—who will come? Will you? Will you?

COLPORTAGE IN IRELAND.

SPRINGING into being in the ever-memorable year 1859, the Bible and Colportage Society of Ireland has carried on a good work ever since. The great need for such a Society has been abundantly demonstrated, and the admirable manner in which the Society supplies the need is increasingly recognised. Though the people have a reasonable desire for reading matter, there are large numbers of towns and villages without good book shops; consequently, the colporteur finds in all directions an open door and a hearty welcome.

An encouraging report was read at the annual meeting, held a few days ago in Dublin. Proceeding on undenominational lines, the Society does much to counteract the traffic in debasing literature, by setting up book agencies in remote villages and towns where they are specially required. At present 170 such agents have been appointed in nineteen counties, scattered over the four provinces. The extent of the work may be judged from the fact that during last year the Society's receipts for Bibles, books, and periodicals, amounted to £7,296.

In the most unsettled parts of the country, the colporteurs continue to go about their work without interruption, and blessing has attended their labour. The secretary of the Society is Rev. John Elliott, Armagh.

For the Young.

IT IS TIME.

It is time to be brave. It is time to be true.
It is time to be finding the thing you can do.
It is time to put by the dream and the sigh,
And work for the cause that is holy and high.

It is time to be kind. It is time to be sweet,
To be scattering roses for somebody's feet.
It is time to be sowing. It is time to be growing.
It is time for the flowers of life to be blowing.

It is time to be lowly and humble of heart.
It is time for the lilies of meekness to start;
For the heart to be white, and the steps to be right,
And the hands to be weaving a garment of light.

FARTHINGS AND SHILLINGS.

As an illustration of how children's "mites" may become of great use in the service of God, Mr. W. E. Jones, of the Mission of Love, Gay-street, Liverpool, sends 12s. for Mr. Baldwin's work amongst the people of Morocco, N. Africa, and says:—This money has been collected at our Sunday-school, and was received in farthings and halfpennies from barefooted and bareheaded children, in the darkest and most squalid part of Liverpool. It is our custom for Foreign Missions to be specially laid before our Sunday-school.

A CONGO BOY'S LETTER.

Through the kindness of Miss L. Guinness, editor of Regions Beyond, we are enabled to reproduce in fac-simile a letter written by Bompole, a Congo lad who has been at Harley House for over a year, and whom some of our young readers may have seen. The letter appears in the May issue of Regions Beyond. In a little article on Bompolé the editor writes:—

"Rather more than twelve months ago Bompole landed in England; his Congo home left far behind him, and his little heart feeling 'very fyten,' at the strange surroundings in which he found himself. To his companions, Mr. McKittrick and M'Teva (a lower Congo lad), English was familiar, but to Bompole our tongue was utterly unintelligible. He 'thought language very funny to speak—like music. Couldn't understand.' And when he arrived at Harley House he was 'Very fyten at first! So big house, many people. Never eat with white man before, feel shame to eat breakfast; shamed when we went to church, so many people looking at me.' It was certainly a trying ordeal! Our barbarous climate and our strange machinery were equally perplexing to his Central African mind. We shall not soon forget his grave, 'What time this chimney will finish?' apropos of a London fog; or the solemn 'I think—wonderful!' of which he delivered himself, after standing awe-struck in front of the big timepiece, reverently watching for about five minutes the slow advance of the hands of the clock.

"'I think wonderful!—like sun!'

"'Why like the sun, Bompole?'

"'Because—goes slowly!' This in a rather frightened voice, he being evidently impressed by the gradual continuous motion, imperceptible to the eye, except by the distance measured. When the clock struck the hour the little black face beamed, and M'Teva told us that 'he like the song!'

"But all that was a year ago; Bompole is familiar with English now, and accustomed to our ways and doings. He is, moreover, about to return to the Congo, and, in view of his approaching departure, he wished, through these pages, to say good-bye to the very numerous friends whom he has made in Great Britain and Ireland. To secure this end he has, with infinite trouble, composed, dictated, and copied out in his own handwriting, the letter which appears on another page. Ah, that letter! What pains, and care, and patience it represents! What a sense of crushing responsibility weighing on two certain small, black shoulders during the anxious process of its production, and what a sense of glad exuberance overflowing a certain small and happy heart when at last the tremendous task was completed! Perhaps we shall hardly be believed when we say that Bompole—all unknown to us—laboured at copying that letter from 5 p.m. till 1 a.m. Bompole, understanding that it was to appear in that all-important magazine, Regions Beyond, and that his words would be scattered far and wide, the very shape of each letter being perpetuated, was so overwhelmed with a sense of the magnitude of his task that he could neither eat nor sleep for about ten hours, and went without his tea, explaining briefly to those who suggested the advisability of taking food, 'When I have so much work to do I cannot eat.'"

March 7. Harley House

My dear Friends

I have been here so long time, one year in England. I think England very good to stay, big houses kind people but a little cold to stay in England. Now I going back to my Country, like going home, like seeing friends and people. Tell what I see in England, what I never see before If God will helps me I will do teaching My people. I thank those people Who are giving money for Missionaries to teach the gospel to. My people My people Want gospel very much, many people, my Country, many large town one King, Ekonga, send messenger to Mr McKittrick. said. "Do send Missionaries to build Station my place." Mr McKittrick send back to say "Have no Missionaries to send." I Want to see that King He said same thing, "We Want some missionaries teaching us. Build station here. Be my friends."

I am so glad so many missionaries going back with me; and I want you to send more & more to teach Gospel to dark, heathen Africa goodbye, from your dark friend

NOTES FROM CAMBRIDGE.

ON Sunday and Monday last sermons were preached and public meetings were held on behalf of the Church Missionary Society, which were characterised by great earnestness on the part of speakers and hearers. The question of foreign missions is well to the front in Christian circles in both University and town. A rather interesting complaint was made to me privately, by one well qualified to judge, to the effect that "C.M.S. men are too modest; they do not fully record in public the measure of success that God gives them. It is due to their supporters as a source of encouragement that where success is given it should be recorded, though, of course, without exaggeration." It is certainly gratifying to know that in many cases more is being done than the modesty of the missionary will allow him to narrate; it is a token of healthy spiritual life that he should thus understate the facts.

An interesting gathering of University men was held at Ridley Hall on Saturday night, when, at the invitation of Rev. H. C. G. Moule, the Rev. A. J. Shields gave an account of seven years' labour among the Santhals. Mr. Shields was the first representative that Ridley Hall sent forth to the foreign field. His narrative was simple but very telling, and especially touching when he related how, in the midst of occasional depression at the slow progress achieved, a feeling of renewed strength would come upon him, accompanied by a strong conviction that someone was praying for him. Christians at home may accomplish much by thus bearing up those at work in the distant corners of the Master's vineyard.

On Sunday the Bishop of Lichfield preached to a large audience of members of the University a thoroughly practical sermon from 1 Tim. i. 13, 14, and pleaded for a more self-denying and devoted representation of what the Christian life should be on the part of the Church at large.

Some pain has been excited amongst the evangelical men by the intimation sent to the Rev. J. Barton, of Trinity Church, by the Bishop of Ely, that he disapproves of the observance of the Lord's Supper in the evening. A memorial is being prepared representing to the Bishop that to a large proportion of the communicants the custom is both convenient and congenial, and it is hoped that no step will be taken to prevent its continuance.

Mr. J. B. Reynolds, an American graduate, is at Cambridge for a few days, to secure delegates from the University to attend Mr. Moody's Summer School at Northfield, for British and American University men. It is expected that each British University will be well represented.

A good deal of open-air work is being carried on by the evangelical men, and this has emulated a more or less friendly rivalry on the part of the High Church section who have inaugurated a similar movement under the title of "The Guild of St. John." The Church Army and Salvation Army are also in strong force.

The Romish "Church of our Lady and the English Martyrs"—a magnificent structure, costing, it is said, £90,000—is now fast approaching completion. One would have thought that the less reference Rome makes to the English martyrs the better, especially at Cambridge, whose sons made so noble a witness against her teaching and practices. The presence of such a building at Cambridge may prove a dangerous element in the Romanising of many of the coming generation of English Churchmen. Christian parents whose sons enter the University may well cry to God for them to be delivered from falling into this snare of the fowler.

M. A. ST. JOHN.

CONVENTION AT BOURNEMOUTH.

A SERIES of special meetings, extending over three days, and presided over by Captain Dawson, president of the local Y.M.C A., were held at Bournemouth last week. Addresses on the "Spiritual Life" were given by Revs. George C. Grubb and F. B. Meyer. On each occasion —afternoon and evening—the floor of the Shaftesbury Hall was well filled.

The addresses were simple, yet forcible, and, as the various points were clearly stated and earnestly pressed home, it was evident that the listeners were deeply moved, and that the word was being received in a responsive spirit. This was the case in a very marked degree on the second evening, when Mr. Meyer, speaking on the various stages of the spiritual life, commencing with the first steps—the New Birth and Full Assurance—passed on to those of the Surrendered Life and Will, of Victory over Sin, and the Filling of the Holy Spirit. The Bible-readings of Mr. Grubb were peculiarly fresh and forcible, and were well followed by Mr. Meyer's intimate application of the truths to each individual conscience and heart.

The concluding meeting (at which Mr. Grubb was the only speaker, Mr. Meyer having left) was one of great power. At its close, the young men were invited to stay to a short after-meeting. Fully sixty remained, when, after a few words from Captain Dawson and Mr. Grubb, the larger proportion engaged in prayer, earnest, but brief petitions being offered up without intermission for a period of about twenty minutes. On reviewing the meetings, it is felt that they were times of deep heart-searching, when many were moved to heart-surrender and fuller consecration to the Lord and his work, and when some also were led to trust Him for the salvation of their souls.

CORRECTION.—We must correct a mistake made in The Daily Chronicle report of the birthday meeting of General Booth. It stated that amongst the donations was one of £100 from the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN. It should have been given as from "A Reader of THE CHRISTIAN."

PARIS THEATRICALS.—The Paris Exhibition has brought into the French capital a large number of employés of all nationalities; and the work commenced by the Theatrical Mission two years ago amongst French actors and actresses is still being carried on with vigour. Special letters for distribution, in French and Italian, have been prepared. Mr. and Mrs. Courthope Todd will be glad again to receive from those interested in soul-saving work on the Continent, text-books or cards, leaflets, hymns, &c., in foreign languages. These, given with a few kind words, have touched the hearts of many who, until lately, felt utterly forsaken. The address of the Mission is Macready House, Henrietta-street, Covent Garden.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For blessing on a mission being conducted by Messrs. Middleton and Hogben at Whitefield's Tabernacle, Tottenham Court-road, W.C.——For blessing on two weeks' meetings, May 12 to 26, at St. Michael's Mission-hall, Tynecastle, Edinburgh, conducted by Mr. M. E. Steedman.——For blessing on a mission among the soldiers this month at Sandgate, conducted by Mr. Whiting, of the Evangelisation Society.——For blessing on special meetings at Pontymoile, for factory girls, conducted by Mr. R. Cory.——That many souls may be led to Christ through Mr. James Jones's special services at Pontnewydd and neighbourhood.——Mrs. Fisher requests earnest prayer for special service by Messrs. Fullerton and Smith for young women and friends, on May 21, at eight o'clock, in the Lecture Hall of Y.M.C.A., 186, Aldersgate-street, E.C.——For tent services being held till May 31, in connection with the Cage-lane Mission, Plumstead, S.E. ——For blessing on the efforts of the Open-air Gospel Mission at Exeter, during the summer. ——For Miss E. Jane Whately, who is still suffering from prostration, consequent upon the recent death of her sister, Miss M. L. Whately, of the British Schools at Cairo.

THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC IN HAVRE.

BY THE HON. LADY BEAUCHAMP.

OF this town, close to our own shores, where thousands of British seamen come every year, the French authorities are obliged to acknowledge that it has the unenviable notoriety of standing second on the list for consumption of spirits. They talk of legislation in order to remedy the evil, but meanwhile are we to wait with folded hands till that ponderous machinery is set in motion? Is it not possible to combine together and make a start at once with some place of protection for our fellow-countrymen when they are ashore in that crowded and drunken city, with its 120,000 inhabitants? Can we blame our sailors for patronising the liquor traffic, when we, who are enjoying all our Christian privileges at home, have never thought of giving them a place where they can rendezvous and spend a few hours ashore without degrading themselves by patronising the liquor bars?

Last year this subject weighed heavily on our hearts. A short statement of facts appeared in THE CHRISTIAN proving what ravages the drink traffic was inflicting on our seamen both in body and soul. Seeing literally the deadly effects of drink on our sailors, we resolved to make an experiment in our Sailors' Home of a tiny temperance bar. It was appreciated by our boarders, and they encouraged us to launch out into a larger and more public one, it being impossible for us to get more accommodation in the Home. Soon after this several of the worst boarding and drink houses were offered to us on lease, the owners declaring that the Sailors' Home was getting the greater part of the sailors when paid off. It was not till last month that a really suitable place presented itself on one of the principal quays close to the Sailors' Home and almost facing the harbour. Much will have to be done to adapt it to the needs of a coffee-bar. We must make the Café Danemark, which a few weeks ago was pushing the liquor traffic, as bright and attractive as possible, and thus, with God's help, endeavour to allure our men away from the brilliant cafés, concert-rooms, and theatres which abound in this sailors' quarter.

The ultimate object of all will be to seek to lead those who are "alone in a foreign land" to know and enjoy the pardoning love and power of God. In order to carry this out we hope to get the services of a missionary who will work between the Sailors' Home and the Temperance Bar, and also in the streets round the Home, where so many sailors are found in dangerous proximity to the houses with every sort of device to get them in "to have a drink." The missionary's wife will be most valuable in visiting these places with her husband, for while he is seeking the sailors she will try and get at the English girls, who are so often engaged in the cafés in order to draw the poor besotted sailor deeper down into the pits of destruction.

All this additional work will, of course, call for considerably increased outlay. Prayer has been answered in our having obtained this bright and desirable café, which henceforth will be known as "The Sailors' Welcome." We ask your readers to unite with us in praise, and we ask again for their prayers that hearts may be inclined to help forward the work. We should like to open the Temperance Bar at once. Who will come to our help?

THE LATE MISS SARAH DAVIES,

"Birds' Nest," Dublin.

FOR forty years Miss SARAH DAVIES, whose decease we recently chronicled, was a devoted worker for Christ in Ireland. Her principal sphere was in connection with the well-known "Birds' Nest" Home for destitute children, Dublin, with which the name of Mrs. Smyly has so long been honourably associated.

Born in 1830, and converted to God at the age of eight, even in her youth, while enjoying the comforts of an English home, Sarah Davies longed to be engaged in missionary work in Ireland. At the age of nineteen her way began to open, and she went to live with Mrs. Smyly; first she helped in the education of Mrs. Smyly's children, afterwards devoting herself to active mission work. The "Birds' Nest" was ever specially near her heart, and by the use of her facile pen she did much to make it known among the friends of Christian effort in Ireland.

In a little book, entitled, "The Grass of the Field," which she wrote shortly before her death, Miss Davies tells how she was led into mission work in the Sister Isle. Just after the famine, as things were beginning to mend, there was still much need, and she received letters imploring help which she could not render. She wrote to a Sunday-school in England where her name was known, and the facts she communicated excited practical sympathy. Other Sunday-schools were also written to, and one of the letters was copied by English friends, and sent to several magazines, with very encouraging results.

Thus was opened a department of work which would to some have been quite a life occupation. But with Miss Davies it was only one of many lines of endeavour in the cause of God and humanity. In answer to her appeals parcels of clothing arrived in large numbers from England, and were stored in a room of the "Birds' Nest" set apart for the purpose. In that room a great work of sorting and apportionment for town and country went on for a considerable period. She wrote at one time:—"More than 1500 children look to our workroom as the storehouse of God's providence." The following incident of the work is worth preserving:—

One Saturday I was sorting things in my workroom, when I found three pairs of small house-shoes. "They would be of no use to ragged people," I thought; but then I pictured to myself three children of a widow, and, feeling sure they would fit, I sent for her. She just gazed at them. "They are exactly right," she said; "but how did you know we wanted them?" "I did not know." Then she said, "My eldest little girl wanted a pair very much, and I had been saving up the money to buy them. When I had nearly enough, I told her I would soon have them. The little one looked rather serious, as if she were thinking of something very near her heart." "How much will they cost?" she asked. "Half-a-crown," said the mother. "Half-a-crown!" thought the little one; "it would be nice to put such a big sum into the China Missionary box. Mother," she said, "my old boots are not very bad, and the holes won't matter in the house; may I wear them, and give the money?" So the half-crown was gladly dropped into God's treasury, and it was written "in the book of remembrance."

(From Photograph by Mr. J. Maclardy, Church-street, Oswestry.)

The three little sisters rejoiced in God's gift of house-shoes for many a day.

Among the characteristics of Miss Davies's life was her great love for the Bible. She rejoiced in God's Word, and made it her constant study. She was a winning teacher, and, while her health allowed, she found great delight in conducting a large class of infants on Sunday mornings, afterwards given up for other work. Her classes at the "Birds' Nest" will not soon be forgotten. Visitors from all parts retain a lively remembrance of her mission meetings, so full of blessing and such precious seasons of refreshing from the presence of God. Erin's Hope, a small quarterly magazine, written by her, was a very useful periodical. She dictated the January issue to a young friend, her strength having so failed that writing wearied her.

It was on February 27 that she entered into rest, after a short illness. As she was unable to speak, there were no "last words," but in her desk a farewell letter was found, in which she said:—

Jesus has been my friend for fifty-one years. His friendship grows more real and sweet year by year. I have firm hold of his hand, or rather He has firm hold of mine, as I dip the first foot in the river. "His love to me is wonderful."

To the very last she made the Master's business her chief joy. God and his poor engaged attention even while pain and weakness were present. Among high and low alike she is sorely missed, now that she rests from her labours.

For the information of Miss Davies's many correspondents and friends, Mrs. Smyly drew up a circular letter giving some particulars of her last days on earth. She says:—

We thank God upon every remembrance of her, when we think of her wonderful life, so full of love and service. Though seldom able of late to leave her own room, yet her influence was felt far around. What she was to us in this house (which she called her Irish home) we never can express. As we look around, everything speaks to us of her loving, unselfish, thoughtful care. For forty years she has been our loving friend and counsellor, and even now, as questions arise in our minds that need to be decided upon, our first thought is to ask her advice.

Mrs. Smyly concludes by commending to practical sympathy the "Birds' Nest" work, to which Miss Davies gave her life and energy. In concluding this brief notice, we would re-echo Mrs. Smyly's remark that no more suitable memorial could be raised to a noble life than a still further development of the institution which, by constraint of the love of Christ, she did so much to make increasingly useful in the cause of God.

BILLINGSGATE CHRISTIAN MISSION.—The monthly evangelistic service of this Mission was held last Tuesday, when an address was given by Dr. Harry Guinness. We are glad to hear that the new Mission premises opposite Billingsgate Market, so much needed, are already in course of erection.

"MAY MEETINGS."

The Christian Lifeboat Crew.

Two happy and profitable meetings were held on May 7, at Eccleston Hall, in connection with this confraternity of saved workers. A number of seamen from Miss Child's "Welcome Home," Ratcliff-highway, and from other places, with many friends and well-wishers, filled the platform. Mr. J. E. Mathieson presided in the afternoon, and Mr. Reginald Radcliffe in the evening. The testimonies borne by the seamen formed an interesting feature in both meetings; their declarations of God's power to preserve and uphold amid the peculiar trials of their calling was very strengthening to the faith of the believer. Warm commendations were uttered as to the "Welcome Home"; one sailor declared he would rather stay at Miss Child's "Welcome Home" than at the Victoria Hotel, which he had just passed on his way to Eccleston Hall, for, he said, "At Miss Child's Home I am in a Christian household with kind friends to help me on the heavenward way."

Miss Child gave a short account at both meetings of the work committed to her care; and other helpers spoke of the temperance work, the free suppers to destitute sailors, and the wide distribution of Gospel books and Christian literature. Addresses were delivered by Mr. George Holland, Dr. McKilliam, Mr. W. H. Seagram, Mr. Turner, and Miss Tuck.

Earnest prayer was made before the meetings for God's blessing on the work, and that Mr. Blaauw, if still alive, may be speedily restored to his sorrowing wife and friends.

United Kingdom Band of Hope Union.

The United Kingdom Band of Hope Union celebrated its thirty-fourth anniversary on Wednesday, last week. After a day spent in conference, delegates being present from far and near, a public meeting was held in Exeter Hall, Mr. George Williams, president of the Union, in the chair. Mr. Charles Wakely, secretary, read a very encouraging report. The numerical increase has been well maintained; according to the most recent returns, there are in the United Kingdom 14,619 Bands of Hope and other Juvenile Temperance Societies, with a membership of 1,799,698 young people, who receive instruction calculated to assist them in becoming good and useful men and women. Under the scheme for extending temperance knowledge among children attending public elementary schools, seven qualified lecturers have been engaged, and the consent of leading school boards for the delivery of lectures has been obtained. The Band of Hope movement has been considerably developed in the colonies during the year. While rejoicing at such progress, the committee painfully realise the great need there is for unwearying endeavour in disseminating temperance principles among the young.

Rev. Robert Culley, secretary of the Wesleyan Temperance Committee, delivered a hearty address, enforcing the great importance of Band of Hope work. He was followed by Rev. J. Grant Mills, who dwelt upon the sad condition of children who, through parental folly, inherit a passion for alcoholic liquors, and consequently come in for a legacy of woe. Having urged fathers and mothers to set a good example in the matter of temperance, he called attention to the last chapter of the book of Proverbs, in which the model wife and mother is so beautifully described, it being said of the virtuous mother, "Her children rise up, and call her blessed."

Mr. James Guthrie, of Brechin, made a vigorous speech, in which he told of the beneficial effects of Sunday closing in Scotland. He maintained that it is the duty of Christian people to enter their practical protest against drunkenness, by abstaining from that which produces it. Speaking of the spread of temperance principles in ministerial circles in Scotland, he said that of 89 students in the Free Church Theological Hall, Glasgow, all but one are abstainers.

Rev. J. Jackson Wray also spoke, pledging himself to unrelenting warfare against the drink demon. The proceedings were enthusiastic throughout, and a petition to Parliament in favour of Sunday closing was adopted with acclamation. A choir of 500 voices, senior members of Bands of Hope, rendered in admirable style a selection of melodies during the evening.

Navvy Mission.

This Society held its London annual meeting in the Vicarage-room, Kensington. The Hon. and Rev. E. Carr-Glyn presided, and spoke of the useful and necessary work being done amongst the navvies of our land, their wives and children. The report of the past year was read by the secretary, showing that during the year eighteen mission stations have been closed owing to the completion of the works, and twenty new centres opened. This does not include the Manchester Ship Canal missions.

The Bishop of Marlborough, in the course of an interesting address, told many incidents of the kindness and gratitude of this class, among whom he had worked, and he hoped God's blessing would continue to rest upon the Society. The Hon. and Rev. R. Grimston spoke of his work amongst the 14,000 navvies on the Manchester Ship Canal. Six villages of wooden huts have sprung up. Twelve mission-halls have been erected by Mr. Walker, the contractor, who has now eleven missionaries on the canal, one chaplain, three wooden hospitals with accommodation for about twenty people each, with all appliances, trained matron, house surgeon, nurses, resident in the building, coffee-rooms, &c. Mr. Grimston gave good testimony to the work of the Society in other parts. Rev. C. H. Bickersteth said the value of this Mission is felt in isolated districts where the clergy could not or would not undertake any extra spiritual work. The aim of the Society is to carry the Gospel to the 90,000 navvies throughout the country.

Mrs. Sleight, 7, Maclise-road, Kensington, W., organising secretary, will be glad to hear from ladies willing to lend their drawing-rooms for meetings, and she will supply further information about any part of the work.

Evangelistic Work in East London.

The London Evangelisation Society and Common Lodging-house Mission, until recently the East London Evangelisation Society, has considerably extended the scope of its operations lately; and at the annual meeting at Exeter Hall last week, the secretary (Mr. John Harvey) reported that during the past year its agents—all voluntary workers—have been more diligent than ever in proclaiming the message of salvation through faith in Jesus Christ amongst the poorer classes in the Metropolis. The Society's work consists principally in conducting Gospel meetings in the kitchens of common lodging-houses. The work in the lodging-house kitchens has many drawbacks, and the workers meet with a good deal of opposition and discouragement; but over and over again real conversions have been witnessed.

The facts embodied in the report provided ample matter for reflection by the several speakers, and the work was highly spoken of by all. The address of the chairman, Sir Robert Phayre, was mainly a call to increased activity. Rev. J. Jackson Wray expressed his astonishment that so much genuine work had been done with so little money, and warmly backed up the secretary's appeal for more funds to enable them to further extend their agencies. Rev. W. Evans Hurndall commended the Society because it seeks to enlist all its converts in the work; he did not believe in getting people converted so that they might be put on a shelf as ornaments. He urged all to be doing something for the salvation of their fellow-men, and those who are at work to "Stick to it!" Mr. George Nokes, in a lively and interesting speech, told of effort in the East-end; he was followed by Rev. T. Brigden, who narrated some particulars of his labours in the slums of Westminster. Rev. William Frith made an appeal for practical consecration in the service of Christ. Messrs. F. E. Paynter, T. Struthers, T. Franks, and Alex. Gordon, also spoke briefly.

Native Races and the Liquor Traffic.

The friends of the United Committee for the Prevention of the Demoralisation of Native Races by the Liquor Traffic might well feel cheered by the audience which filled the Egyptian Hall of the Mansion House on Friday afternoon last. In the absence of the Lord Mayor, the chair was occupied by the Duke of Westminster, and the proceedings were from first to last characterised by a wholesome enthusiasm. There was a very influential platform, some gentlemen having come a considerable distance in order to attend the meeting. The annual report, read by the secretary, Rev. J. Grant Mills, told of earnest effort, having for its immediate objects the cultivation of a healthy public opinion on the question, and the assertion of the Society's principles as occasion has offered, at home and abroad.

In the course of a hearty address, the Duke of Westminster pledged his deep interest in the subject. He referred to Lord Salisbury's undertaking to exert himself when occasion arises in the directions advocated by the Committee, and recommended a gentle spur now and then by way of reminder and encouragement to the Government. He called upon all who have at heart the cause of Christianity and humanity, as well as persons interested in legitimate commerce, to combine in order so to arouse public opinion that the traffic which has already done so much mischief may speedily be vanquished.

The Bishop of London spoke to a resolution declaring the traffic a serious stumbling-block to the progress of the Gospel and of civilisation. By way of illustration, he said he was recently informed that in a certain place in Africa the Christians subscribed towards building a mosque rather than a church, because the Mohammedans would not bring drink with them, whereas any increase in the number of Christians would lead to an increase in the importation of drink! What a shocking thing, said the Bishop, that the preaching of the Gospel in any country should have such a fearful accompaniment!

Mr. Celestine Edwards, a native of Antigua, maintained that the people of Africa have a right to be treated at the hands of Englishmen with the same fairness as people living in European countries. Not only, however, are they being demoralised by this traffic, but England is herself being demoralised by the contact. In conclusion, quoting a statement of Lord

Salisbury's, that the Africans are but children, he asked that England should extend to them the protection suited to their condition.

Mr. W. S. CAINE, M.P., followed with an address in exposure of the mischievous outstill system in India, showing that to all intents and purposes the Indian Government is engaged in the liquor traffic. He gave many facts and figures, quoting largely from official documents, and proved his truly shocking allegation that the drinking of ardent spirits has been openly promoted for the sake of revenue. There has, in consequence, been a steady and fearful increase in the debasing indulgence. The provincial reports contain expressions of regret at the smallness of the consumption in some places, and of congratulation upon the prospect of increased sales in others. Mr. Caine contrasted this with the pleasure with which English Chancellors of the Exchequer report a decline of revenue from this source. In conclusion, he called upon English Christians to enlighten public opinion, so as to bring the evil in India to a speedy termination.

Commander CAMERON, R.N., having addressed the meeting, Mr. JOHN MACKENZIE told of the jealousy with which a chief with whom he lived for many years in Bechuanaland kept his territory free from the drink. Mr. C. H. HUNTLEY, of Grahamstown; Rev. HENRY DUNCAN, of Crichton, N.B.; and Rev. E. R. YOUNG, missionary to North American Indians, also spoke. In some concluding words, the DUKE OF WESTMINSTER expressed a hope that God would grant an early success to the endeavours of the Committee.

Irish Church Missions.

THE fortieth anniversary meeting of the Society for Irish Church Missions to the Roman Catholics was held on Tuesday last week in St. James's Hall, Piccadilly. The report presented by Rev. HORACE W. TOWNSEND, superintendent, referred to the religious change which has for some time been coming over the Irish people. Multitudes who formerly almost worshipped the priests, and submitted to their dictation, now think very differently, some even regarding with contempt the Pope and those who administer the affairs of the Romish Church.

Sir ROBERT PHAYRE, who presided, opened the meeting with a few hearty words on the brightening prospect in Ireland. Rev. C. H. WAINWRIGHT, of Blackpool, dwelt on the importance of the Society's work. He regretted that the interest in the spiritual condition of the people of Ireland is so small; if the island were five thousand miles off, the people of England would probably think more of its inhabitants.

Canon FLEMING, of Ballinakill, Connemara, spoke words of cheer, inspired by the success which has so far attended the efforts of the Society. Incidentally, he described the death-beds of two converts from Romanism. A friend of one, who was dying at the age of eighty-six, brought a bottle of "holy water." The old man asked what made the water "holy." His visitor said, "Oh! the priests blessed it." "Ah!" said the dying man, "when God made the water and the world, all was made very good, and how could the priests make it better?" Another time a priest took shelter from the rain in the old man's house, and observed that he had not seen him at confession. The old man said, "Oh! yes, I was; and, what is more, I got absolution." "How was that?" said the priest. "Why," said the old man, "I was at confession with the Great High Priest, who can alone forgive my sins." The priest said, "Oh! I see how it is. Good morning." The other man was eighty-four years old, and he also was converted at a ripe age. An attempt was made before he died to get him anointed by the priest, and he was told that if not anointed he could not be buried beside his friends in the Roman Catholic burying ground. The old man, however, refused the priest's services, and said, "I have trusted Jesus Christ too long for that; I will never entrust you with my soul nor my bones; you can bury me in the Protestant churchyard, or in Ballinakill." His dying words were, "Lord, have mercy on me; Christ, have mercy on me."

Rev. Dr. FULTON, of Brooklyn, gave an account of some of his encounters with the champions of Romanism in the United States. From what he said it was clear that many who are incarcerated in nunneries would rejoice at an opportunity to review the act of their early life, whereby they made themselves prisoners without knowing anything of the liberty wherewith Christ makes free.

London Missionary Society.

THE annual meeting of the London Missionary Society was held in Exeter Hall on Thursday last, under the presidency of Mr. S. SMITH, M.P. The proceedings were characterised by much heartiness. In some opening remarks, the Chairman felicitously described the Society as one of the oldest of the great family of missionary societies, which are the glory of the present century. It has, he went on to say, done a great work for God, in many parts of the world, having produced some of the noblest men ever sent out on a Gospel mission to the nations—heroes, saints, and martyrs. Mr. Smith maintained with much power that if mission work abroad is to be successful, the home churches must be full of faith and devotion; and he not only advocated missions because they are the truest expression of the Christian life, but also because they are to some extent an act of reparation for the many wrongs which the white man has done to the heathen.

Rev. R. WARDLAW THOMPSON, foreign secretary, made a statement on the position of the Society. It was pitched in a key of deep thankfulness to God for graciously owning the efforts that have been put forth. There were in the course of the year seasons of suspense; but God was better to his servants than all their fears. Not only was the expenditure met, but a deficiency with which the year began was wiped off. The leading characteristic of the year's work was steady development. This applies to the female and medical, as well as ordinary, departments. The statement, so full of encouragement, was made in a way testifying to Mr. Thompson's remarkable grasp of the facts and figures of the Society's affairs.

Like the other speakers, Rev. J. G. ROGERS, who followed, had something to say on the criticism to which missions have of late been subjected. He was not sure whether the thanks of the meeting should not be voted to Canon Taylor and Mr. Caine for the success of their indirect appeal to the sympathies and earnestness of the churches. We want, said the speaker, a more profound consummation of the work that is to be done in the world. I am confident of this, that we shall stop wrangling about little points of theology, and we shall heal a thousand quarrels, when once we rise to the grandeur of the sublime enterprise, and feel that we have no time for anything else until we have done what God means us to do for the salvation of the world. Then we need greater magnanimity. No denominational jealousies must come in to interfere with this service. We must go out as Christian men, or we shall never do Christ's work thoroughly and fully. All considerations, however, take the mind back to the great point of all—faith in our risen Lord. If we have not that, if we are more content to air our doubts than to proclaim our certainties, we are not equal to the work. In conclusion, Mr. Rogers prayed that, going forth in the strength of the Lord, the missionaries may speedily see great results of their labours.

Rev. J. HEWLETT spoke of work in Benares. Among other things he told of how God had honoured him to welcome ninety-six lepers into the church at Almora, in the Himalaya Mountains, the fruits of seed sown previously by Rev. John Henry Budden. Just before leaving India, he visited those lepers, one of whom led the others in wild demonstration of delight at meeting him again, and in the course of conversation said, "As I hear you are going to England, I wish you to tell the Christian friends whom you will meet there, that I pray God to bless them with heavenly wealth in exchange for the earthly riches which they have contributed to send you and other missionaries to preach the Gospel of Christ to us, whereby we have been brought out of darkness into God's marvellous light." He continued, "Before you came amongst us, we were like sheep wandering in the wilderness without a shepherd; but, when you and other missionaries came and preached to us the redeeming love of Christ, all was changed; our whole souls became full of light; now we have had for many years the greatest possible peace and joy in trusting in the Lord Jesus."

Madagascar was the subject of an address by Rev. W. E. COUSENS. The story of Christian progress, in spite of many difficulties, was full of interest. The new version of the Holy Scriptures, just published, will be used by 1500 Protestant congregations, and will be read in almost the same number of schools. Rev. J. OSSIAN DAVIES spoke on the spiritual side of the work. He was followed by Rev. J. McGOWAN, who dwelt upon Gospel testimony in Amoy. Both urged that the patience of faith be allowed to have her perfect work.

The annual young men's meeting was held in the City Temple, under the presidency of Rev. JOSHUA C. HARRISON. Addresses were delivered by a number of friends, all of them hearty and hopeful in tone. The Ladies' Committee for Female Missions held a meeting at Exeter Hall, Mrs. R. W. DALE in the chair. The staff of ladies employed abroad is thirty-six, an advance of four on the year. Miss PHILIP, of Pekin, dwelt upon work in China, and Mrs. HOLMAN BENTLEY spoke of the Congo. Mrs. DE SELINCOURT read a paper by Mrs. DUTHIE on the needs of India, and Mrs. ROBERT DAWSON, of Finchley, urged sustained interest in missions.

The Theatrical Mission.

THIS institution, which seeks to promote the welfare of the minor stars in the theatrical firmament, held its annual muster last week in Princes Hall, Piccadilly. The hall was bright; the audience was in hearty accord with the objects of the Mission, and the proceedings were at once interesting and practical. There was a band of children from "Macready House" who sang and went through musical drill. One very small gentleman sat well in front of the platform, and occasionally trotted about, quite unconcerned when a speaker turned to discover what had brushed past his legs. Ample evidence was afforded of loving care for the children on the part of Mr. and Mrs. COURTHOPE TODD, and their kind helpers.

Sir ROBERT N. FOWLER presided, and Mr. TODD told an encouraging story of work and progress. Branches of the Mission have been established at Amsterdam, Rotterdam, Brussels, Antwerp, Milan, and there will soon be another in Spain. Mr. Todd read some letters in connection with very pathetic cases. One was from a woman in Glasgow whose daughter, twenty-two years of age, had left her. "I am afraid she has a liking for strong drink... Help her for Christ's sake, and pray for us," concluded the letter. Another was from a French actress, and at the top of the note-paper was a fine etching. There were many touching sentences, such as: "We are put on one side; I feel dull and worried; I pray, but God does not listen to me. In our career we are surrounded, flattered, often disgraced, and exposed continually to the attacks of the devil." Mr. Todd closed with an appeal to clear off the existing debt of £1700 on Macready House.

The intervals between the speeches and children's exercises, were filled by music from the students at the Royal Normal College for the Blind, Norwood.

Rev. Dr. BENNETT eulogised the work of the Mission, and urged those present to go to Macready House and see it for themselves. "I am sure the children will be glad to see you." Whereupon one little miss at the corner of the platform, nodded assent, shook her flaxen curls, and beamed upon the amused audience. Rev. J. W. EWING referred to the vicissitudes pertaining to a theatrical career. We may condemn the theatre, but that does not relieve us from the responsibility of striving to reach and to influence for good those engaged in it. Dr. SCHOFIELD made an appeal for the extinction of the building fund debt.

Pastors' College Evangelical Association

THE second annual Conference of the Pastors' College upon the new basis which the recent controversy rendered necessary, opened on Monday last week, at Dalston Junction Baptist Chapel. A meeting for prayer was held from four to five in the afternoon, at which the pastor of the chapel, Rev. W. H. BURTON, presided. The attendance, which included the President, was large, and an earnest spirit of prayer seemed to prevail.

After tea in the school room, a public meeting was held in the chapel at seven, Rev. C. H. SPURGEON presiding. The chapel was packed, and many were unable to obtain entrance. Mr. Spurgeon, who was in one of his happiest veins, gave a brief epitome of the history of the College, from which it appeared that through the instrumentality of the Pastors' College men, over 30,000 baptized believers had been added to the churches. After a feeling allusion to the stormy period of the "Down-grade" controversy, he proceeded to speak on the subject of reality in religion. In these days there is a widespread impression that religion is an invention, a fiction, not a thing of stern reality. People can understand living for money, for that is real to them. But conversion and all the talk about spiritual things are to them of an opposite complexion. Is not the world led to conclude so, because so many professing godliness have acted as if it were so? In the past generation when the sturdy Calvinistic faith was vitally known, people who went to chapel (to use words he had heard a gentlemen say of his mother) "awfully believed in God." They saw God's hand in everything. If preachers are to succeed in generating the conviction of reality, they must believe what they preach. Preachers too must be earnest. If people are to attend to us, we must give them something worth attending to. Great reverence for the Word should, moreover, characterise the preacher. Reality in religion implies a reverence for Scripture beyond degree. After dwelling on the call for thorough honesty on the part of the minister, Mr. Spurgeon urged the importance of his being "all there" in his work. Turning from the pulpit to the pew, Mr. Spurgeon deplored the vast quantity of merely nominal religion in the churches. In these times, too, churches are infested by a multitude of shams. There are sham doctrines, and sham experience, and sham living. Let us aim to be true throughout, and to this end cultivate prayer until it becomes our native breath.

Mr. Spurgeon's address was followed by addresses from Pastor LAUDERDALE, of Great Grimsby; Pastor JULYAN, of Trowbridge; and Pastor TOMKINS, of Rushden. The meeting was one of great interest and power.

The proceedings of the Conference were resumed on Tuesday morning, at 10.30, in the large hall of the College, Newington. Upwards of an hour was spent in prayer. The President, Rev. C. H. SPURGEON, then announced the subject of his address—

"OUR POWER, AND THE CONDITIONS OF OBTAINING IT."

We do not attempt a verbatim report of what is regarded by the brethren generally as the most excellent and powerful of all the presidential addresses, but will content ourselves with a running description:—

I. We need power to do our work. No work is done without power, and the kind of power we need for the work we have on hand will depend on the view we take of the work itself. What is the object for which we need power? (1) Merely to perform services perfunctorily does not require any special power. The man who has the same things to say in much the same words has no great need of power. "Our minister," said one, "reminds me of a steeple with two bells; it's all along 'ding dong, ding dong.'" "We are worse off than you," said his friend; "our man has only one bell; it's all 'ding, ding, ding.'" (2) Power is not needed to be abreast of the times. Ahab did not need Micaiah to prophesy smooth things. He had 400 prophets ready to do that. Ministers who are time-servers had better pray to the devil for assistance. (3) Power is needed to bear witness to the truth, for experimental knowledge of the truth is the gift of God. The grand desideratum is to know and love the truth as so to proclaim it in due proportion and with the proper balance, and to persevere in this till life's latest breath. (4) Then power is needed in order to convince others of the truth preached. When Queen Elizabeth gave orders that everyone should go to church, many Romanists took care to stop up their ears with cotton, so that the word preached might not be heard. There is an ear-stopping of another kind, which the evangelical preacher must overcome, and for this the power of the Spirit of God is necessary. None of you can create a fly; how much less can you create a new heart. (4) Not only is power needed for conversion, but also that the souls new-born may be preserved. How great is the leakage in all our churches! Nevertheless, we are to feed the flock of God, and, apart from his own Divine operation, the task is insuperable.

II. How are we to get this power? (1) By a simple attendance to instructions. As the footman every time he goes to the door asks his master what he is to say, so should it be with us. (2) Then it is needful to have singleness of eye. The Spirit of God must disdain the self-seeker. (3) We ought also to aspire to complete subordination to our Master, and also to the inspired Word. Many, nowadays, treat Holy Scripture as a football. Paul, James, and John are to them as Tom, Dick, and Harry. They say, in effect, "I judge all things, even the blessed Spirit Himself." The man who exalts his reason above revelation is like the man who makes his own god. A Romish sculptor was a-dying.

"BEHOLD YOUR GOD!"

said a priest to him, holding forth a crucifix. "Oh, yes," said the man; "but I made that." "I believe," said Mr. Spurgeon, "what I could not have invented; I believe in a Rock that is higher than I." (4) In order to power we must cultivate deep seriousness; we must be like George Fox, men that tremble at His word. (5) Then seek sympathy with God. Much is said of sympathy with man, because he is lost. There is a prior consideration—to wit, sympathy with God Himself. After all, it is He who has the worst of it. "This is Calvinism," said Mr. Spurgeon, amid ringing cheers, "the adoration of the eternal God." Finally, remember that to be warm in the pulpit is not of much use unless you are warmed before entering it. Loaves are not baked by a blaze before the mouth of the oven.

Mr. Spurgeon's address, which bristled with points which told upon his large and sympathetic audience, concluded with an exposition of the power which must go with the message itself.

In the evening of the same day a public meeting was held in the Orphanage, over which the PRESIDENT presided, and at which addresses of wit and wisdom were given by Revs. D. DAVIES, of Brighton; R. SPURGEON, of Barisal, India; Dr. SINCLAIR PATERSON; F. T. SNELL, of Guernsey, and others. Mrs. ALLISON closed the proceedings by an interesting exhibition of Eastern costumes, and a variety of helpful Biblical exposition.

At the meeting on Wednesday morning Pastor T. GREENWOOD, of Catford-bridge, read a paper on contending that until holiness became a thing of habit or second nature it could only be regarded as in its earliest beginnings. "It is difficult to reckon advances in holiness. When a man declares he is fully consecrated, his consecration is more than a little precarious." This paper was followed by an open conference on "The Work of the Holy Spirit," in which Pastors A. G. BROWN, F. H. WHITE, H. D. BROWN, and the PRESIDENT took part. It was a hallowed season, and, judging from the prayers, as well as words spoken, many hearts were deeply touched.

ANNUAL SUPPER.

In the evening, the annual tea and meeting of the subscribers to the Pastors' College were held. The gathering was one of the largest known. Lord KINNAIRD took the chair, and in his address expressed his joy at seeing Mr. Spurgeon so far recovered in health after his severe accident at Mentone. He also testified his pleasure at the opportunity of showing his sympathy with him in the important work he had in view in training young men, imbued with a supreme veneration for Holy Scripture, to make known the Gospel of Divine grace. His lordship enlarged on the need of proportionate giving, and also pointed out that the time was coming when all who believed in fundamental truth would have to stand more closely together. Mr. SPURGEON, in a racy speech, explained the objects of the Institution, and the success that thus far, under God, had attended their efforts. Corroborative testimonies were then heard from Mr. CARSON GRAHAM, of the Congo; R. SPURGEON, of Barisal; Mr. DANN, of Oxford; and Mr. JOSEPH HARRALD, the secretary of the President, and pastor of the Baptist Church at Thornton Heath. Rev. ROBERT TAYLOR, Presbyterian minister, Upper Norwood, followed with an address on the importance of a duly trained ministry; and Dr. SINCLAIR PATERSON, with a cogent speech on "Inspiration." At the supper which followed,

NEARLY £2800 WERE SUBSCRIBED to the funds of the College—a renewed token that Mr. Spurgeon's "Down-Grade" protests have not crippled his resources.

The sitting on Thursday morning was long, and the bill of fare of a varied character. The principal feature was an address prepared by Rev. GEORGE ROGERS, now in his ninety-first year, on "Encouragement for the Discouraged," and read by Pastor MACKEY. The venerable writer's words showed no trace of failing power; indeed, the address was remarkable for insight. Mr. W. Y. FULLERTON, the well-known and greatly honoured evangelist, contributed a searching and stimulating paper on "The Life which is Life indeed." Pastor MORRIS next read a paper, based on Isa. vi., "On the Vision of the King: our Preparation for Service," which was felt to be a valuable and forceful exposition of the Scripture in question. The proceedings of the day closed with the annual public meeting in the Tabernacle, at 6.30 p.m., one of the happiest and heartiest meetings we have ever known.

In accordance with time-honoured custom, the Conference wound up on Friday morning with a sermon from the PRESIDENT, who took for his subject "Sealed and Open Evidences" (Jer. xxxii. 14); after which the whole fraternity joined together in commemorating the Saviour's broken body and shed blood; and, with joined hands, sung the parting hymn, "Pray for the peace of Jerusalem; they shall prosper that love thee."

The week's gatherings were remarkable, not only from the numbers present—the largest known—but from their buoyant and hopeful character and inspiriting ring. The general opinion is that never since the foundation the College has a more helpful and inspiring t of meetings been held. To God be all the aise. ONE OF THE MINISTERS.

Zenana Missions.

r the annual meeting of the Indian Female ormal School and Instruction Society, held Princes Hall, Piccadilly, on Thursday last eek, the audience manifested its sympathy in very practical fashion. Stirring appeals were ade by Miss MARGARET LEITCH and Mr. W. T. ATON, with the result that Lord KINNAIRD, ho presided, was able to announce contri- utions amounting to £625. During the past ght years the operations of the Society have ore than doubled all round, and the com- ittee earnestly solicit increased support. The ncome last year was £11,577, of which £2000 ame from India. There are twenty-eight sta- ons at present occupied, and another lady octor will be sent out in the autumn, if funds ermit.

Archdeacon LEFROY, of Liverpool, elo- uently pleaded for money and workers. He lso called upon young ladies of culture, in ndependent positions, with few or no home ies, to devote their lives to the work in India. Rev. F. H. BARING having spoken, Miss MARGARET LEITCH, of Ceylon, made the speech f the afternoon. It had the true missionary ing. She urged that the only way to reach he hearts of the women of India is by ympathetic deeds and loving interest in their ife. One lady missionary, who for a time ailed to make progress in her work, studied nedicine, and ultimately secured an entrance o a thousand homes, where a regular system f Bible instruction is carried on. Evan- gelistic work prospers when carried to the vomen with medical aid. The long-standing listrust of foreign medical treatment is dis- ppearing, and the women come to the lady loctors, together with their children.

After Colonel ROBERTS had commended the Society's work in the Punjaub, Rev. JOHN McNEILL added a few words in the form of an appeal to ladies present to engage in the work of taking the Gospel to the women of India.

Working Men and the Lord's Day.

ON Friday evening the friends of the Working Men's Lord's Day Rest Association filled the large Exeter Hall, on the occasion of its annual meeting. The report presented by the secretary, Mr. C. HILL, showed that the Society has been very active in opposing the many and vigorous efforts being made to violate the sanc- tity of the Sabbath in our land. Numerous meetings have been held, publications issued, and practical measures taken to oppose the opening of museums, art galleries, &c., on Sunday, in most cases with success. It is hoped the Association will receive the sympathy of Christian people in its endeavours to retain the Sabbath as a rest day for the world.

Lord KINNAIRD presided over the meeting, and the speakers were Revs. T. Guttery, Arthur Hall, and T. Richardson, Messrs. Gains- ford Bruce, M.P., James Halford, H. R. King, G. Lawson, and Dr. E. Parker Young. The various speakers pointed out the dangers threatening the Sabbath, and called for con- tinued and increased vigilance in contending against the encroachments being made upon it. In answer to the arguments of those who are agitating for the opening of museums and picture galleries on the Lord's Day it was re- marked that the larger body of the working-men themselves do not desire this. These places should be open on the week evenings. One of the speakers was loudly applauded when he exclaimed, "Instead of making these museums and art galleries the rivals of the churches and chapels on one day in the week, make them the rivals of the public-houses every evening during the week." The need of arousing public opinion on this subject was emphasised, and parents were urged to train their children by practical example to "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy," remembering that in helping to maintain the sanctity of the Sabbath we are doing something to strengthen every- thing that is pure and good in our national life.

Christian Vernacular Education Society

EARL NORTHBROOK presided over the thirty- first annual meeting of this Society, held at Willis's Rooms, St. James's, on Friday last. An abstract of the report, read by Mr. H. MORRIS, hon. sec., gave encouraging details of the progress of the three branches of the work—the training of native Christian teachers, the supervision and inspection of native schools, and the publication of books in the vernacular.

The CHAIRMAN having spoken of the great importance of their being a steady supply of sound Christian literature for India, Dr. JOHN MURDOCH, to whose labours the Society largely owes its success, addressed the meeting. He stated that within the last nine years two millions of school books in twenty different languages have been sold between Shanghai on the east and Muscat on the west. Much more might be done, were the urgency of the need fully understood.

Rev. J. HUNTER BISHOP bore witness, from twenty years' experience in Travancore, to the great value of the Society's work. He told of the conversion of a Brahmin, who afterwards became a devoted evangelist, through reading one of the books. Rev. J. HEWLETT, of Be- nares, spoke of the extent to which the Society's publications are rapidly finding their way into the schools, zenanas, and all sorts of places. He was followed by Rev. J. E. EVANS, principal of the Dindigur Training Institute, who referred to several cases in which, after a few years' training, young natives have gone out to do successful work for Christ.

Thames Church Mission.

THE annual meeting of this Mission, held in the Mansion House on Wednesday last week, was a most successful gathering. The saloon was packed, and the report and the speeches evoked great enthusiasm. In the absence of the Lord Mayor, a famous old sailor—Sir LEO- POLD McCLINTOCK—presided.

The report of the committee, read by the secretary, Rev. H. BLOOMER, formed a strong and valuable testimony to the power of the uplifted Christ; and contained abundant evi- dence that a great deal has been done to cope with the evil influences at work among our sailors and river toilers. The report embraced a graphic description of a tour through the parish of the Mission, which is described by the Bishop of London as a "peculiar and oddly shaped parish; seventy-two miles long, on an average a mile broad, and containing some- thing like 300,000 souls"; and an interesting review of the different branches of the work, with many delightful incidents.

Nobly did the BISHOP OF MARLBOROUGH champion the cause of the Mission. The Thames Church Mission is trying to make the river pure and sweet, holy and Christian. If you ask the Thames police, the magistrates, the persons who really know the Thames, they will tell you that one of the greatest blessings that have ever been conferred upon the river population has been the work of the Mission and kindred societies. Mr. SIDNEY GEDGE, M.P., appealed for more practical and wide- spread support. It is the interest of ship- owners and insurance agents, he said, to sup- port the Mission; for if there is one thing more than another calculated to imperil the safety of a ship, it is a drunken crew; to have a Christian crew who will obey orders is one of the best safeguards.

Rev. W. H. BARLOW dwelt chiefly upon the society as a demonstrator of practical Chris- tianity. Mr. MARK KNOWLES having contributed an earnest appeal, Rev. R. H. BRENNAN (who has very special opportunities of seeing the work) said that no society is doing more among our sailors, bargemen, and emigrants than the Thames Church Mission. Mr. WILLIAM ELLICE stated that the committee are very anxious to place another missionary below Gravesend, and he hoped the Lord would put it into the heart of someone to give them the amount necessary for the purpose (£75).

Women and Temperance.

ON Monday night Sir ARTHUR BLACKWOOD presided at the annual meeting of the East London Women's Christian Temperance Union, at the Great Assembly Hall, Mile End-road. There was a large attendance. A report, read by Miss RICHARDSON, showed that there had been a steady advance in the work of the several branches during the year. The Chair- man said he was delighted to see women at the front in the temperance movement, for when they took up a cause it was sure to be on the winning side. The movement demanded every effort of both sexes, and of all ages. Statistics of intemperance were very familiar, and there was not much good in repeating them, perhaps; but he could not help repeating—and he thought it should be burnt into all hearts—that 60,000 people of the United Kingdom die annually from strong drink, and another 60,000 came to their end indirectly from the same cause; while in London last year 500 children under ten years of age were taken up drunk, and 1,500 under fourteen years old. Let them think of these young lives, perhaps ruined for ever. The temperance movement, however, had now happily reached all classes of society, and people were beginning to think it wrong to take even a little drink, because of the example it was to others.

Lady HENRY SOMERSET, in moving the adoption of the report, said her heart was full of sympathy with them in fighting the evil of strong drink. Dr. GRATTAN GUINNESS followed, expressing his conviction that this was em- phatically woman's work, and that a week spent in the receiving ward of a neighbouring hospital, with which he was well acquainted, would convert the greatest sceptic to temper- ance. Miss AGNES WESTON (who said that one man in every six in Her Majesty's Navy had adopted temperance principles), Rev. JOHN McNEILL, and other speakers followed.

REVIVAL IN NORTH WALES.

A TEN days' mission at Aberystwyth, conducted by Miss Radcliffe, of Liverpool, has been fruit- ful of most cheering results. Though origin- ating with the Presbyterian Church in New- foundland-street, the effort was not confined to any one denomination, for services were held in the various evangelical places of worship. The daughter of Mr. Reginald Radcliffe, of Liverpool, the chief labourer in this important movement, brought to bear no power or charm beyond the Gospel of the grace of God earnestly set forth in simple language. She was ably assisted by Rev. J. G. Davies and other Christian workers.

The revival has been specially felt inside the churches. Young men and young women reared in Christian families have been brought to realise their personal need, and scores of them have testified to the love of God and pledged their vows to consecrate themselves to Christian endeavour. Among other results of the revival may be mentioned the formation of a young Men's Christian Association in the town, and the establishment of a weekly noon- day prayer-meeting. Miss Radcliffe's mission was the subject of much earnest prayer before it was undertaken; now the thanksgivings of new converts and quickened believers are mingled with petitions for the deepening and extension of the work of grace throughout the Principality.

Letters to the Editor.

REV. GEORGE BOWEN'S LIFE.

DEAR SIR,—Personal friends of the late George Bowen are surprised at the frequent mistakes made in regard to his life. Several such errors have been made by your contributors. I notice five in the current issue, one of the glaring ones being that of crediting him with (or accusing him of) "the adoption of native habits."

The life and labours of that good man have their excellent lessons; and, as one who knew him well during the last sixteen years of his career, I am prepared to present some instructive facts from his history. Should any company of Christian workers desire to hear his story thus told, I shall be happy to arrange for such an address.

POPERY IN PORTUGAL.

DEAR SIR,—A poor man, a Protestant, of Ilhavo, has just been tried at the Aveiro Court for the offence of refusing to remove his cap at the cross carried at a funeral. Your readers will doubtless marvel that such a thing should attract the attention of the authorities at all, but those who are accustomed to the bland and fawning attitude of Popery in England have little idea of the meanness and bitter spirit evinced by it on its own ground. I am told, on good authority, that the very judge joined in accusing the poor man, so that, although allowed a legal adviser, he was sentenced to twelve months' imprisonment, without the option of a fine; three months more, or a fine of £20, and costs, which will probably be heavy. The man has appealed, and, therefore, the result is doubtful; but I hope that the larger appeal to public opinion will produce a satisfactory reaction, of which signs are appearing.
—Very faithfully yours, ROBT. H. MORETON.

MISSIONS AND THEIR FRIENDS.

DEAR SIR,—I have been reading in THE CHRISTIAN an extract from The Methodist Times anent "Missions and their friends." If the writer has been in India, I feel sure he does not understand the cost of living there. To say that £300 a year in that country is equal to £1000 in England, is the reverse of my experience. I find that £300 in England goes as far as £600 in India. The writer also forgets that Europeans require different food to Asiatics, who are principally vegetarians; Eurasians almost equally so. If the writer wishes missionaries to succumb in a year or two, and give the Society the expense of bringing them home again, let him encourage a reduction of salary. An earnest missionary will not lose in the estimation of the natives (rather the reverse) because he has a few necessary comforts.

I do not know what the writer means by a missionary going into "society." His clerical garb would, of course, be all that would be necessary for himself, but his wife could not possibly dress up to the demands of Calcutta society, nor would she be able to entertain, and could scarcely find time for going out, with the few servants a missionary's income enables him to keep. There have been worldly missionaries who would have been so whatever their income; but, thank God, the number is gradually decreasing, till we believe all who go out will be consecrated men, led by the Spirit to go and spread the knowledge of Jesus and his love.

I have never heard of a European on any works getting less than £120 a year, and these are generally men who in England would be receiving about £1 a week. The pay of commissioned and non-commissioned officers and soldiers is raised directly they land in India. No European thinks of accepting work to go out there, unless he is to get a large increase to his English allowance. Why then is the missionary, because he is especially the Lord's messenger, to get less than other people? He may be gladly willing to receive an infinitesimal sum if he can but get opportunity to proclaim his Master's name among the heathen; is that a reason why fellow-Christians should grind him down to the uttermost? Let no one talk of reducing a missionary's income. If they wish to do so, let them first go out, not for a week, or a month, or a year, but for several years, and then write from their own experience. Z.

MUSIC-HALLS.

SIR,—I do not think the readers of THE CHRISTIAN in general can be aware of the great demoralising influence of these places of modern amusement, or of the fact that the licensing of them has passed into the hands of the County Councils; instead of the justices of the peace as formerly, or means would at least have been in process of adoption: (1) To restrict the spread of these abominable places; (2) To arouse public opinion to prevent a continuation of many of them.

Under the old system, justices of the peace who licensed were the nominees of Lord Chancellors for the time being. County Councils are a body elected by ratepayers, so that not only has the licensing changed hands, but the permits emanate from a representative assembly. I believe I am right in saying that this applies to the whole of England.

Thank God, in the London County Council, there is a party led by Mr. F. N. Charrington, who are determined to do their utmost to suppress the evils of music-halls. But their efforts should be supported from without. During the last three years, much good work has been done by the Islington Licensing Committee; but I venture to suggest that there should be a Central Licensing Vigilance Committee for London, with local associations, so that pressure should be brought to bear on the whole of the London County Council, and the case laid before all the municipal authorities in England. Personally, I am prepared to do what I can, and I am most thankful to be able to state that Mr. A. F. Mordaunt Smith has kindly consented to act as honorary secretary in this inaugural movement. The first meeting will be held at 200, Euston-road, on Friday evening, the 17th inst., under the presidency of Mr. J. J. Drysdale, when I hope to be able to state the case, and that the nucleus of the New Central Committee will be formed. I may add that ladies are invited to the meeting on Friday, the 17th, when it is hoped that the nucleus of a Ladies' Committee also will be formed.

Letters on this subject requiring an answer should contain an addressed stamped envelope.

OBITUARY.

MRS. MOUNSEY.

ANNA PRISCILLA MOUNSEY, of Sunderland, a noble and devoted worker, especially among young women, has passed away. The founder of the Y.W.C.A., and an active supporter of everything good, she will be sadly missed and mourned. The funeral was large.

LORD S. G. OSBORNE.

Lord Sydney Godolphin Osborne, well known for a long period of years as a writer on social and philanthropic questions, died last week at Lewis, aged eighty-one. For many years he performed the duties of a clergyman in the Church of England, and for more than a generation he wielded a facile and versatile pen, over the signature of "S. G. O.," in illustrating, expounding, and enforcing lessons on subjects which touch upon the every-day life of the people.

FATHER DAMIEN.

Father Damien, the Belgian priest, who has since 1873 lived among the lepers of Molokai, one of the Hawaiian group, died a few days ago. He went to the settlement in robust health, aged thirty-three, and for eleven years escaped the contagion. Since 1885 he has suffered from the fell disease; but though truly a hero, he was a very humble man. Having voluntarily dedicated himself to the task of improving the physical and moral condition of the lepers, he was dauntless; when informed that he had taken the disease, he remarked to the doctor who examined him, "If the price of my cure was that I must leave the island and give up my work, then I would not be cured."

PROPHETIC SCRIPTURE.—The usual annual convention for the study of prophetic Scripture will be held in the Conference Hall, Clapham-road, S.W., on June 18—20. Next week we hope to give the circular of invitation, and the leading subjects. For particulars as to lodgings, &c., address Mrs. Meredith, 143, Clapham-road, S.W.

Evangelistic Notes.

Rev. Wm. A. Blake, of Southport, has conducted a special mission for a fortnight at Tintwistle, Cheshire.

Rev. J. F. T. Hallowes has concluded an eight days' mission at the Congregational Church, Newhaven, Sussex. As a result of the mission many have professed to receive Christ, and the church has been richly blessed.

Strathaven.—A series of Gospel meetings, arranged for by the Strathaven Evangelistic Union, extending over three weeks, were conducted by Mr. D. Melvin, of the Scottish Evangelistic Association. The attendance was good; sinners professed to trust in Christ, and saints were instructed and strengthened.

Auchingoul, Banffshire.—A successful evangelistic mission has been held here, conducted by Mr. J. A. Smith. The interest taken was manifest throughout; numbers came from four to five miles distance. The Christians have been greatly strengthened, while a good few of the unsaved have professed conversion.

Messrs. Fullerton and Smith, on Sunday last, completed the first week of a month's mission at the Edinburgh Castle, Limehouse. Mr. Smith's breezy talks and rousing songs are as attractive as ever; while the manly, sometimes quaint, but always faithful, home thrusts of Mr. Fullerton have the old-time freshness and power. Increasingly large audiences testify to the growing interest of the people, and great and lasting results are looked for.

Stewartstown, Ireland.—We have had a visit from Miss Smith and Miss Bax, who conducted a thirteen days' mission in the Methodist Church. The Gospel was declared night after night with great force and beauty. Young and old came into the vestry after every service, asking, What must I do to be saved? A service was held for young people and children. We can say that most of the children in our school have been led to the Saviour. Backsliders have been restored, and many Christians have entered upon a more devoted life. J. E.

Amersham, Bucks.—Mr. H. Beddow states that he is entering on the tent work of the summer, and would be glad of the co-operation of friends in the conduct of the work. He would be grateful, also, for tracts, &c., for distribution.

REV. NEWMAN HALL and his home surroundings are very pleasantly sketched in the current number of The Quiver. It seems that water-colour sketching is the special hobby of his leisure days, and his house contains souvenirs of many lands in this agreeable shape. The interviewer says that "some of Mr. Hall's most effective sermons have been thought out in the open air. He daily walks on Hampstead Heath, and often thinks out a discourse. A full outline of the sermon is generally written, which serves to suggest the line of thought."

THE PRESBYTERIAN MISSION IN CHINA requires its missionaries to come home once in seven years, no matter what the state of their health may be. They say they want to see them at home, and that they ought not to stay longer than seven years on the field without a change. The missionaries know just when they are expected to leave, and the work in China is arranged so that nothing shall interfere with their going at the time appointed. They have a vacation of a year and a half; their travelling expenses are paid, and their salaries are continued during the vacation.

CAMDEN TOWN Y.M.C.A.—The third annual May morning breakfast was held on Sunday, the 5 inst., at 8 o'clock, at 17, Camden-road, when 320 young men sat down. Mr. W. C. Parkinson presided at the subsequent meeting, Dr. Cecil Y. Biss, in the course of an address, said that religion is based on fact; from it theory and sentiment are excluded. If man is to be elevated and used for spiritual blessing to his fellow-man, his power must come from some source outside himself. That source of power is none other than the Word of God. The Scriptures will, however, be of no use unless they bring us to Christ, for He is the true foundation. Once connected with Christ, as revealed in the Word, by a living faith, we find ourselves in the privileged position of being his servants to lead others to Him. Mr. Biss's address received the greatest attention from the large number present.

MAY'S CALL TO THE CITY CHILD.

Out of the city away, away!
Pale-faced little one, come at my call;
For here is the merry month of May,
With floral gifts for one and all.

The lanes are white with hawthorn bloom,
The daisy wears her pink-edged frill;
The common's afire with golden broom,
And the sun gleams bright on the rippling rill.

The buttercup jewels the verdant mead,
The throstle cock sings from the pliant bough;
The swallow skims past with lightning speed,
As the hind creeps by with his team and plough,

The primrose glints from our wayside banks,
The pale anemone stars the wood,
And the skylark sings her song of thanks
To the Giver of all things bright and good.

Out of the city away, away!
Pale-faced little one, come at my call;
Here, here is the merry month of May,
With life and joy for one and all.

John George Watts, in "The Quiver."

[These lines are an admirable plea for the Day in the Country Fund; will our readers do their best to enable the "pale-faced little ones" to obey the call of merry May?]

OUR COUNTRYWOMEN IN PARIS.

MAY we ask for very earnest prayer for the efforts which are being put forth for our young countrywomen at the Paris Exhibition? Ever since last October, numbers of homeless, friendless young women, have been only too glad to avail themselves of openings in Paris, which offered apparently remunerative employment.

Whenever we have been able, we have discountenanced their coming, having the sad experiences of the last Exhibition in too vivid remembrance.

Thus, in one of the bars devoted to selling intoxicating drinks only, out of sixteen young women, chosen for their attractive looks, no fewer than five were the orphan relatives of clergy and ministers; three of these were too glad to break their engagement, and return to England at our suggestion.

The saddest of all is, that anything like one hour of Sunday, or thoughts of God, becomes impossible. Sunday is their day of heaviest toil, and the tone of their whole life is to obliterate the fact that He is.

When one sees the effort which the world makes to propagate its faith, one is ashamed at the feeble response on behalf of a crucified Lord by those who owe Him much. We have several of our lady workers told off for this special branch, but we need more. We also still lack the means to clear the cost of our forty extra beds. May I add that I hope to be in Paris, and superintend this work myself, until August, and shall gladly welcome visits from our friends.

ADA M. LEWIS (née LEIGH).

THE DARK CONTINENT.—The Christian Worker for May, edited by Mr. L. K. Shaw, of Manchester (1d. Partridge), contains the first of a series of "Peeps into the Dark Continent," by the young pioneer missionary, Mr. Graham Wilmot-Brooke. It is a very sombre picture indeed that he draws of the northern part of Africa. North of the Congo he says there are one hundred millions of people totally unevangelised. A graphic description is given of the Franco-Algerian city of Constantine.

OPEN-AIR MISSION.—The last of the doctrinal addresses in connection with the monthly conferences of the South London Auxiliary was delivered on Wednesday, last week, in the Melior-street Mission-hall, by Rev. Henry E. Brooke, on "The Lord's Second Coming." Sir William Willis presided, and there was a good attendance. The topics discussed during the winter have included sin, Satan, justification, sanctification, inspiration, and the Second Advent, and have proved very helpful to the members of the Mission.

The Book World.

BIBLE ANIMALS. By the late Rev. Dr. Newton. 1s. 6d. Oliphant, Anderson & Ferrier. A cheap edition of a work which, in a very attractive manner, conveys many important lessons to the young. Several illustrations add to the brightness of the volume.

FOOTSTEPS OF TRUTH. 3d. J. F. Shaw & Co. The May issue contains an extended and interesting sketch of the life of the late Mr. Denham Smith, accompanied by a portrait. The pages of this monthly always contain matter useful for preachers and teachers. Uniformly high in tone, it cannot but prove helpful to all who are spiritually minded.

WOMAN'S WORK IN THE GREAT HARVEST FIELD. 2d. S. W. Partridge & Co. The duty of women with regard to politics is judicially discussed in the May issue of this magazine. Other interesting articles deal with female education at Constantinople, and a quiet work in Edinburgh. A number of excellent Bible studies give a more permanent value to this useful little monthly.

EXODUS—CHAPTERS I. TO XIV. Professor James Macgregor has condensed a remarkably large quantity of information into this volume of the "Handbooks for Bible-classes" series. The introduction is comprehensive and lucid, and the commentary and special notes are pointed and suggestive throughout. Every page shows wide reading, as well as sound spiritual sense. 2s. T. & T. Clark, Edinburgh.

ALL THE WORLD. 3d. Office: 56, Southwark-street, S.E. This monthly record of the work of the Salvation Army in all lands is filled with matter of deep interest, presented in a vivacious manner and amply illustrated. Many would be the better for reading this capital magazine, which shows by its articles from many countries that there is to-day a great thirst after eternal life. "Dutch Doings" is the title of an article describing recent operations in Holland, full of encouragement to the workers.

A SHORT ANALYSIS OF THE OLD TESTAMENT. By Principal Douglas. 1s. 6d. Houlston & Sons. This is a very useful companion to the study of the Old Testament. The various books are divided up according to their contents, on the basis of the Revised Version, in which important work the author bore a worthy part. This little book, the result of much loving labour and reverent care, opens up the text in a striking manner, and as a skeleton commentary it will be greatly prized by teachers of Bible-classes.

POPULAR BIOGRAPHIES. Messrs. S. W. Partridge & Co. have commenced a capital series of biographies of eminent men. We have before us the first two issues: HENRY M. STANLEY, THE AFRICAN EXPLORER, by Arthur Montefiore; and JOHN BRIGHT, THE MAN OF THE PEOPLE, by Jesse Page (1s. 6d. each). Fully illustrated, they will certainly be highly appreciated in Sunday-school and village libraries. These are, in fact, remarkably successful short biographies of great men, written in a very attractive style.

OUR PRESENT HOPE AND FUTURE HOME. Fifty-two papers by Rev. J. B. Sturrock, Paisley. Alex. Gardner. Though modestly termed "papers," these are really sermonettes, well worded, well thought out, and full of sound doctrine. They are suited for Sunday reading at home, for sick-beds and short services. Some are controversial, some are purely devotional, some are connected Scriptural studies. The author's aim is to console and strengthen fellow pilgrims in various experiences and divers moods of mind. Strange will be the Christian reader who finds in these pages nothing to guide, instruct, and cheer.

ETUDE HISTORIQUE SUR LE PROGRÈS DU PROTESTANTISME EN FRANCE AU POINT DE VUE STATISTIQUE, 1803—1888. Par Henri Perrenoud. Paris: Librairie Fischbacher. Love of the Reformed Church of France has evidently inspired this painstaking effort. The object was to present, in the briefest possible form, some of the blessed fruits of French Protestantism during the past eighty-six years; and that object has certainly been attained. The principal captions are pastoral work, education, evangelisation, and charity. The question of the Protestant population of France has of late excited considerable attention: in an appendix based on figures from church rolls, and information from other trustworthy sources, much light is thrown upon that very interesting question.

THE FAMILY FOE, by Mrs. C. Nugent Jackson (1s. 6d. The Religious Tract Society), is a tale of domestic life, illustrating the unhappiness that flows from infirmity of temper. It contains much excellent counsel for young and old alike.

A new edition of PATIENCE HART'S FIRST EXPERIENCE, the admirable book for young servants, by the late Mrs. Sewell, which has recently been so highly commended in our columns, is issued. We trust it will enter on a new lease of life and usefulness. (2s. Jarrold & Son.)

HOLD THE FORT. By Mary Pryor Hack. 1s Hodder & Stoughton. Although the title of this neatly got-up book is somewhat obscure, the contents are written very clearly, and embody many "Practical suggestions for abstainers." The work should prove useful, not only to abstainers, but to that very numerous class whose panacea for any ills that may suddenly overtake them is "a drop of brandy."

THE BOOK OF COMMON PRAYER ACCORDING TO THE USE OF THE REFORMED EPISCOPAL CHURCH. This work, bearing the imprimatur of Dr. T. H. Gregg, senior Bishop, is published by Messrs. Marlborough & Co. In substance it is the ordinary Book of Common Prayer, but many verbal changes have been made in the rubrics, in keeping with the revision to which the liturgy itself has been subjected. By this revision the Absolution, Athanasian Creed, Burial Service, and Catechism, are modified in a sense which will commend itself to many Christian people.

BIBLE BRIEFS. By G. C. and E. A. Needham. 2s. 6d. Hawkins. This excellent volume of outline themes for Bible students, by Gospel workers well known in both old and new worlds, is dedicated to Mr. William Fry, of Dublin. The object is to help all who in any measure help to fulfil the Divine commission, "Preach the Word," the needs of young workers being specially considered. The plan of the expositions is suggestive rather than exhaustive. Over forty in number, the chapters deal with a variety of subjects from the Old and New Testaments, presenting true Gospel teaching with a force and freshness which will make the work as a whole not only attractive to the studious reader but very useful to teachers of Bible-classes.

CHRISTIAN PROGRESS IN CHINA. By Arnold Foster. 2s. 6d. Religious Tract Society. A well-digested body of information, gleaned from the writings and speeches of many workers in China. The growing demand for some reliable account of missionary work and native Christian life in the Empire suggested to Mr. Foster, who is connected with the London Missionary Society, and stationed at Hankow, the idea of compiling this handy volume from recent reports and magazine articles. A secondary purpose has been to afford an indirect answer to charges which are sometimes brought against missionary effort. The book deserves careful reading, and we trust many will, through its pages, be led to take a greater interest in testimony for Christ in the Chinese Empire.

THE MISSIONARY YEAR BOOK FOR 1889. 2s. 6d. Religious Tract Society. This is in part a re-issue of the "Handbook" published last year, with large additions, numerous alterations, and statistical information brought down to the latest available date. It is gratifying to realise that at the present time many Christian people are making missions a serious study. All such will welcome this excellent digest of the history and progress of the principal missionary societies in Great Britain, on the Continent of Europe, and in America. Most of the sections have been specially prepared, and nearly all of them have been revised by the secretaries of the different societies. Dr. S. G. Green has furnished an introductory chapter pitched in the right key, and there is an index which those who use the book for reference will learn duly to appreciate for its fulness. Over 400 pages of information on the development of missions, must contain something to interest all Christian people. We trust the demand for the Year Book will be such as to ensure its regular appearance for many years to come.

AN EXPRESSION OF CONFIDENCE.—We are pleased to find that the friends assembling at Kilburn Hall have presented Mr. Ashby, whose case was recently referred to in our columns, with the sum of £70, raised chiefly among themselves by voluntary contributions. It was given as an expression of sympathy and confidence, and also to help in defraying the heavy legal costs which Mr. Ashby has incurred in connection with the false charge brought against him. The meeting at which the presentation was made was largely devoted to thanksgiving for Mr. Ashby's deliverance.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

Rev. Canon Fleming has declined the offer of the Deanery of Norwich.

A name long familiar and long loved among Christian workers at Cambridge, especially in the cause of missions, has been removed. The venerable vicar of Babraham, Rev. Joseph Singleton, died a few days ago after a lingering illness. He had been fifty years at Babraham.

SALVATION ARMY.

Last week 750 officers changed their stations; in connection with this move 69 new workers from the training depôts were sent into active service.

CONGREGATIONAL.

A new chapel and school were recently opened in the village of Cerne Abbas, Dorsetshire. At the close of the service the minister, Rev. D. Thomas, announced that the buildings were free from debt.

At Baddow-road Chapel, Chelmsford, Rev. J. Burgess has commenced a series of special Sunday evening services. There was a large congregation at the first service, when Mr. Burgess preached on "The People and the Book."

The Cheshire Congregational Union has appointed a Church Extension and Evangelistic Committee. Several new enterprises, in both town and country, are likely to be taken up, and arrangements are in progress for open-air work during the summer months.

At the annual meeting of Christ Church, Teddington, of which Rev. E. Theodore Hitchens is minister, encouraging reports were presented concerning the year's work. Upwards of £1200 have been raised. The Sunday-school has 280 scholars; mothers' meeting, fifty-three members; institute, with affiliated reading-room and rowing club, 150 members. The numbers of the communicants and the congregations have steadily increased throughout the year, and a magazine, drawing-class, soup-kitchen, gymnasium, and communicants' society of 100 members have been added to the organisations already existing.

PRESBYTERIAN.

At the recent meeting of Synod, Rev. J. T. McGaw, of Sale, was appointed General Secretary of the English Presbyterian Church, in succession to the late Rev. John Black.

Two Presbyterian congregations in Toronto, and two in Montreal, have each undertaken to support a missionary in the foreign field; and Erskine Church, Montreal, of which Rev. L. H. Jordan is pastor, has guaranteed the support of a second missionary for three years.

The third leading branch of the mission begun two months ago by Rev. Hugh McIntosh, of Brockley, in Deptford, a densely populated part of South London, was inaugurated on Sunday week, when, under the chairmanship of Lord Kinnaird, Mr. McIntosh gave the first of a series of Sunday Afternoon Talks to the People on "Is Life Worth Living?" The Gospel meetings are filled, and the Sunday afternoon talks were begun on Sunday to a large crowd of working people—largely men.

Under the direction of Rev. T. Meyer, himself a Christian Israelite, mission work among the Jews in the East of London has been continued throughout the past year without interruption, and not without encouraging tokens and some gathered fruits. During the seventeen years Mr. Meyer has conducted this mission he has administered baptism to sixteen persons, and among these are some bright ornaments to the Redeemer's crown, who are spreading the truth which they themselves have received.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

"S. A. D.," in The Advocate, says:—"At the Executive Board, Canada, held March 5, a sister of our Society, who offered herself for service in India, was accepted. We are corresponding with English Friends relative to her going to their mission service in that land. This sister is giving up not only herself, but her income, to this work."

The Friends' Foreign Mission Association has "accepted" Joseph Taylor, of Sunderland, for work in India; and Frederick Taylor, of Malton, is added to the home mission staff of evangelists. We regret to learn that the Provincial Mandarin refuses to allow R. J. Davidson and wife to settle in Tung Chwang, China. Let us hope that the way may yet open for them there.

The Friends' Missionary Advocate (Chicago) for May says:—"Our hearts go out to all the faithful workers in their different fields, but especially to our girls—Mary Sharman, among the Indians; Hettie Butler and Amanda Kirkpatrick, in China; Naomi George, in Jamaica; and Lillie Neiger, bravely toiling in Mexico. As you read their names, please send up a prayer for God's blessing on them and their work."

Dublin Yearly Meeting concluded on May 9, and was throughout of unusual interest. A committee was appointed to visit all the smaller meetings, especially those in the south. A new temperance society was formed, and anti-opium and anti-vivisection work encouraged. A young woman Friend goes out with John H. Williams and wife to India in the autumn. At the closing Bible-reading, conducted by John T. Dorland, about fifty voices were heard in prayer and testimony, all pronouncing it a time of marked advance and blessing.

BAPTIST.

Rev. E. G. Gange, of Bristol, has decided not to accept the invitation to be co-pastor with Dr. Maclaren, of Union Chapel, Manchester.

A number of the ministers who were formerly members of the Pastors' College Association, but are not included in the present Conference, met together on Thursday afternoon, May 2, at Cross-street Chapel, Islington, for prayer and fraternal intercourse. It was resolved to meet in a similar way in Birmingham in the autumn.

METHODIST.

The Queen's University, Canada, has conferred the degree of LL.D. on Rev. E. E. Jenkins.

The scheme for making City-road Wesleyan Chapel, London, a kind of cathedral church of Methodism is revived.

The Bible Christians in New Zealand have opened a mission in a new district. Three new chapels are nearly ready for use, and more missionaries are urgently needed. The four missionaries in China have succeeded in learning the language, and now preach the Gospel to thousands of the Chinese, many of whom make inquiry after the way of salvation.

The church of the Methodist New Connexion worshipping in Scotland-street Chapel, Sheffield, has recently been visited with gracious showers of refreshing, as the result of which much earnest work has been done for God in the midst of a dense population, and most cheering spiritual results realised. The church is girding itself for still more determined conflict with the powers of darkness rampant around it, for which prayer is asked.

In November last, Mr. W. Ambrose, of Nottingham, commenced to labour as an evangelist in the villages of the Holbeach Wesleyan Circuit, and by the blessing of God his services have been most successful. Mr. Ambrose invited the people to chapel by visiting them in their homes, and thus secured large congregations. In four or five of the villages the chapels have been full to overflow, and many interesting cases of conversion have taken place.

Connected with Trinity Wesleyan Chapel, Stockport, there is a strong mission band, which has done good work amongst the working-class population in the Hillgate and Heaviley portions of the town. The leaders of the band have within the last two years opened three mission-rooms in different parts of the south portion of the town. A mission-hall accommodating 150 has also been erected and paid for, in Johnson-street, Hempshaw-lane, a neighbourhood in which previously there was no place of worship. Besides the three mission-rooms, the mission band plan has eleven cottages upon it.

NOTES FROM SCOTLAND.

Mr. Webster, evangelist, is at work among the fishermen at Buckie, and is to be there during the fishing season.

Evangelistic meetings have been held at Dreghorn, Ayrshire, by Mr. R. Logan. Many have received blessing.

A conference of Christian workers in connection with Free St. Matthew's Mission-hall, Glasgow, was held on Saturday. A profitable time was spent.

The Scottish Evangelistic Association have arranged a somewhat extended programme of summer tent Gospel work in different parts of central Scotland.

A Society, to be called "The Young People's Society of Christian Endeavour," in connection with Cowcaddens Free Church, Glasgow, has been formed. Its object is to promote earnest Christian life among its members, and to provide opportunities of usefulness in the service of Christ, as well as to win others to the Saviour.

NOTES FROM IRELAND.

A very successful ten days' series of meetings under the auspices of the Lisburn Temperance Union has been held in the Orange Hall, Lisburn.

Messrs. Thompson and Nesbitt, of the Irish Evangelisation Society, have been holding for a couple of weeks a tent mission at Newry, and have had already many tokens of encouragement and success.

Dr. Pakenham Walsh, bishop of Ossory, Ferns, and Leighlin, has been preaching at several of the Dublin city and suburban churches for the Church Missionary Society with all his wonted vigour and earnestness.

The annual meeting of the Irish Society, which seeks to reach the Roman Catholics by giving them the Scriptures in the Irish language, has been held at Dublin. The Society appears to have had a successful year.

The Irish Presbyterian Continental Mission is at present in a prosperous state. The Church in Belgium has, during the year, enrolled 500 new members, and Rev. Wm. Moore is labouring indefatigably and successfully in Spain.

A Young Men's Christian Institute has been opened in Coleraine. About 175 young men have joined the Institute, which is affiliated with the Y.M.C.A. This association is the outcome of Major Whittle's mission, lately conducted in this town.

The General Synod of the Irish Episcopal Church, which has been in session at Dublin during the past fortnight, has closed. Among the suggestions which received its approbation was one that before ordination curates should be for a time under training by some wise experienced clergyman.

FALLEN ASLEEP.

Rev. Joseph Singleton, for fifty years vicar of Babraham, Cambridge.—Rev. Charles Hardy, of Dover, late rector of Hilborough, Norfolk.—Rev. William Knight, rector of Pitt Portion, Tiverton, formerly one of the secretaries of the Church Missionary Society.—Rev. Prebendary James Vaughan, late incumbent of Christ Church, Brighton.—At Belfast, Mr. Hugh Henry Boyd, an elder in the Presbyterian Church.—Rev. Thomas Witney, Baptist minister, of Lower Tooting.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

HOME.

The students of Mr. Spurgeon's Pastors' College have debated local option for four nights, and decided almost unanimously in its favour.

The Wesleyans, who have already a distinct Temperance Committee, are about to appoint a Connexional Organising Temperance Secretary.

Helen Chalmers, daughter of the noted divine, devotes her life to work among the drunken men and their families in the city of Edinburgh.

Mr. Edward T. Smith has concluded a ten days' Gospel temperance mission in Lisburn, Ireland. The largest hall in the town has been crowded. The meetings have been most enthusiastic, and a large number of pledges have been taken.

In answer to an appeal from the Duke of Westminster in the House of Lords, Lord Knutsford, for the Government, promised that all possible should be done towards the prohibition or restriction of the drink traffic with natives in Africa.

A "monster petition" from the members of the Salvation Army and others will shortly be presented to the House of Commons in favour of the Sunday closing of public-houses. It is expected that it will be signed by fully 1,000,000 persons in England.

The Baptist Total Abstinence Association, which its annual meetings recently, reports that the ministerial membership, after rigorous overhauling, stands at 1248, a gain of 36 on the year. Of the 219 students in the colleges, 201 are abstainers. The travelling secretary, Rev. J. M. Howson, has delivered 343 addresses and taken 1701 new pledges.

The coroner of Liverpool says he began as a moderate, and he used to go up and down the country persuading people not to take too much drink; but he was not satisfied either with himself or his success, so he tried the teetotal plan, and was much more useful to his hearers. He is turned sixty-one, is busy from morning to night, sits in a crowded court, but enjoys excellent health. The terrible lives he has to review made him an abstainer, but he finds that physically, mentally, and spiritually he is a better man for the change.

FOREIGN.

A new liquor law came into force in Boston, Mass., on Saturday, April 27. By it no fewer than 1700 drinking saloons were closed.

A shrewd American remarks, "Some of the richest men in England owe all their wealth to beer, and some of the poorest owe all their poverty to beer."

Temperance is making giant strides in Norway, and that country is said to bid fair to be the first in Europe to prohibit the manufacture and sale of alcoholic drinks.

Belgium spends in strong drink 135 million francs per annum, while the State only spends 16 millions in education. There are 5500 schools and 136,000 public-houses.

At Ballarat Rev. W. L. Morton conducts an inebriate retreat, at which there have been good rescue cases. To employ the patients a Bible and tract depôt has been opened, and various industries are carried on.

President Greene, of the West Shore Railroad, U.S., has issued a positive order forbidding the sale of beer and liquor in houses owned by the company. Any tenant who violates the order will be summarily ejected.

An American paper gives the following as a "Sum for the Boys": "If it costs £250 a year to carry on a church which saves five souls every year, and if a drink-shop licence-holder pays £50 a year for the privilege of ruining five souls, how long will it take a town having a population of 6000, with five churches and fifteen drink-shops to go to the devil?"

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, MAY 19.—Numbers VI.

THE law of the Nazarite, which is the subject of this chapter, is full of instruction, because we learn that for special purposes of holy service, we may be called upon to sever ourselves from things which, though not absolutely sinful in themselves, are calculated to interfere with that intense consecration of heart which is set forth in the true Nazariteship. The term signifies "separated to the Lord." Three rules are given here:—

(1) Not to touch any product of the vine (3).—This was also forbidden to the priests (Lev. x. 9—11). Wine is the symbol of ordinary social festivity, and it is very difficult to go into such scenes of revelry and mirth without losing something of that holy separation to God which we should cultivate. If we must have some special exhilaration, let us seek it elsewhere (Eph. v. 18, 19). Jesus Christ, the true Nazarite, thus bound Himself (Luke xxii. 17, 18).

(2) Not to cut the hair (5).—Hair is regarded as the sign of natural vigour and strength. The unshorn locks therefore signified the dedication of all natural powers to the service of God. How many razors Satan has by which to rob us of our full devotion to God. Let us see to it that we do not rest our heads upon Delilah's lap (Judges xvi. 19).

(3) Not to touch the dead, however dear (7).—How careful should we be in our contact with sinners, lest we become defiled by their dead works. Though, if we be involved, almost unknowingly (9), we must instantly seek forgiveness and cleansing (10), and begin again (12). We must get back to where we were at the beginning (Gen. xiii. 3, 4). But, ah, those lost days!

The ceremonies at the completion of the term of the Nazarite vow (13—21).—Sin offering for the sin that mingles with our holiest service; burnt offering as an expression of entire devotion to God; peace offerings as thanksgiving for grace to complete the vow.

The benediction with which this first section of the book closes is very beautiful. It evidently refers to the sacred Trinity, and has its counterpart in 2 Cor. xiii. 14. God promised to give effect to the priest's words (27).

MONDAY, MAY 20.—Numbers VII.

This and the two next chapters wind up the story of the stay at Sinai, ere the host started on their pilgrimage. It is one of the longest chapters in the Bible, and gives a detailed statement of a stately ceremonial which was repeated once a day for twelve days, each of the princes of Israel, the respective heads of the tribes, making a presentation in turn. It is very beautiful to find the careful minuteness with which the sacred historian details the successive gifts. We might have bulked them all together, saving the precious space, but the inspiring Spirit dwells lovingly on each special name and gift, so that each stands out in its own distinct beauty and grandeur to man's eye as to God's thought. Is not this a page out of God's book of remembrance, in which each alabaster box stands noted by itself?

To the Gershonites, who had to transport the hangings and drapery of the Tabernacle, two waggons were assigned; to the Merarites, who had charge of the solid parts, four waggons (7—9). The Kohathites bore the sacred vessels on their shoulders.

The aggregate worth by weight of the whole of the offerings would be £438 (84—88). But the real worth, when measured by the relative values of that time, especially just after the erection of the Tabernacle, must have been much greater. How munificent were these Jews to the house of God! Do they not shame us? We are carried forward to 1 Chron. xxix. Let us begin to imitate them by setting apart a fixed proportion of all we receive and have.

What a precious glimpse of heart-to-heart fellowship is that with which this chapter closes! Liberality is a poor substitute for fellowship. The two must be combined. Christ is the mercy-seat (Rom. iii. 25), and to the purged ear God speaks to us through the Holy Word day by day.

TUESDAY, MAY 21.—Numbers VIII.

In the midst of the wilderness journeyings we come to a paragraph about the candlestick. All through her earthly journey the Church must be the light of the world. Beaten out of one lump of gold, we see a type of its essential unity. The various parts indicate variety of function (1 Cor. xii. 4, 5, 6). The oil is the grace of the Holy Ghost, by which alone, daily received, can our testimony be maintained (Zech. iv. 3).

The ordination of the Levites follows (5—22).—They were first symbolically cleansed, by the sprinkling of the water of purification, the washing of their garments, and the shaving off of their hair, i.e., the application of the razor of death to all natural growth and strength. This was all required ere these men, naturally so fierce and cruel (Gen. xlix. 7), could be employed in holy service. Next, they were symbolically presented to God in the stead of the people, to do on their behalf the duties which otherwise had been incumbent on the entire host through their first-born sons. A special tribe was devoted to do the work of ministry to which the first-born were designated by their deliverance from death through the blood of the Passover Lamb. This saved them from plague which had otherwise visited them in the least neglect of duty (10). The offering of sacrifice was intended to atone for the sin of the holiest service, and to typify the entireness of consecration (12).

The age of the Levites had been fixed at thirty years (iv. 3, 23). But that was temporary, for the transport of the Tabernacle. This was for permanent service within the Tabernacle, in the land of rest, when a great number would be required, not only for service, but for teaching the people throughout their tribes. David afterwards arranged that the age should be lowered to twenty (1 Chron. xxiii. 20), so that there might be a larger supply. Oh for the covenant of Levi (Mal. ii. 4—6).

WEDNESDAY, MAY 22.—Numbers IX.

The Passover was celebrated in Egypt (Exod. xii.); in the wilderness (Num. ix.); and in the land of Canaan (Josh. v.). Redemption by the blood of Jesus thus lies at the root of all the great events in the history of God's children. There was a special circumstance that made this one memorable, because of the institution of "the little Passover" (6, 7). It is thought that these men were Mishael and Elzaphan, who buried their cousins Nadab and Abihu within a week of the Passover (Lev. x. 4, 5). Moses had no answer to give, and he did not try to invent one, but adopted the lovely attitude of waiting on God (8). How blessed is it to learn that God allows for the disabilities over which we have no control, and is willing to receive us in some other way, if unavoidable difficulties prevent us from obeying in the ordained fashion (2 Chron. xxx. 13—15).

The cloud in its movements guided the march of the host. It first appeared Exod. xiii. 21, and it led them amid all their wanderings. How could they have threaded their way through that great and terrible wilderness without its guidance? Our blessed Lord obeyed the movements of the cloud of his Father's will throughout his life; and so should we. We may not know our places from one day to another, but we need not be anxious, if only we are absolutely following the indications of his will (John viii. 12). If you do not know exactly what to do, wait still where you are. You may be very stupid, but God will make his meaning as plain as the movement of the cloud, if you will let Him. And when once you know his will, then strike your tents and follow. He will lead you out to work. He will lead you into rest. "My soul, wait thou only upon God, for my expectation is from Him."

THURSDAY, MAY 23.—Numbers X.

The silver trumpets spoke God's message to every circumcised ear. Hence they were blown only by the priests (8). Each trumpet was made of one piece, and fulfilled several purposes. They were used for the summoning of an assembly, the movement of the camp, and the gathering of war. Would that the Church in these days were as careful in giving God's messages to the people on the silver trumpet of testimony!

At the eleventh verse we enter upon the second main division of this book. All had been divinely ordered "according to the commandment of the Lord." Each man knew his pedigree and standard, every tribe knew its appointed place, whether in march or rest. The command given generally that the Tabernacle should occupy the central place in the line of march, after the camps of Judah and Rueben, was slightly modified, or at least more specific directions were given (17 and 21).

Hobab seems rather to have been the brother-in-law of Moses, and the Hebrew word will bear either rendering. Jethro had returned (Exod. xviii. 27), but Hobab seems to have accompanied Israel (Judges i. 16, iv. 11). It has been suggested that there was here some failure in Moses' faith, which led him to rely more on Hobab's general sagacity and knowledge of the desert than on God. But probably he had learnt God's will on the matter before asking him (31, 32).

The ark went first in the march. So does Jesus ever precede his people. He goes first to make crooked places straight, and rough places plain. When He puts forth his own sheep, He goes before them and leads them into rest. How lovely to see his goings in the van of our life-march, meeting our foes before they can touch us (Is. lii. 12).

FRIDAY, MAY 24.—Numbers XI.

We cannot wonder at the people murmuring, as they were unaccustomed to the fatigues of the desert, and it seemed so far to the land of rest; but, perhaps, we have never realised how great a sin is querulous complaining in the sight of God. Let us beware of it! (1 Cor. x. 10). Let us also guard against mingling ourselves with those who are not like minded with ourselves; "the mixed multitude" was largely composed of Egyptians (Exod. xii. 38), from whom the evil example spread to Israel (4). When our religious life is low, we tire of angels' food, and our hearts turn back to the world we had left.

Moses' complaint (10—15).—How marvellously accurate is the Bible in its delineation of the character and failure of its noblest men! What an evidence of its truthfulness! His eye had got off God on to self, or he would never have spoken as if the duty of providing flesh were his. God never imposes a burden for which He does not give sufficient strength; but we must not look at the burden apart from Him. As the day so the strength. He can make all grace abound.

Divine relief came in the appointment temporarily of seventy men to help him. But what a pity it was that he did not claim strength enough for his needs. And yet how tender was God's considerateness of his overwearied servant (1 Kings xix. 4, 5). The Jews say this body afterwards constituted the Sanhedrim. Note the unselfish exclamation of this generous spirit in which jealousy found no foothold (29). The answer to 23 is Isa. lix. 1.

The quails even now fly in vast quantities; exhausted by their long flight they flew about three feet above the earth, and so were easily felled. But the passionate haste in eating brought about a woeful plague, which left its story in the name of their halting place (Ps. cvi. 15).

SATURDAY, MAY 25.—Numbers XII.

It is a very serious matter to speak against any servant of the Lord, especially when he has been specially honoured and used. But even against the meanest we cannot speak without serious risk. The Lord overhears, and He takes such words as an insult to Himself. Let us seek to discover the good and lovely traits in men, and dwell on them.

Moses' behaviour was very lovely. The verse about his meekness (3) was probably inserted by some later hand; but this was a notable trait in his character. How different to the fiery spirit of earlier days! What cannot the grace of God effect? When we are spoken against, it is much wiser not to answer back again, or to rush into self-defence, but to follow the example of our Lord, and to hand over the battle to God (1 Peter ii. 20—25).

This Ethiopian wife may have been Zipporah, or some other woman whom he had married after Zipporah's death; but is it not an illustration of the way in which Christ's love to the Gentile Church has aroused the hostility of the Jewish people? Yet how high a commendation was passed on Him by God Himself (7, quoted Heb. iii. 2, 3). We are appointed servants in God's household, and his one demand is for faithfulness (Mark xiii. 34, &c.).

Miriam's punishment and restoration are very significant. The outer leprosy symbolising the state of heart, cleansed as the result of intercession (13), but leaving behind certain disabilities and entailing privation and shame, not on herself alone, but on others (15). Let us watch and pray lest we enter into temptation.

Mr. John Wanamaker, U.S. Postmaster-General, in a recent address, defined his position on the prohibition question in words whose meaning cannot be mistaken. He emphasised the necessity of unequivocal opinion and action, calling everyone to come out boldly and positively "Vote for prohibition, and you will be voting for God, for order, for religion, and for the highest civilisation."

International S.S. Lessons.

Sunday Afternoon, May 26.

JESUS BETRAYED: MARK xiv. 43—54.
GOLDEN TEXT: LUKE xxii. 48.

WHILE our Lord was meeting the agony of Gethsemane, Judas was making preparations to betray Him. In this lesson we see Jesus betrayed, apprehended, forsaken, and arraigned.

Jesus betrayed (43—45).—"Judas, one of the twelve"—not only a disciple, but an Apostle, and one entrusted with an important office (John xii. 6). "One of you," our Lord had said (18); some already knew which (John xiii. 24—26); now they all recognised him. Such intimacy as the traitor had enjoyed made his guilt all the greater. Nothing is more difficult to bear than slighted love. "Great multitude"—including some of the Roman cohort—"the band" (John xviii. 3); "the captains of the Temple"; chief priests and elders, and some of their servants (Luke xxii. 52; John xviii. 10). "Swords and staves," as though they anticipated resistance. John adds "lanterns and torches." The Passover moon was at the full, but they were prepared to search for Him, if He should seek to hide from them. What a great force to capture one man! Is there not an acknowledgment of Christ's power in the fact that such a multitude were supposed to be necessary for his arrest? "Whomsoever I shall kiss" (44).—Probably this was the usual mode of salutation. But to make it the sign by which he betrayed his Master was a sad abuse of the privileges of friendship. He put on the garb of a friend while doing the work of a foe. A man admitted to the privileges of a friend can do more harm and strike a more cruel blow than an open enemy (see Ps. lv. 12—14). This act of betrayal was evidently the supremely important event of that night—"the same night in which he was betrayed" (1 Cor. xi. 23). Prophecy had foretold it (Ps. xli. cix.); and at the Lord's Table we are constantly reminded of it. Why so important? Because the spirit of the act of Judas may overcome us still. Comp. John xii. 6, with Matt. xxvi. 15. The same spirit of covetousness which made him "a thief" made him also the betrayer. "The love of money" has in many other cases proved a terrible source of evil (1 Tim. vi. 10).

Jesus apprehended (46—49).—As soon as they laid their hands on Him an attempt was made to defend Him. "One of them"—Peter (John xviii. 10) drew his sword, and, without doubt, would have laid down his life for his Master. He was sincere in his declaration (29—31), and gave proof of it here. John calls the man who was struck "Malchus"; and Luke tells us that the Lord immediately restored the lost member. Evidently his power was not less than before; and his enemies' cruel treatment had not led Him to cherish any feeling of resentment. He answered their enmity by further love. "Are ye come out?" &c. (48)—One part of the humiliation of Christ was his being "numbered with the transgressors" (Isa. liii.). This was fulfilled on the cross, when He hung between two thieves; and even here, when He was apprehended as a thief. Yet our Lord made it manifest that it was not their power, but his voluntary surrender, that led to his being taken. His rebuke reminds them that to take a mere man the multitude was ludicrously large; and that since He was more than man, no multitude, however large, could take Him without his consent. He was apprehended only because "the Scriptures must be fulfilled" (49). All the force of his enemies combined cannot do beyond what is written (Ps. lxxvi. 10). Whatever their design, they can only fulfil the Scriptures.

Jesus forsaken (50—52).—"All forsook Him" (50). Read this in the light of their avowal (31). That which they were sure they would not do, they did. They were self-confident, so much so that they would not even believe the Saviour's warning; hence they failed in the hour of trial. "Let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall." "A certain young man" (51)—generally supposed to have been Mark himself. "We know he lived in Jerusalem, and that his family were probably already disciples (Acts xii. 12—25). And the blending of interest in Christ, with a timid disposition exactly accords with his character, as we find it afterwards exhibited (Acts xv. 38)."—Glover. Perhaps Mark inserts it in order to show that like the Apostles he too had forsaken Christ. All have left Him alone. None can have fellowship with Him in the atoning sufferings that await Him.

Jesus arraigned (53—54).—The trial itself will be considered in the next lesson. John xviii. 13 and 42 teach us that He was first taken to Annas, then to Caiaphas, the high priest. The council had been hastily summoned, that Jesus might be dealt with before the day dawned.

"Peter followed Him afar off" (54).—He could not cease following, for he was sincerely attached to Jesus. But he would follow so as not to be recognised. Hence he took his place among "the servants and warmed himself at the fire." He was acting the denial before he spoke it. Learn—

(1) The severity of the Saviour's sufferings. Even in this lesson, betrayed by a professed friend; apprehension as a thief; forsaken by his own. Illustrated by David opposed by Absalom.

(2) The evil of covetousness.—Judge it not only by the guilt of Judas's act, but by the consequences of it too. See Matt. xxvii. 5 and Acts i. 18—25. He made a bad bargain, as all do who choose the world in preference to Christ.

(3) The danger of self-confidence.—Compare 29—31 with 50, 54. "Be not high minded but fear" (Rom. xi. 20).

"FORBID THEM NOT."

THIS is the title of Mr. Bukovac's last painting, now on view at 5, Eagle-place, Piccadilly. It is a beautiful work of art, illustrating vividly Mark x. 13—16, and invests the narrative with an indelible interest.

Not only is the execution in first-class style, but ideas are imported into the picture which are striking and original in conception. Peter is credited with the principal share in driving mothers and children back, and his hand is firmly clenched around the wrist of a boy whom he is dragging away, to the well-depicted grief of a younger brother and sister, who with him were pressing forward through the throng.

In the Saviour's arms sits composedly a little child, whose profile reveals a look of perfect restfulness, while its mother bows to the ground overcome with joy and awe. In strong contrast is a little lad of four or five summers who obstinately resists all the endeavours of his mother, a richly-attired Jewess, to lead him to Christ—a mistake which in our own day is not confined to little children!

Judas grimly contemplates the scene with mingled scorn and indifference. The entire painting teems with interest. We cannot fully describe it; it should be seen, and, once seen, will not be forgotten.

NORWICH.—Our friend, Rev. F. B. Meyer, favoured us with a visit (we regret it could only be for one day) on Wednesday, May 1. Meetings were held afternoon and evening in Trinity Presbyterian Church, which had been kindly lent for the occasion. The pastor, Rev. W. A. McAllan, presided at both meetings. The subjects were "Salvation in Christ from the penalty and power of sin." Large audiences assembled, notwithstanding heavy rain. The Spirit of God was present to bless the ministry of his servant, for which the writer of this notice desires specially to express his thankful acknowledgments.

Bracondale, Norwich. ROBERT ADCOCK.

MR. MOODY'S SCHOOL at Chicago has attracted between three and four hundred students from all parts of the country. There are quite a number from the South. Mr. Moody speaks on such topics as repentance, faith, the new birth, justification; Rev. W. W. Clark, on the way to study the Bible, on the Book of Mark, &c.; and Professor Moorehead, on the types of Christ, and kindred subjects. At the close of the morning session, the workers report to Mr. Moody, and arrange, under their proper leaders, for the afternoon visitations and for the evening services. In all of Mr. Moody's plans, the reaching of the common people, the working people, is kept steadily prominent. If Mr. Moody furnishes instructive addresses on Biblical subjects, free of cost to all who desire to hear them, he expects those who have this privilege to help him carry the Gospel into every neglected corner of the city. The prospects are that his plans will succeed, and that, going out as he does into the smaller and mission churches, he will reach, more effectively than ever before, the hardened and indifferent classes of the city.—Boston Congregationalist.

ST. GILES AND THE GREEN FIELDS.

DEAR SIR,—We have over 1500 neglected little ones in regular attendance at our Sunday-schools, in the heart of this densely populated district, who are eagerly looking forward to that one bright period in their calendar—viz., "the Day in the Country," away from London's smoke and roaring traffic, to the pure air of one of our many accessible suburbs. Besides the one day in the country, we were enabled last year, through the liberality of our friends, to send about a hundred of the most destitute and deserving children for a fortnight or more to cottage homes, from which they returned wonderfully improved in appearance and health; we are striving to obtain funds to meet this extra effort this season.—Your obedient servant,

GEO. HATTON, Superintendent.
St. Giles' Christian Mission, 4, Ampton-street, Regent-square, W.C.

[This appeal is typical of a host of others; we shall be glad if our readers will not only respond to Mr. Hatton's call, but will enable us to help the many claimants on our general fund.—ED.]

GRINDING THE POOR.

A POOR woman came before the relief committee of one of our London Poor Law Unions lately—a pale, worn, half-starved-looking woman, whose husband is helplessly paralysed. She stated that her only source of living was the occupation of sewing hooks and eyes on cards for the shops, finding her own cotton; for this she received the sum of sixpence per gross of cards, each card containing twenty-four hooks and twenty-four eyes. This works out into an edifying sum in the art of domestic economy—the result being that when this woman, in this Christian land, has sewn on a gross of cards the enormous total of six thousand nine hundred and twelve of these minute little articles, finding her own cotton, she has then and there earned the munificent pay of sixpence! With the aid of her three little children, and by working from morning to night, she could earn one shilling (i.e., two gross, and the price of the cotton off!) making a total of nearly fourteen thousand individual articles, each individually sewn on to its card, as the result of her own labour and that of her children! The firm for which this work is done was named, and is one well known in the locality as a large and thriving concern—carriages and horses at home—with this poor woman and her children, and the likes of them, slaving and starving all over the neighbourhood. This is a little local contribution to the social revelations of the age, adding but little poetry to what used to be the pretty and poetic idea of—

The short and simple annals of the poor!

BURIAL REFORM.—The Lord Mayor, in presiding lately at the annual meeting of the Church of England Burial, Funeral, and Mourning Reform Association, said he was entirely opposed to the present system of funerals, the expenses of which ought to be reduced in all classes of society. The Bishop of London said that burial, with as little as possible to retard the action of the air and earth in the disintegration of the mortal remains, was becoming every day more necessary. Canon Barker deprecated excessive floral decoration at interments, and other gentlemen advocated various reforms in the sepulture of the dead.

"THE NUN OF KENMARE."—So Miss Cusack, the Nun of Kenmare, has returned to the Protestant fold. For a great many years she posed before the public, not only in the South of Ireland, but through Great Britain, as a decoy-duck. Her pen was never idle; and her utterances as a convert to Roman Catholicism were circulated far and wide. But she has flung off the Roman chain, having felt her relation to Roman Catholicism to be an intolerable tyranny. Let us hope that we shall yet hear of the return of Cardinal Newman. The moral of the whole business is that it is a dangerous game for Anglicans to be playing at sisterhoods, and imitating the practices of the Roman obedience. We regret to think that even in Ireland, where Romanism is seen as it is, there should be so many weak-minded Protestants fascinated by its childish attractions and frivolous services.—Christian Irishman.

DONATIONS
RECEIVED BY MESSRS. MORGAN & SCOTT
TO MONDAY, MAY 13, 1889.

 Will donors oblige us by giving explicitly and fully the titles of the missions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Mistakes which sometimes arise will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that our Donation List is made up for the Printer on Monday morning? Any amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number.

 We would respectfully urge all our friends, when remitting to us, to make Cheques, Money Orders, or Postal Orders payable to Morgan & Scott, and to cross them "City Bank;" this will effectually prevent loss of same.

 Donations should be sent by Cheque or P.O. Orders, not by stamps.

A Needy Village.—Miss Woods, Rokeles, Watton Norfolk, appeals for help in getting an iron mission-room in which to hold Sunday-school classes, Bible-readings, &c., for the inhabitants of neighbouring cottages. They are extremely destitute of spiritual advantages, most of them attending no place of worship. Miss Woods desires to know where she can get such a room new or second-hand.

The "World's Temperance Petition," addressed to the Governments of the world, and praying for the entire abolition of the traffic in liquor and opium, has received more than 150,000 signatures; 67,000 of these come from the United States, and 83,000 from various foreign countries, including England, Australia, Belgium, Burmah, New Brunswick, Canada, China, Ceylon, Japan, India, Mexico, Siam, and Turkey.

Milton-next-Sittingbourne.—A few Christian working men and women have taken a small hall in which to hold Gospel mission services for those who do not attend the other places of worship. The mission is in a very poor district where there is large scope for aggressive evangelistic effort, and the hall is badly in need of repair. One of the leading workers is Mr. G. Budds, 1, Brewery-road, Milton-next-Sittingbourne.

THE "CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE BAND" PLEDGE BOOK.

Paper covers, 6d.; Cloth boards, 1s.

"I haven't taken up teetotal work, but teetotal work has taken me up! Morgan & Scott made me accept a big, handsome Pledge Book, in February; and somehow the thing has fairly caught fire here. One led to another, and yesterday, boys were coming all day to sign! I had twenty-five recruits yesterday alone, and a whole squad more are coming this evening! and we are going in for getting EVERY boy in the whole village!—and now, 'Please, miss, mayn't the girls sign?' So I have got to open a girls' branch as well! So the work grows."

"Does 'Member' know the Pledge Card used by Miss F. R. Havergal, and published with corresponding book, by Messrs. Morgan & Scott? It strikes the highest keynote for all Temperance Work, for it is worded thus:—

"'IN VIEW of the great dishonour done to our most gracious God and Saviour; and in consideration of the damage, temporal and eternal, to our fellow-creatures, through the drinking of strong drink, I AGREE to abstain from all Intoxicating Drinks as a Beverage, and to discountenance their use by others (John xv. 5; 1 Thess. v. 22; Philippians iv. 13).'"

THE CATACOMBS AT ROME:

THEIR CONTENTS AND TEACHINGS.

By BENJAMIN SCOTT, F.R.A.S., Chamberlain of the City of London. With Seventy small Illustrations. Tinted covers, 2s.; Cloth boards, 2s. 6d. Presentation Edition: Bevelled boards, gilt edges. 3s. 6d.

"Most people have heard of these famous Catacombs, but nowhere have we met with a more graphic or instructive account of their contents than in this little book. The many wood-engravings help to make the whole thing quite plain."—General Baptist Magazine.

"There is no volume equally moderate in price, giving to English readers so full and clear an account of those sepulchral remains of the early Christians which are, indeed, to quote Mr. SCOTT'S sub-title, 'A Vindication of pure and primitive Christianity, and an exposure of the corruptions of Romanism.'"—Christian Leader.

"A powerful vindication of pure and primitive Christianity. The value of the book is enhanced by a great number of fine Illustrations. The public have given this book a very hearty reception, as it has now reached its fourth edition. May it reach a thousand more editions! Mr. SCOTT has done his work well. This book will well repay a careful perusal. Mr. SCOTT has something to tell; and he tells it in a most fascinating manner."

The Evidences of Christianity;

Or, THE WRITTEN AND LIVING WORD OF GOD.

By ARTHUR T. PIERSON, D.D., of Philadelphia.

Tinted Covers, 2s. Cloth Boards, 2s. 6d.
Presentation Edition: Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, 3s. 6d.

"This is an excellent work, popular, yet exact and philosophical. The author has passed through the darkness and conflict of doubt, and sympathetically understands the sorrows and burdens of the situation, and is an able minister to a mind diseased."

Primitive Methodist Magazine.

"Written in a clear, logical, and devout style. We hope some who are in the dark may read and be brought into light. It has the true ring of the old Gospel, and should produce lasting good on some of the young men of our congregation who are becoming bewildered by the Babel of tongues ever and anon pretending to have discovered some new thing calculated to throw suspicion and doubt on the old."—Baptist Messenger.

"We are well acquainted with this little volume; it is, for its size, one of the very best aids to faith we know; no young man, sceptically inclined, can resist its conclusions if he will read it conscientiously through. A book to read and pass on with a prayer of hope."

Who may be personally or relatively

INTERESTED in THIS MATTER.

MR. CONGREVE will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED in this Journal BEFORE, EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

CASES REPORTED BY REV. J. J. McCLURE, THE MANSE, DUNEANE, RANDALSTOWN, IRELAND.

Writing me Nov. 26 last, Mr. McClure says:—

"Dear Mr. Congreve,—I have used your medicine with great success in cases of Lung Disease, with members of my congregation, &c.

"Mr. T. B. had inflammation of the lungs, and the doctors thought he would succumb to Phthisis. After taking your medicine for some months he became quite strong. He is now managing a business house in New York.

"Miss A. F., aged 19, hollow chest, was suffering from cough, expectoration, &c.; and was pronounced incurable. She took your medicine and cod liver oil. To the surprise of her friends she soon began to recover, and is now well.

"Miss Z. M.—Inflammation of the lungs was followed by great weakness, anæmia (deficiency of red blood), dyspepsia, and general debility. Decided improvement took place from perseverance with your medicine. The doctors report that the cavities in the lungs have completely healed.

"Two or three other cases I might name should you desire to know them."

In the case of one patient, J. S., who died, Mr. McC. says he found much relief in the alleviation of cough, &c.

NOTE. — Days of Consultation. — TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

THE GOLDEN TREASURY BIRTHDAY BOOK.

With Beautifully Illuminated Frontispiece.

Presentation Editions: Morocco, gilt edges, 3s. 6d.; rich coloured leather, padded, gilt edges, 4s. 6d.

In this country very few books, except the "Pilgrim's Progress," have been so largely circulated or so widely read as BOGATZKY'S "GOLDEN TREASURY." In addition to the issue of BOGATZKY in the ordinary form, the Publishers have also produced an Edition, ARRANGED AS A BIRTHDAY BOOK, a form in which it is believed the volume will be welcomed by many. In this "BIRTHDAY" Edition four additional pages are introduced at the close of each month's portions. These extra pages are arranged with thirty or thirty-one blank square spaces—one for every day of the month. Each of these squares is adapted for receiving four entries; consequently, the total number of names which can be inscribed in the special pages of the "Birthday" Edition amounts to OVER FIFTEEN HUNDRED.

Cheap Edition: Cloth, gilt edges, 2s. 6d.

London: MORGAN & SCOTT, 12, Paternoster-buildings; and may be ordered of any Bookseller.

A COMPLETE AND AUTHENTIC ACCOUNT OF THE LIVES, SUFFERINGS, AND TRIUMPHANT DEATHS OF EARLY CHRISTIAN AND PROTESTANT MARTYRS IN ALL PARTS OF THE WORLD. With Frontispiece Engraved on Steel, and Twelve Full-page Illustrations.

Presentation Edition: Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 12s. 6d.

"This is a new edition of Foxe's useful and standard work. It is a most masterly exposure of what Popery really is, and what it can do when it has the upper hand. The perusal of this book should form part of the education of our youth. Heads of families should purchase it for their children to read. Popery could find no place where 'FOXE'S MARTYRS' is studied.—Christian Progress.

Cheap Edition: Cloth, bevelled boards, 10s. 6d.

As Used by the Late FRANCES RIDLEY HAVERGAL.

THE "CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE BAND" PLEDGE BOOK.

Paper covers, 6d.; Cloth boards, 1s.

"I haven't taken up teetotal work, but teetotal work has taken me up! Morgan & Scott made me accept a big, handsome Pledge Book, in February; and somehow the thing has fairly caught fire here. One led to another, and yesterday, boys were coming all day to sign! I had twenty-five recruits yesterday alone, and a whole squad more are coming this evening! and we are going in for getting EVERY boy in the whole village!—and now, 'Please, miss, mayn't the girls sign?' So I have got to open a girls' branch as well! So the work grows."

From "Memorials of Frances Ridley Havergal," page 231.

THE "CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE BAND" PLEDGE CARD.

LARGER QUANTITIES FOR SOCIETIES ON SPECIAL TERMS.

"Does 'Member' know the Pledge Card used by Miss F. R. Havergal, and published with corresponding book, by Messrs. Morgan & Scott? It strikes the highest keynote for all Temperance Work, for it is worded thus:—

"'IN VIEW of the great dishonour done to our most gracious God and Saviour; and in consideration of the damage, temporal and eternal, to our fellow-creatures, through the drinking of strong drink, I AGREE to abstain from all Intoxicating Drinks as a Beverage, and to discountenance their use by others (John xv. 5; 1 Thess. v. 22; Philippians iv. 13).'"

MUSIC HALLS.

ON FRIDAY EVENING, the 17th instant, a Special Meeting was held at 200, EUSTON ROAD, and a Committee was formed to adopt means of concerted action, on the lines as follow:—

1st. That licensed victuallers and vendors of strong drink ought not to be entrusted with music licenses. Music Halls only demoralize young men and women.

2nd. That Working Men's, and all other Clubs, where strong drinks are consumed, should be compelled to be licensed, as licensed victuallers, &c., are now.

Mr. A. MORDAUNT SMITH was elected as Hon. Secretary.

The prompt and hearty co-operation of the friends of the young is most earnestly solicited.

EDWARD W. THOMAS, Convener.

Thousands of Fishermen are engaged all the year round in providing OUR TABLES with fish. These men, who FOR US hazard their lives and toil through furious blasts and sleety storm (not only cut off from the comforts of home, but at two days' distance from medical or surgical aid), may rightly claim some small share in the privileges we so richly enjoy. THIS THEY CAN ONLY HAVE THROUGH THE PRESENCE OF THE MISSION VESSELS, carrying to the Fishermen the message of Divine mercy and love, affording relief in sickness, and cheering dull lives by their presence.

HELP WANTED FOR THE TOILERS OF THE DEEP.

TEN Mission Vessels now cruise with the Trawling Fleets, each being at once a CHURCH, DISPENSARY, LIBRARY, and CLUB. Funds are required to provide a Mission Vessel for EVERY FLEET, and for the maintenance of the HOSPITAL MISSION SHIPS Queen Victoria and Albert. The urgent necessity of these floating Hospitals is shown by the fact that during last year over 7,000 cases of accident and sickness were successfully treated on board the Dispensary of the Mission Vessels. WHO WILL HELP? Large or small Offerings will be thankfully acknowledged.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give portrait and sketch of Count Andrew Bernstorff, Minister of Public Worship and Instruction, Germany.

The Wesleyans in New York are said to have passed a resolution declaring that the practice of obtaining money for church and charitable purposes by bazaars, fairs, suppers, pleasure parties, and similar means, has become a source of temptation to the Church at large. This example might with advantage be followed by all the religious bodies in these islands. We are aware of a recent instance in which a minister expressed his objection to a bazaar or fair being held for the purpose of raising a large sum of money for the alteration of a church; in a few weeks the amount was subscribed by the congregation.

Most of us are lamentably ignorant of the cost at which many of the things we are accustomed to see about us are obtained. It is a sad fact that a large number of these articles can only be obtained or prepared at the cost of human lives. The manufacture of white lead, one of the necessary ingredients in all our white paint, has quite a martyrology, paralysis, blindness, and early death being only too frequently the lot of those employed in making it. Every Christian man will, therefore, rejoice that a Glasgow firm, Messrs. Hannay & Pope, has discovered a method, cheap and successful, of manufacturing the compound without the slightest risk to the health and lives of those engaged in the occupation. We trust that, if legislation should be necessary to put an end to the continued use of the old and deadly methods, there will be no delay in dealing with the matter.

Rev. H. Batchelor, Congregational minister, Weston-super-Mare, has been very forcibly writing to Nonconformist papers in defence of the Vicarious Nature of the Atonement, and of the typical foreshadowings of it in Leviticus. He says, justly, that there need be no fear as to future faith in a redeeming and atoning Saviour, but that it will be the denominations on which the wave of rationalism and of this great denial falls that will suffer, and they will inevitably suffer severely. It will be well if this warning be laid to heart.

During a debate on preaching in the recent meetings of the Congregational Union, Rev. Richard Lovett, of the Religious Tract Society, made an important distinction. Before College professors are blamed for not sending forth able ministers of the Gospel, it ought not to be forgotten that the churches have a prior duty in the matter. But churches do not meet the first requirement in keeping out of the ministry the wrong men; there is inadequate testing of the applicant, and very little discrimination is exercised. This goes very much to the root of the matter of failure in preachers, and it applies all round. Twice does the Word of God enjoin in relation to such an applicant that he must be "apt to teach," and also must not be a novice; and must, as a tried man, have a good report. There have been times when churches fasted and prayed before they sent forth men into Christ's ministry. Can anything excuse the careless manner in which it is often now done?

There is so much to distress in the sweep of temptations around young men in our cities that there is a danger of overlooking the brighter side. In a sermon preached this month by Dr. Thain Davidson he bears witness to a decided moral improvement in the middle-class youth of London. In the City restaurants a growing number take some harmless beverage instead of intoxicants with their mid-day meal; their attire in the City is more sober than it was; they are improved in language, more attentive to business, and less eager to rush off to the music-hall or billiard-room, while an increasing proportion give themselves to mental improvement. There are tens of thousands of young men in large cities, of whom all this is delightfully true; and, through the blessing from above, those who have been labouring for the welfare of young men ought gratefully to be credited with such gratifying results.

To the worldly mind all definite doctrine is obnoxious. But on the other hand there is a new school arising who wish to abandon theological creeds, because they say they kill spiritual emotion. The Spectator, of last Saturday, replies to these new objectors to orthodoxy by showing that throughout all the Christian centuries the most exquisite outpourings of spiritual feeling have come from men who had a solid dogmatic basis for their faith. If now the richness and fulness of religious emotion is deserting many, it is because they have lost definite foundations of belief. The truth is there is a fashion in opinions as in other things; a so-called "freedom" is the present fashion, and this is very much like a master-mariner claiming freedom to sail as he likes, and to go where he thinks proper, without regarding nautical data, whereby he might learn where he is going.

The same journal contains the following example from Melbourne of the logical result of secularism in State education:—

> A child in a Victorian State school had to answer the question at a recent examination—"Why should we obey our parents?" The little thing foolishly put in a reference to the fifth commandment. The inspector was sorry, but he had no option; he could not give any marks. The proper answer was—"Because they feed, clothe, and educate me."

And there are those who think that this answer was a better one than for the child to have said—"Because God commands us."

Referring to the "Penny-a-Week" Hospital Fund movement, which has now been inaugurated, The Hospital has some practical remarks which are deserving of thoughtful consideration. The writer makes the striking statement that "as we stand at present, the country is face to face with the fact that nearly half its population are quite willing when sick to depend for medical relief upon the charity of outsiders." He adds:—

> The sight of strong men in full work, drinking beer and smoking tobacco when well, and then flying to the hospital at the first sign of illness for the aid of charity is, if we would but think of it, both a scandalous and a dangerous sign of the times.

It would be interesting in connection with this subject to learn what position in regard to expenditure upon drink such towns as Sunderland, where for some time back the working men have contributed almost munificently towards the local hospitals, hold. Does the drink bill decrease as the hospital subscription list increases? No doubt such would be found to be the case, for it is far from likely that men who have sufficient self-denial to give systematically to philanthropic and religious work, would be selfish enough to indulge in the debasing habit of drinking.

It is quite startling to find in how many of these labour questions, which are now coming to the front with painful frequency, an important factor is that of compulsory toil upon the Lord's Day. We do not think that any payment could make up for this seventh day toil; for, apart from all religious aspects, if, indeed, it is possible to leave those aspects out of the question, this Sunday toil is as destructive to the body as it is injurious to the soul. In some cases, however, it may be urged that the work is a public necessity, as, for instance, where the public safety and the public health are affected; but where only convenience and luxury are concerned, the responsibility rests not entirely with the employers who derive profit from the toilers, but extends to everyone who knowingly uses the product of such tyranny.

The first volume of LIFE AND LABOUR, edited by Charles Booth (the series in which we are promised the results of unbiassed and unofficial inquiries into the condition of the working classes and their surroundings), has put us in possession of much valuable information in regard to the state of things in the East-end of London. Although Mr. Booth and his colleagues are in a position to assure us that things are not as bad as they have been painted, there is sufficient in the volume to give every thoughtful reader deep pain. Mr. Booth divides the population of 900,000 in the East-end into eight classes, the lowest class of all, including "occasional labourers and criminals," numbering only 11,000. Their life, after careful observation, is defined as that of savages "with vicissitudes of extreme hardship and occasional excess." The next class, however, numbers 100,000 of the very poor "who live in a state of chronic want"; and 75,000 "who can and do perform good work but only get it irregularly"; and over this again 129,000, "whose earnings are small, but fairly regular, not exceeding 21s. a week."

The comparison of this with the luxury of the West is exceedingly painful, for these workers, who are so fortunate as to have "small but fairly regular" earnings, have no margin for neglect, or accident, or misfortune, and soon under such circumstances gravitate to the lower classes. What must these 100,000, "who live in a state of chronic want," think of our modern Christianity when they read of banquets, costing a hundred pounds each, being carried at a ceremony an hour, and then done with; of twelve thousand pounds being given for a small painting; and of club dinners at five guineas per head? Is it likely that they can console themselves, as many of us do, with the thought that these extremes are simply a social problem?

The gambling evil having been obtruded upon public attention, has been considered in the Lower House of Convocation, before which a Committee reported a few days ago. The great prevalence of betting and games of chance, alike among young and old, poor and rich, and the many misfortunes which follow in the train of all such dishonourable practices, were duly reviewed. Among the suggestions made were:—

Remonstrance with individuals by parents, teachers, employers of labour, and all persons in authority, as well as by the clergy; plain speaking from the pulpit, exposing the direct sin of these practices, and their evil consequences; enforcing the duty of Christian men and women to set their faces against them as strongly as against drunkenness and impurity; and exhorting the upper classes to set a wholesome example in these things.

While abstaining from definite suggestions as to fresh legislation, the Committee recommended that steps should be taken, by petition to Parliament or by representation to the executive, to induce the legislative authorities to deal with the practice in the same spirit as led to the suppression of lotteries. Meanwhile, convinced that the enforcement of the existing law cannot but have a good effect, the Committee appealed to the magistracy and the police authorities to do all in their power to check and abate the evil. We sincerely trust that the suggestions will be acted upon, and the appeal will receive a loyal response.

The decision of the High Court given on Saturday as to the legality of the practice of dishorning cattle is very important. It is to be hoped it will put an end to the cruel practice which seems to have been revived of late in the county of Norfolk. Mr. Justice Hawkins in the course of his judgment said:

If the law were that any man could in his interests, or for his pecuniary benefit, cause torture and suffering to animals without legitimate reason, and could excuse himself upon the ground of an honest belief that the law justified them, it is difficult to see the limits to which such a principle might not be pushed, and the creatures it is man's duty to protect from abuse would oftentimes be suffering victims of gross ignorance and cupidity. In this case it appeared that the operation was performed indiscriminately upon whole herds of cattle at a time, without regard to age, habits, or tempers, and not because any of them have shown themselves to be dangerous, or exhibited the least trace of temper or unruliness, but because possibly hereafter in some feeding-yard some one or more of them may turn out to be troublesome, and because the operation may for some reason or other add a few shillings to their price when sold. The animals thus operated upon each year may amount in numbers to tens of thousands. Constant familiarity with unnecessary torture and abuse of dumb animals cannot fail by degrees to brutalise and harden all who are concerned in or witness the sufferings inflicted. In my opinion the practice of dishorning is a cruel, unreasonable, and unnecessary abuse of the animals operated upon, and therefore that it is illegal and ought to be suppressed.

The Lord Chief Justice was equally strong in his condemnatory language, and the case that called forth this judgment is referred back to the Norwich magistrates, that they may impose an adequate penalty for the offence.

We revert to the subject of the licensing and supervision of London music-halls, in order to emphasise the need of seizing the present opportunity for reform. The special committee appointed by the London County Council to investigate and report ought to be fortified by every available evidence as to abuses that exist in connection with these places of amusement. Mr. F. N. Charrington, of the Great Assembly Hall, Mile End-road, E., is a member of the committee, and no doubt he will be glad to receive, and place in the proper quarter, any information that is entrusted to him by responsible persons.

SALVATION ARMY WORK.

MRS. BOOTH-TUCKER, daughter of General Booth, and wife of the chief officer of the Salvation Army in India, is on a visit to England, on account of the serious illness of her mother. At a special meeting held on Friday last, in the Congress Hall, Clapton, she said that she had so far seen much to cheer her in India. The natives are joining the Army in large numbers, in face of the fact that, upon professing Christ, they become outcasts of society.

On Monday "all day" meetings were held in the City Temple, Holborn Viaduct. The subject was, "Personal Religion in relation to the Personal Service of Christ." The General presided, and addresses were delivered by returned officers from Asiatic and European countries, as well as by workers now about to take the field. The Finnish contingent included a gentleman who was formerly an officer in the Russian Army. A converted Buddhist priest occupied a place on the platform by the side of a Singalese ex-publican, and a saved "devil dancer" also from Ceylon, the whole making a very happy family, with the chief British officers of the Army.

The afternoon was devoted to testimony, and although the morning meeting was a very animated one, the palm of interest must be given to that held in the evening, when the spacious building was full. In the course of a stirring address, General BOOTH called for a return to primitive Christian earnestness in work for God. In the days immediately succeeding the Lord's death, marvels were wrought in his name, and with our additional facilities they ought to be easily equalled to-day. He drew stimulating lessons from Matt. x. 16—32, and appealed for workers for all lands. From the needs of the heathen abroad, he came to consider the case of the heathen at home, and in conclusion asked for signatures to a petition to Parliament in favour of the Sunday Closing of public-houses. A petition is to be sent to the "Queen mother," signed by children who know something about the evils of the drink traffic; it will ask Her Majesty to move the authorities to pass a Bill for the protection of children from the ravages of the publicans and the damning influence of the drink. A third petition is being promoted, signed by publicans and their employés, in favour of Sunday Closing. The various addresses were characterised by much fervour, and endorsed with enthusiasm by the assembly.

At a Temperance Convention in Dublin, the city coroner, Dr. N. O. Whyte, stated with much feeling that the horrors consequent upon drink which had perpetually surrounded him for more than twenty years had aged him before his time, and taken from him much of the zest for life. He had seen numberless families of respectability utterly destroyed and swept away. He could not call to mind a single case of homicide that was not immediately or remotely the result of drink.

OBITUARY.

MRS. TROTMAN.

MRS. TROTMAN, wife of a Christian worker well known in Islington and the north of London, has just entered into rest. After a long illness, she succumbed to an attack of bronchitis. Having endured pain with patience, she fell asleep peacefully, trusting her Saviour and Lord. Forty years of hearty service with her husband have made her memory doubly dear to all who knew her.

MRS. BLEW-JONES.

On the morning of May 1 the Lord Jesus called to her heavenly home Mrs. Mary Blew-Jones. This devoted servant of the Lord is known to many, also her work amongst the sick and intemperate. Truly whatever her hand found to do in her loved Master's service she did it with all her might. Christian friends will praise our God for permitting her to realise all his promises, as He daily gave her peace, perfect peace, until she fell asleep in Jesus. In an early number we hope to write more at length of the life and work of this faithful servant of Christ.

MR. J. C. MACKENZIE.

We regret to record the decease, at the age of forty-five, of Mr. J. Crichton Mackenzie, who passed away on Sunday week, at his residence in Bromley, Kent. Mr. Mackenzie was a son of the late Dr. Mackenzie, Presbyterian minister, Birmingham, who was an earnest temperance reformer. His son did not take an active part in the movement until 1882, when he signed the pledge at a tent mission in Hampstead, conducted by Mr. William Noble, and at once became so energetic a worker that in a short time he took over 1200 pledges. He joined the Hoxton Hall committee in 1883, and for two years conducted the largest weekly meeting connected with the mission. His death is sincerely mourned by a large circle of friends and fellow-labourers. Deep sympathy is felt for his widow, who is an able temperance advocate, and will be better known to many of our readers as a daughter of Mr. W. Mate, of Bournemouth.—Temperance Record.

MR. JOHN CADBURY, OF BIRMINGHAM.

It is with peculiar regret that we record the loss to Birmingham and the cause of religion and temperance, occasioned by the death of Mr. John Cadbury. Born in 1801, the deceased was one of the first men in Birmingham to sign the temperance pledge, and to engage in efforts to awaken the people to the terrible evils connected with the drink traffic. A member of the Society of Friends, Mr. Cadbury was well and widely known as the founder of the large cocoa and chocolate business, which since the year 1851 has been carried on by his sons Richard and George. For the past twenty years, owing to bodily infirmity, the deceased has lived very much in retirement. For a long time previously he interested himself in philanthropic movements, and took a practical interest in the public affairs of Birmingham. He was a vice-president of the National Temperance League, and officially associated with other similar organisations, to which he rendered substantial material support. Mr. Cadbury was present at the Friends' Meeting House, Bull-street, on Sunday week, but in the afternoon he had an apoplectic seizure, from which he never rallied. At the funeral at Witton Cemetery, Alderman White enforced several lessons to be learned from the memory of the departed, whose family, walking in his footsteps and those of his father before him, constitute among themselves a numerous temperance society, and quite a league of friends of the kingdom of God and the righteousness thereof.

THE SALVATION ARMY IN PARIS.—The meetings at 3, Rue Auber are being largely attended by people who have not been in the habit of attending public worship at all. A Canadian friend of the Army has offered 250 francs towards every hall that may be opened in the city.

ALGERIA.—The Protestant Committee in aid of the victims of the plague of locusts last year was enabled, by the kindness of the Christian public, to do much good. The residents of Sétif were most severely tried, but relief was dispensed to Catholics as well as Protestants, to Mohammedans as well as Christians. The moral effect of this generous aid from European churches is, says Pastor Gory, of Sétif, altogether beyond human estimation. The amount placed at the disposal of the Committee has so far reached 16,480 francs. There are apprehensions as to the coming summer as the hatching of larvæ has already begun.

The Portraiture of Jesus.—2.

Revelation i. 13—16.

The portraiture of our Lord, as seen by John in the Isle of Patmos, exhibits Him "as a priest for ever after the order of Melchisedec." He is both a Priest to minister, and a King to govern. As Priest He has something to offer; and so precious is that something, even his own blood, that it admits of no finality, increase, or diminution. And as King, "King of righteousness, and after that King of Salem, which is King of peace," the key-stone of his government is not "Might is right," but "Right is might." Authority, therefore, concerns every part of the Apocalyptic portraiture. There is no weak line anywhere. See Jesus as John saw Him, and what change of meaning attaches to the cry, "Behold the Man!" What amplitude of power, energy, status, might, do you behold! "And when I saw Him, I fell at his feet as dead." Why so? Is not the time at hand when to see Him as He is shall mean assimilation to the object seen? Why had not the saintly John that experience then and there? The reason, we venture to think, is because there is no perfection in the flesh. John, though in the Spirit on the Lord's day, was constituted as we are. Hence the swooning away on his part. While in the flesh, we shall have the flesh to contend with; but, when the Bridegroom comes for his Bride, then shall be given her strength to sustain, and that for ever, the beatific vision. See Phil. iii. 20, 21; John iii. 2, 3.

It may seem strange to some that the description of Christ's feet should follow that given of his eyes. But the attributes of both companionise; the one is the complement of the other. As the eyes were "as a flame of fire," so the feet resemble "fine brass, as if they burned in a furnace." The eyes and the feet supply a true sequence. The eyes tell of pure and searching penetration; the feet, being comparable to burning brass, bespeak zeal and judgment. Christ not only sees, but He acts. The feet follow the eyes in order. His burning feet intimate to us that He is strong to judge. It is a mistake to imagine that Christ can in the least toy with the spirit of falsity or lawlessness. He has a zeal of God which is according to knowledge; and his feet show the determinate decision which shall characterise his dealings with the Church and the world at his coming. Christ's feet shall subdue his enemies under Him. And it is in that sense we are mainly to understand Ps. cx. 1: "The Lord said unto my Lord, Sit Thou at my right hand, until I make thine enemies thy footstool." A footstool is for the placing of the feet on. And so in respect of Christ's enemies. It is not, as generally understood, that God the Father subdues his enemies for Him, but that God the Father gives his enemies to become his (i.e. Christ's) footstool. With this interpretation the remainder of the Psalm will be found to agree. It is the God-man who judges as well as saves. Hence the caution given in Ps. ii. 12: "Kiss the Son, lest He be angry, and ye perish from the way, when his wrath is kindled but a little." So He is said (Ps. cx. 5) to "strike through kings in the day of his wrath." More specifically still, the Prophet Zechariah (xiv. 4) describes the action of his feet when He shall stand on the Mount of Olives, and there shall be a great parting: "and half of the mountain shall remove toward the north, and half toward the south." Christ shall tread down the evil. His brazen feet, glowing to the point of white heat, show us that He cannot be withstood. The overthrow of his enemies shall be summary and utter. Burning zeal for the truth and uttermost consuming energy against the false and the evil are plainly expressed in this feature of our Lord's person; and, though this trait was held in check in the days of his flesh, yet it was there. His look of indignation proclaimed it. His action in clearing the Temple precincts of the traders and money-changers showed what righteous fury there is in the Lamb of God, and what power to execute judgment belongs to his fire-flashing feet. Happy those who, conquered by his grace, have nothing to fear from the great day of his wrath!

We have next to note that John was privileged to hear as well as see his Lord. "His voice was as the sound of many waters." Doubtless, there is brought out here the soul-enthralling power of Christ's word. When He speaks, all other sounds are carried away by the multitude of the torrent. It is a characteristic of the phenomenon here alluded to—"the sound of many waters"—that it absorbs the listener. The sense of hearing is so filled under such circumstances that the mind is enchained thereby. And how true must this needs be in fact. When He comes, Christ's word shall fill all ears. There shall be no room for anything else, save the sound of his voice. Whether blessed or terrible, as the case may determine, his voice shall be alike all-engrossing. The power of his voice shall monopolise the soul.

Attention is next turned to the right hand, and the precious contents of the same. "He had in his right hand seven stars." These stars are explained to be the angels of the seven Churches; by which we understand, not the man-made, but the God-made ministry. It would be folly to deny that while multitudes press into the ministerial calling who have not the grace, though in some instances they have the gifts for the office, yet in every age there is a number divinely chosen and separated to the work. Such men are especially precious in the Master's account, and, to show it, He holds them in the right hand—the hand of value. Their position shows that they are there to be guarded, and also applied. He holds them to keep and to use.

The sword proceeding out of Christ's mouth is meant to represent the inherent power of the breath of Christ's mouth. He needs no sword of steel to enforce his administration. The breath of his lips is as a sharp two-edged sword, which cuts to the very quick. The sword proceeding from the mouth represents moral authority as contrasted with mere physical force, which would be denoted by the sword in the hand. If nations could but learn it, there is a stronger bulwark in National Protestantism than in all the armies and navies in the world. But the day seems past, if ever it has been, for the embodiment of this conviction. The framework of society must go on to dissolve till He come who shall restore judgment to righteousness.

The final touch in the portraiture concerns the countenance of Christ, which "is as the sun shining in his strength." Up to this point the Apostle was able to detail what he saw. He could particularise certain aspects of dress, position, and feature. But when it comes to a full view of our Lord, the result baffles detailed exposition. For a moment he sees the blinding splendour; the next moment he swoons away. This is not surprising. The countenance is the mirror of the soul, upon which the play of the life within is reflected. How much in Christ's case did this mean! When we consider the peerless depths of purity, wisdom, Godhood that found expression in his face, that lit up his countenance, it is no wonder that the beholder succumbs before a sight so divinely glorious. If man's unaided vision cannot steadily look at the sun, which is one of God's creatures, how much less is it able steadfastly to behold his countenance, on which is reflected the play of the Uncreated Light. Howbeit this vision, which, in the first instance, slays, is that which is needed permanently to make alive.

Show me thy glory, gracious Lord!
'Tis Thee, he cries, not thine I seek.
. . . . .
For for the soul no help is found,
Save Him who made it meet.

TEMPERANCE IN BIRMINGHAM.

The sixth annual report of the Birmingham Gospel Temperance Mission tells of much earnest Christian and philanthropic effort put forth for the uplifting of the people of the capital of the Midlands. By means of special meetings and services for old and young, weekly classes for women, and house-to-house visitation, with other approved agencies, total abstinence from intoxicating liquors has been commended and enforced as the only safe and efficacious remedy for the evil of drunkenness. With the co-operation of the churches, no fewer than 517 special public meetings were held in the city and neighbourhood under the auspices of the committee. In the summer months tents were utilised, and the result of the many and continued exertions that were put forth appears in the fact that hundreds of drunkards were reclaimed, the attendance at places of worship was increased, and the temperance movement has been invigorated not only by the encouragement of its old members but by the infusion of new blood. Some 791 weekly women's meetings were held, and a good work has been begun among the factory girls, Mr. W. Gaule, the police-court and prison-cell agent, has continued his praisworthy labours, and a willing body of honorary helpers have supported the endeavours of the officials.

Directly or indirectly the Mission was connected with more than 2500 meetings in the course of the year. We are sorry to note that the financial support has not been proportionate to the great amount of work done. The general secretary is Mr. J. M. Goodchild, Lancaster-buildings, Corporation-street, Birmingham.

ST. BARTHOLOMEW'S HOSPITAL.—The second annual meeting of the Medical Missionary Society in connection with this Hospital was held on May 15, Dr. George Saunders in the chair. After the reading of a report of progress during the preceding half-year, Mr. Walter Fisher and Mr. Henry Soltau addressed the meeting. The former, who is about to join Mr. F. S. Arnot in Central Africa, narrated his experiences during a short visit he paid to North Africa, and impressed on those present the great need of medical missionaries in foreign lands. Mr. Soltau explained the great need for many more qualified men in the mission field. Medical mission work is a grand way of consecrating talents to the Lord Jesus Christ. There was a good attendance of past and present students. Information about the work of the Society can be obtained from either of the hon. secretaries, W. McAdam Eccles or E. W. Gurney Masterman.

THE QUESTION OF THE HOUR:—FOREIGN MISSIONS.

VIII.—Educational Missions.

FIRST, it must be distinctly understood that I do not set up Missionary Education as against itinerant preaching and the like. I should not have thought it necessary to say this but for the quotation in THE CHRISTIAN a fortnight ago, of a strange misstatement in a recent pamphlet, to the effect that Dr. Duff made the "fatal mistake" of "reversing" the policy of the missionary societies. Whether he was mistaken or not is a matter of opinion, upon which men may fairly differ; but it is quite untrue that he "reversed" any policy at all. When he went out, in 1830, Missions in North India were in their infancy, saving only that of Carey and his successors at Serampore. Duff interfered with nothing. He only added a new method. I myself consider his arrival at Calcutta as one of the epochs of Missions, and that his method has proved most valuable; but I should be very sorry to see it superseding other methods. My point is that all have their place.

Secondly, it must be distinctly understood that Missionary Education—i.e., the education of non-Christians—is not undertaken for its own sake. Its object is solely and directly evangelistic. We believe that to gather boys of the upper classes into good schools, where they will not only be taught the way of salvation but also come under the personal influence of the missionary, is the best means of winning them for Christ; and we believe that, as a matter of experience, it has proved by far the most successful way. At all events, the conversion of souls is our one object. Those who differ from us on this subject may say our method is not a good one, but they should not say, as they sometimes do, that we care more for education than for the salvation of souls. Possibly there may be here and there in India a Mission High School where the one grand object is not avowed or aimed at as fearlessly as it ought to be. If this be so, I and my colleagues will be the first to condemn it. Our own Society's instructions on the point are unmistakable, and great care is taken by us to put devoted and spiritually-minded men at the head of these schools.

But, thirdly, there are other kinds of educational work in missions. It is not always evangelistic. Many of the institutions are not for the Heathen and Mohammedan at all, but for the instruction of the children of Christian parents, or for the training of Christian pastors, evangelists, school teachers, &c. Many of our best men are employed in this last-named training work; and when the complaint is made that so many are absorbed in education, this fact must be borne in mind.

Therefore, fourthly, the two great divisions into which Missions may be divided are not, as is often said, evangelistic and educational, but evangelistic and pastoral. Education for the Heathen and Mohammedan is a section of evangelistic work. Education for the Christian population is a section of pastoral work; and so is the training of pastors and teachers. Now it is not the business of a Missionary Society to provide education for the children of native Christians. They ought to pay for it; and the teachers ought to be native Christians themselves. But to train those teachers, and also the pastors and evangelists, is one of the most important services that can be rendered to the infant church. That service, I submit, it is both our duty and our wisdom to render; and the more efficiently we do so in the early stages, the sooner shall we be relieved of the task by the growing strength and intelligence of the native churches.

Regarding High Schools for non-Christians, I should like to quote some words from a recent letter from South India. The writer is Rev. T. Walker, who worked under Rev. E. A. Stuart at St. James's, Holloway, and who is himself a devoted evangelist, commissioned to the work of itinerant preaching, and having nothing to do with schools. He writes:—

> These are days when much is written and said against the employment of Mission High Schools and Colleges as an evangelistic agency...Again and again, in the work of itineration, I have found my way prepared and my work made easy by the presence of those who, though still heathen, were once pupils in mission schools. It is no small encouragement, on going to a large heathen town, to be accosted by those who, as the result of mission educational work, know at least something of the Bible, and are prepared to listen to the claims of the Gospel. Such men are not converts, in some cases they may even be secret opponents, but at least they form a link of contact for the missionary with the higher classes of Hindus, and a means of access for the evangelist to the society which ordinary street preaching cannot reach. Moreover, there is little doubt that educational work, conducted on proper lines, is itself a most direct means of evangelising the higher castes....Only give the Bible its proper place in our colleges, only let the souls of the Hindu youth be yearned over and prayed over by the educational missionary, and we may expect great results.
> As I write, I have just returned from our C.M.S. Tinnevelly College. There, through Mr. Schaffter's kindness, I have had opportunities of speaking as plainly to the students as ever I spoke from a Christian pulpit. What other platform than that of a mission college would furnish the opportunity for speaking so freely to that class of Hindu youth? I would, therefore, plead, not as an educational missionary, but as an evangelistic one, that we may have not less, but more educational work, on Gospel lines, among the higher castes.

I have dwelt on this branch of the subject because it is a matter of current controversy; but when I urge "diversities of operations" in Missions, I am not thinking specially of Education. The agencies employed vary in different countries, and according to the class of people to be reached. But it would take another paper as long as this to enumerate them; and I forbear.

I conclude by noticing one more Mission, of a very different kind, the Mission to the Gônds, an aboriginal tribe in the jungles of Central India. Some months ago, a correspondent wrote to THE CHRISTIAN begging for a man to go to the Gônds, and adding that the C.M.S. had a Mission, but it was 130 miles off! At that very time, three brethren were labouring in the very midst of the Gônd people, in the heart of the jungles. There had been four, but one, H. P. Parker, had been taken away and sent to Central Africa as bishop in succession to Hannington. The leader was a Cambridge graduate, Rev. H. D. Williamson. His method of working at first was the usual one with itinerant missionaries, the taking a tent and pitching it just outside each village visited, and then going into the village to preach. But after consulting with the one comrade of his journeys, a converted Brahmin from Benares, he resolved to take no tent, but to go right in among the people and use their huts. "The huts," he wrote, "are more like pig-sties than human habitations, and one must be content to share them with many unwelcome and uninvited tormentors; but after all, the Gônds do the same, and if one wishes to live really in their midst, one must be ready to put up with their friends too." At night, he would lie, for choice, with his head outside the hut; and one night he woke up with a strangely cool feeling on his forehead, and found a buffalo licking him. Another time, he found his clothes scattered about, wet and torn, a cow having been chewing them. Six years of this life were patiently occupied in going round and round, from village to village, over an extensive country without roads. The Gônds are a people with scarcely an idea above their daily wants, and at first they seemed quite hopeless. At length, when patience had had her perfect work, the Lord called out the first convert, a leading "holy man." This was four years ago. There are now converts and inquirers all over the district; forty, after being well tested, have been baptized; and we may hope that a harvest is now at hand similar to those among the Kôls and the Santhals.

This is a Mission of which the ordinary Indian tourist sees nothing. He goes from large town to large town, and if he does happen to be interested in Missions he will probably see a mission bungalow and a mission school. Then he comes home and proclaims that the missionaries are living in comfort and occupied in education!

But I am not going to be tempted into controversy again. If I have sufficiently justified the motto I began this article with, I am content. And I have only now a few words to say next week in conclusion.

EUGENE STOCK.

MR. W. R. BRADLAUGH has conducted a three weeks' mission in St. Stephen's Presbyterian Church, Leicester. Many hundreds of his anti-infidel publications have been gratuitously distributed among the men in the factories, and much good has resulted therefrom. Mr. Bradlaugh has had several of his tracts translated into French, and purposes visiting Paris early in June, to attend personally to their distribution among the infidels of the French capital. Any desiring to assist in this special effort may communicate with Mr. Bradlaugh, at 70, King's Cross-road, London.

PORTSMOUTH RESCUE SOCIETY.—During last year 149 women from the streets were received into the Protestant Home in Brunswick-road, Southsea. Midnight meetings were held, and in the day time opportunities were sought to urge the fallen to enter upon a life of respectability and usefulness. A goodly number heard the Gospel message, and, while the workers had many disappointments, they were permitted to see some cheering results. Relying upon an expected legacy of £500, the superintendent recently purchased a number of things needed for the efficient working of the Home, which is established on an industrial basis; but, as, through a mistake in the will, the legacy has been forfeited, the finances of the institution are by no means in a desirable condition. Communications may be addressed to Mrs. Colebrook, the superintendent, at the Home.

The Epistle to the Hebrews.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A., Regent's Park Chapel.

XXXI.—THE SHAKINGS OF JEHOVAH.

HEBREWS xii. 27.

WHAT majesty there is in these words! They bear the mint mark of Deity. No man could presume to utter them, but they become the august speaker. Their original setting is even more magnificent, as we find them in the book of Haggai: "Thus saith the Lord of Hosts; Yet once, it is a little while, and I will shake the heavens, and the earth, and the sea, and the dry land; and I will shake all nations, and the desire of all nations shall come."

These words were first spoken to encourage the Jewish exiles on their return from Babylon to their ruined Temple and city. The elder men wept as they thought of the departed glories of earlier days, and God comforted them, as He delights to comfort those who are cast down. "Be comforted," said He in effect, "there is a crisis coming, which will test and overthrow all material structures; and in that convulsion the outer form will pass away, however fair and costly it may be, whilst the inner hidden glory will become more apparent than ever; nay, amid all the sounds of wreck and change there will come the Desire of all Nations, the substance of which these material objects are but the fading and incomplete anticipation."

These Hebrew Christians were living in the midst of a great shaking. It was a time of almost universal trial. God was shaking not earth only, but also heaven. The Jewish tenure of Palestine was being shaken by the Romans, who claimed it as their conquest. The interpretation given to the Word of God by the Rabbis was being shaken by the fresh light introduced through the words and life and death of Jesus. The supremacy of the Temple and its ritual was being shaken by those who taught that the true Temple was the Christian Church, and that all the Levitical sacrifices had been realised in Christ. The observance of the Sabbath was being shaken by those who wished to substitute for it the first day of the week.

The first symptoms of this shaking began when Jesus commenced to teach and preach in the crowded cities of Palestine, and all people flocked about Him. The successive throes became more obvious when the Jewish leaders sought to silence the Apostles and stay the onward progress of the Church. The book of the Acts of the Apostles, and the Epistles, are full of evidence of the intensity of that revolution which must have made many godly people tremble for the Ark of God. And the climax of all came in the fearful siege of Jerusalem, when, once and for ever, the Jewish system was shattered, the Temple burnt, the remaining vessels sunk in the Tiber, and the Jews were driven from the city which was absolutely essential for the performance of their religious rites. The whole New Testament is witness to the throes of one of the mightiest spiritual revolutions that ever happened, as great in the spiritual sphere as the French Revolution was in the temporal.

It was amidst these fires that this Epistle was written. "Take heart," says the inspired writer, "these shakings come from the hand of God." Listen to his own words, I shake. And they shall not last for ever—yet this once; nor will they injure anything of eternal worth and truth. He shakes all things, that the material, the sensuous, and the temporal may pass away, leaving the essential and eternal to stand out in more than former beauty. But not a grain of pure metal shall be lost in the fires, not a fragment of heaven's masonry shall crumble beneath the shock.

In such a time we are living now.—Everything is being shaken and tested. But there is a Divine purpose in it all, that his eternal truth may stand out more clearly and unmistakably, when all human traditions and accretions have fallen away, unable to resist the energy of the shock. And who will bewail this too bitterly? Who shall weep because the winds strip the trees of their old dead leaves, if only the new spring verdure may be able to show itself? Who shall lament that the heavy blow shatters the mould, if only the perfect image shall stand out in complete symmetry? Who shall mourn over the passing away of the heaven and the earth, if, as they break up, they reveal beneath them the imperishable beauty of the new heavens and the new earth in which dwells Righteousness?

I. THEOLOGICAL SYSTEMS ARE BEING SHAKEN.—There was a time when men received their theological beliefs from their teachers, their parents, or their Church, without a word of question or controversy. There was none that moved the wing, or opened the mouth, or chirped. It is not so now; the air is filled with questionings. Men are putting into the crucible every doctrine which our forefathers held dear. There is no veneration shown for time-honoured creeds, or theological distinctions, or doctrinal formularies. The highest themes, such as the Nature of the Atonement, the Necessity of Regeneration, the Duration of Future Punishment are being criticised in the public press.

Many children of God are very distressed about this, and fear for the truth of the Gospel. They speak as if there were no other agents in the conflict but those of mortal birth. They lose sight of the eternal issues at stake, and the unseen forces which are implicated in the conflict. Is it likely that God will allow his precious Gospel to be overshadowed or robbed of all essential elements? Has He maintained it in its integrity for these ages, and is He now suddenly become a mighty man who cannot save? When it seemed as if evangelical doctrine had died out of the world in the sixteenth century, because it lingered only amid some obscure and humble saints, He raised up one man, who rolled back the tides of error, and reared once more the standard of Gospel truth, and can He not do it again?

In these terrible shakings, not one jot or tittle of God's Word shall perish, not one grain of truth shall fall to the ground, not one stone in the fortress shall be dislodged. But they are permitted to come, partly to test the chaff and wheat as a winnowing fan, but chiefly that all which is temporal and transient may pass away, whilst the simple truth of God becomes more apparent, and shines forth unhidden by the scaffolding and rubbish with which the builders have obscured its symmetry and beauty. "The things which cannot be shaken shall remain."

II. ECCLESIASTICAL SYSTEMS ARE BEING SHAKEN.—It is not enough that any religious system should exist, it is asked somewhat rudely to show cause why it should continue to exist. The spirit of the age is utilitarian, and is reluctant to consider any plea for mercy which is not based on a clear evidence of service rendered to its pressing necessities.

The signs of this are abundantly evident. Now it is the disestablishment of the Church which is proposed; a proposal which fills with horror those who regard it as necessary for the maintenance of Christianity in our midst. Teachers of religion are challenged to show reason for their assuming their office, or of claiming special prerogatives. Methods of work are being weighed in the balances, missionary plans trenchantly criticised, religious services metamorphosed. Change is threatening the most time-honoured customs, and all this is very distressing to those who have confused the essence with the form, the jewel with the casket, the spirit with the temple in which it dwells. But let us not fear. All this is being permitted for the wisest ends. There is a great deal of wood, hay, and stubble in all our structures which needs to be burnt up, but not an ounce of gold or silver will ever be destroyed. The waves may wash off the weed which has attached itself to the harbour wall, but they will fail to start one constituent stone. The simplicity of early Church-life has been undoubtedly covered over with many accretions which hinder the progress of the Church and impede her work; and we may hail any visitation, however drastic, which shall set her free. But the Church herself is founded on a rock, and the gates of hell shall never prevail against her.

Well was it for the Church of Christ, when the days of persecution lay sorely on her. Never was she so pure, so spiritually powerful as then. And if such days should ever be allowed to return, and God were to shake her fabric with the fierce whirlwinds of martyrdom, there would be no need for anxiety. The time-servers, the mere professors, the creatures of fashion would stand revealed, but those who had experienced the work of God in their souls, would endure to the end, and their true character would be manifested. "The things that cannot be shaken will remain."

III. OUR CHARACTERS AND LIVES ARE CONSTANTLY BEING SHAKEN.—What a shake that sermon gave us, which showed that all our righteousnesses, on which we counted so fondly, were but withered leaves! What a shake was that commercial disaster, which swept away in one blow the savings and credit of years, that were engrossing the heart, and left us only what we had of spiritual worth! What a shake was that temptation, which showed that our fancied sinlessness was an empty dream, and that we were as sensitive to temptation as those over whom we had been vaunting ourselves.

What has been the nett result of all these shakings? Has a hair of our heads perished? The old man has perished, but the inward man has been daily renewed. The more the marble has wasted, the more the statue has grown. As the wooden centres have been knocked down, the solid masonry has stood out with growing completeness. "The things which could not be shaken have remained."

"Go on, Great Spirit of God, shake with thine earthquakes even more violently these characters of ours, that all which is not of Thee, but of us, and therefore false and selfish, may be revealed and overthrown, so that we may learn our true possessions. And as we see them saved to us from the general wreck, we shall know that, having been given us by thyself, they must partake of thine own permanence and eternity. Let us learn the worst of ourselves, that we may learn to prize thy best."

At the most these shakings are temporary. "Only this once," child of God! Then, nevermore!

THERE ARE A FEW THINGS WHICH CANNOT BE SHAKEN.

(1) God's Word.—Heaven and earth may pass away, but God's Word never. All flesh is grass, and all the glory of man, his opinions, his pretensions, his pomp and pride, as the flower of grass, beautiful, but evanescent; but the Word of the Lord shall stand for ever, and this is the Word which by the Gospel is being preached. Let us not fear modern criticism; it cannot rob us of one jot or tittle of God's truth. Scripture will shake it off, as the Apostle did the viper which fastened on his hand, and feel no hurt.

(2) God's love.—Our friends' love may be shaken by a rumour, a moment's neglect, a change in our estate, but God's love is, like Himself, immutable. No storm can reach high enough to touch the empyrean of his love. He never began to love us for anything in ourselves, nor will He cease to love us because of what He discovers us to be. The love of God, which is in Jesus Christ our Lord, is unassailable by change or shock.

(3) God's eternal kingdom.—"We receive a kingdom which cannot be shaken." Amid all our revolutions and political changes that kingdom is coming. It is assuming body, and shape, and power. It is now in mystery, but it shall soon be revealed. And it cannot be touched by any sudden attack or revolt of human passion. "The God of heaven shall set up a kingdom, which shall never be destroyed."

Let us count up our inalienable and imperishable treasures; and though around us there is the terror of the darkness, or the pestilence of the noontide, we shall be kept in perfect peace; as when some petty sovereign eyes with equanimity the mob arising to sack his palace, because long ago he sent all his treasures to be kept in the strong cellars of the Bank of England.

This world of change and earthquake is not our rest or home. These await us where God lives, in the city which hath foundations, and in the land where the storm rages not, but the sea of glass lies peacefully at the foot of the throne of God. We may well brace ourselves to fortitude and patience, to reverence and godly fear, since we have that in ourselves and yonder which partakes of the nature of God, and neither thieving time can steal it, nor moth corrupt, nor change affect.

"SHALOM HOUSE," 134, Upper Parliament-street, Liverpool, has been opened as a kind of Travellers' Rest. It is designed to supply a want that has often been felt—a comfortable home for Christian travellers, especially ladies; a staying place for foreign missionaries and home workers. A Bible-study for the quickening of spiritual life is held every Tuesday afternoon. Details may be had from the superintendent.

THE HIGHLAND TEMPERANCE LEAGUE.—In the ninth annual report, the directors announce that the work accomplished last year shows a considerable advance upon that of 1887. There are indications of steady growth in temperance sentiment, and the outlook is more hopeful than hitherto. Published under the title of "The Mountain Stream," the report gives much valuable information on the drink traffic at home and abroad, and the general progress of the temperance movement. The financial support received last year was satisfactory, and it is hoped that, with renewed and increased exertions, the League will this year make more good and true friends as it continues to inculcate temperance principles and practice among the Highlanders. The secretary is Mr. Alex. Blackhall, 16, Union-street, Inverness.

Rome and Rescue Work.

By Mr. LEONARD K. SHAW, Manchester.

When last we wrote, two cases were pending before a judge in chambers in which we were defendants. We were forced into this position by the action of a so-called Catholic Rescue and Protection Society, of which the Roman Bishop of Salford is the moving spirit. Leaving hundreds of neglected boys and girls exposed to the nameless misery and vices of the streets and common lodging-houses of our city, this society turns its attention chiefly to those who have been rescued by other organisations. In other words, they will let us, or anyone else that likes, seek out and rescue these poor lost children; then when they are cleansed and clothed we must hand them over to them!

One of the cases need never have gone into court. As soon as we knew that the father was found, and that, under the influence of Dr. Vaughan, he required his boy, we were prepared to return him; we did so, and the judge ordered Dr. Vaughan's Society to pay their own costs.

The other case was one of the most shameful ever brought before a court, and, we venture to think, will, when fully known, as we shall see it is, open the eyes of many to the designs of a system which is still, as in the days of the Inquisition, the bitter foe of civil and religious liberty. Unfortunately the girl was just under the age (sixteen) when she could assert her freedom. The judge, therefore, had no option but to order her to be returned to her drunken vagrant father, with whom Dr. Vaughan had again linked himself as guardian! Again their application for costs was refused.

When we took the girl, accompanied by her elder sister, to the father, the scene was a painful one. One neighbour openly charged him with selling the bed from under his girls that he might spend the money in drink. Both the sisters appealed to him to let the younger one remain where she was happy in service earning a respectable livelihood. Both declared they were not Roman Catholics, and never would become so; but tears and entreaties were of no avail. We left the poor girl thus dragged from the one bright prospect of her life, with this man, who, though called father, was unworthy of the name. Our readers will not be surprised to learn that the same afternoon she made her escape from this man, and has not since been heard of.

The principles which have guided us in the past in dealing with these cases shall continue to guide our future action; i.e., applicants for admission to our Institution who either state themselves, or by those who bring them, that they are Roman Catholics, we always refer to Roman Catholic schools, but where no church or creed is stated we never ask the question; we never have done so, we never shall. It would be contrary to the foundation principle of the Institution, which is to receive without distinction of creed all children who are really homeless and destitute. If in carrying out this great principle, we sometimes receive other sheep not of this fold, what of that? The boys and girls who voluntarily come to us know what we are, and they will not go to the Roman Catholic Homes. We may send them from our door, but we cannot compel them to go to the other. They are free to leave us if they are not perfectly happy and content, but so long as they are so, God helping us, nothing shall induce us to send away boys or girls who, in their hour of need, have voluntarily sought our aid, and who still desire our protection. We shall resist to the very utmost all efforts from whatever quarter to compel such poor rescued ones to leave the shelter of a safe and happy Home.—The Christian Worker.

THE SPOKEN PRAYER.

Suggested by Dr. Pierson's verses in The Christian of April 26.

Oh to do something, something
That would glorify my God;
Oh to do something, something
That may show I love his Word.
Better to try and do something,
Imperfect and marred though it be,
Than live as if I were careless
Of the Master who died for me.

Oh to be doing something!
For pleasure we never were made;
'Twere blessed to work for the Master
E'en though we never were paid.
'Tis blessèd and good to be resting
In peace on the Master's will;
And doing just what He bids me,
E'en though it were harder still.

Oh to be doing something
For how can I idle be?
When the Father Himself is working—
Working eternally.
My Lord is a God of Power,
And therefore a God of Peace,
And working will be resting,
When I from struggle cease.

And this will be doing something,
To let Him work through me,
All that He would accomplish,
All He would have me be.
Dear Lord, I will be nothing
That I may something be;
Never a day for self, Lord,
But all my days for Thee.

CAPE GENERAL MISSION.

Sir,—From my long connection with the Cape Colony, and from my constant communication with it, from several personal visits, and as Director of the Union Steam Ship Company, permit me to impress on your readers, who may be directly or indirectly interested in that rapidly increasing population, the immense importance of the above Mission. The labours of Mr. Spencer Walton have been so largely blessed and owned of God, in other places, and during his recent visit, that we may look for very great things from a more prolonged stay out there.

The special needs of the Mission are for about £2000; among the objects for which it is needed, are—Soldiers' Home, Wynberg, a central Institute at Cape Town (offered rent free), and mission stations at Kimberley and Johannesburg. I may mention, Mr. Walton is entirely in accord with Mrs. Osborn in the noble work she has done in Cape Town, but whose health may unfortunately oblige her to leave the Colony, certainly for a time.

I cannot venture to encroach on your space by enlarging on Mr. Walton's admirable plans for working the Mission economically and effectually, but commend it very heartily to the prayers, sympathy, and support of all interested in out-and-out spiritual work for the salvation of souls, and the spread of Christ's kingdom in those regions.—Yours, &c.,

H. W. Maynard, Hon. Treasurer.
St. Aubyns, Grosvenor-hill, Wimbledon.

THE PATNA CASE.—Referring to this case, The Bombay Guardian says:—"Luchmin's uncle, Gurmukh Narain, who lived with Luchmin's mother in Radakissen's house, and who was one of Radakissen's witnesses in Mr. Quinn's Court at Patna, has since been to Miss Abraham, and confessed that his own and Luchmin's mother's evidence was false. The unquestioning acceptance of evidence from persons deeply steeped in vice, and the refusal to receive evidence opposed to theirs, presents a picture of the administration of law in India which it is to be hoped the British Government, Parliament, and people, will meditate upon to some purpose."

"I am such a Wretch."

SOME time ago I was a district visitor in a small town in Buckinghamshire. In my district was a court mainly occupied by respectable working people. One Sabbath afternoon I was going round the court, and was about to enter one of the houses, when a woman said, pointing to the house there—

"Don't go in, miss!"

"Why not?" I inquired.

"Because, miss, a very bad man lives there, and swears so dreadfully at all the people who visit him that they cannot stay in the house. Some of the Wesleyans went to see him, but he abused them so fearfully they would not remain. He is very ill, too, and it seems to make him more violent. You had better not go, miss!"

"Well, it is very sad that the poor man should be left in this state. The worse he is the more he wants visiting. I suppose he will not kill me if I go."

"No, miss, he can scarcely move, so he couldn't do that."

"Well, I am not easily frightened. I'll risk going in. God can take care of me. I go with a message from Him."

"Well, miss, you might try; but I fear you will not do much good."

Asking for Divine guidance, I ventured to rap at the door. A loud, harsh voice called out, "Who's there? Come in!" So I walked in; and truly the look of the man was startling enough. He was a powerfully built man, with black hair and thick black beard, the growth of many days. There was a look of defiance in his eyes that made one shrink.

I spoke gently, and said, "How are you to-day, Mr. G——? I am sorry to see you so ill."

"How am I? Bad enough—and I don't think I shall be better in this world or the next."

"Oh! I hope not so bad as that. If you have not much hope of being better here, what is to hinder your going to a better world when you leave this?"

Turning to me with a look of terror, he said, "What? Because I am such a wretch. I am a very wicked man, and swear, and I can't help it. How am I to be saved? It is no use thinking of it."

"Shall I read a beautiful story to you?"

"You, a nice young lady, read to me! I never thought any lady would do it!"

"Why not? I should very much like to do it, and it will make you forget your pains a little while? Are you willing?"

"Yes, miss, if you don't mind."

A point was gained. I took God's blessed Word, and read that incomparable parable, "The Prodigal Son." As I read, he became quiet and appeared interested; and when it came to the part "his father saw him, and ran, and fell on his neck, and kissed him," &c., I saw tears stealing down his rugged cheeks. I said, "Mr. G——, you are that son, and the Father in heaven will receive you with compassion if you will return to him. Will you not arise and go to your Father to-day?"

"Oh, miss! I am such a wretch. My poor wife can tell you what I am." She, a timid but intelligent-looking woman, had been standing by, evidently fearing an outburst of passion; but she scarcely ventured a remark. I then turned to Ps. li., and on reading the twelfth verse, saw that it was strongly underlined. I said, "This Psalm seems to have been read by someone who once knew the 'joys of salvation.'"

The woman's tongue seemed loosed. "Yes, miss, I did once know the 'joys of salvation'; but, oh, dear! they are all gone. I have no joy now, but sorrow upon sorrow. I was member of a Baptist Church once; but it is now seven years since I entered a place of worship."

"My dear, good woman, how did you come to this state of things?" With big tears rolling down her cheeks, she said, "Why, miss, I married this man. I did wrong, I know; but he was not so bad then as he is now. He promised me he would never hinder my going to chapel, and I believed him; but I soon found 'unequal yoking' was a bad thing. I repented when it was too late, and many's the beating I've had for stealing out to chapel. So I gave it up." Looking round at her husband, she said, "You know, G——, it is all true."

"Yes, yes," he said, "it's quite true. I've been a wretch, I know it; but will you forgive me?" and he sobbed as he made this confession.

"Yes," she said, "I can forgive, if you will ask God to forgive."

I stayed some time, and, before I left them, he promised me that he would let his wife read a chapter from the Bible to him every day; that his daughter, who was about fourteen, should sing a hymn, and that he would try and pray. He thanked me for calling, and asked me to repeat my visit the next Sunday. This I was only too glad to do, and promised him that, all being well, I would soon come again. Thus ended my first visit to this "dreadful man." So I thanked God, and took courage.

At his request I continued my visits, and found that he gradually became softened, expressing a desire for the past to be forgiven, and longing to be received by his heavenly Father as a poor repentant prodigal. After some weeks his wife told me he was greatly changed; that she had not heard an oath pass his lips since my first visit; that he had not once beaten her, but had become much more quiet and gentle in his ways. Some months passed in this way. The Spirit of God seemed to be working upon him. He had a great trial in his daughter, who had grown up a wild, disobedient girl.

One Sunday, when I called as usual, the wife met me at the door, weeping bitterly. "Oh, miss!" she exclaimed. "It is all over. He is so bad. He has tried to destroy himself three times this week." It appeared that his daughter had been extremely provoking, and he, in an outbreak of passion, had sworn at her. Then he exclaimed: "I had vowed never to swear again, but the devil has conquered. Now there is no hope for me! I must go to hell!" "Soon after this," continued his wife, "he went upstairs. Feeling uneasy I followed him, and was only just in time to prevent his hanging himself. I tried to soothe him, but it was of no use, and since then he has twice attempted his own life."

I was very much grieved to hear this, and asked Mrs. G—— where he was. "Upstairs, lying on his bed in great distress." I proposed to go and speak to him, and she gladly led the way to the room. As I mounted the stairs I said, "Mr. G——, what is the matter?" In a tremulous voice, he replied, "Oh, miss! don't come. It is of no use. I'm lost—lost for ever." As I entered the room, I said, "No; Mr. G——, not lost! Jesus is able and willing to save to the uttermost. We will ask Him to save you. You shall ask for yourself."

"Will it be of any use, miss?" I assured him that no repentant sinner would ever be cast out, but that now the sin would be to reject the Saviour and his offered mercy. He wept bitterly, and said, "The girl was so provoking and I swore at her." I said, "Yes, Mr. G——, but you must pray for strength to resist temptation, and God will give it to you. We will also pray that God may convert your daughter, that she may be a comfort to you and your wife."

After reading and talking with him for some time, I prayed with him, and left the house, promising to call again soon. His poor wife thanked me with tears in her eyes. Soon after this I had to leave the town, so I asked a gentleman who was studying for the ministry to look after this family, and committed them to the keeping of the Good Shepherd. On my return to England after some years' absence, I inquired about them, and was rejoiced to hear that they had all become believers, and, being kept by the Holy Spirit, had led consistent Christian lives; and further, that father, mother, and daughter, had joined a Christian church.

P.

THE RAGGED-SCHOOL UNION.

THIS institution has 202 separate stations associated with it throughout the metropolitan area, and at every one of these stations new enterprises are being developed as opportunities may occur. Outwardly, the metropolis does not in its back streets present the appearance of a collection of slums which was so terrible half a century ago; but in its crowded homes the people are still found needing the ministry such as this agency alone can give.

If we ask, Of whom does its constituency consist? the answer is that 50,000 children and an equal number of grown-up persons are reached every week; the adults sufficing to remind us that Ragged-schools are still what they were at first—a mission to persons of all ages. That devoted men and women give their time and energy to such a work, is one of the grandest facts of the times.

When the first schools were set up, the teachers were able to realise that they were the veritable pioneers of civilisation to the children. Their manners and hilarity were those of wild animals; so that when they rushed pell-mell into school, upset the forms, and broke the desks, not forgetting to put out the gas, by way of giving complete effect to the adventure, they had to be excused rather than scolded. There are still ragged and untamed children about, but they are not of the rough genus of half a century ago. In the hard winter weather they are still as hungry and as cold as the waifs of half a century ago, however; so that cocoa breakfasts, penny dinners, soup suppers, and warm garments are still the greatest possible boon. About half a million of these meals and thousands of garments, according to the supply, are given away every season.

There can be no better almoners of Christian bounty than these ragged-school teachers, who visit the homes of the parents and children, and thus know all about them, extending to them their counsel and experience. They are also able to select the most promising persons for emigration. They also find out who are the fittest subjects for those Holiday Homes which have been founded in various parts of the country, and at which between two and three thousand every summer enjoy the benefit of a fortnight in the pure fresh air.

The industrial developments of the Ragged-school Union would have been not a little surprising to the original pioneers. Their own common-sense showed them that emigration was the only hope of relieving an overcrowded labour market; but it hardly occurred to them that sewing, cooking, carpentering, &c., could be taught with good effect in the schools, nor that some £12,000 a year could be earned by organised shoe-black brigades in the streets of London. Add to all these the institutes, with their lending libraries and gymnasia, which have been provided to retain a hold on the elder scholars, and we shall have a tolerably clear idea of how ragged-schools are being adapted to the requirements of modern times. Those who are in sympathy with such a many-sided movement will do well to strengthen the hands of the secretary, Mr. John Kirk, by subscribing for general purposes, and by replenishing the exchequer of the Shaftesbury fund, purposely started to provide for present-day requirements.

YOUNG WOMEN IN BRUSSELS.

Dear Sir,—Will you allow me to bring to the notice of your readers the work of an institution of which I have some personal knowledge, and which has a peculiar claim on English Christians? It is not generally known, perhaps, that great inducements are held out to persuade young Englishwomen to go over to Brussels as domestic servants or governesses. By the Belgian laws a servant is permitted to leave her mistress at a moment's notice if she so chooses. The servants in Brussels are consequently very independent and rarely stay more than three or four months in their place. They are moreover, owing to this fact, difficult to manage, and mistresses are very anxious to obtain English servants, over whom, owing to the distance of their homes and the difficulty of the return journey, they have more control. The same laws, however, permit the mistress to dismiss her servant as suddenly, and a more friendless position cannot well be imagined than that of a young English girl turned out on the streets of a foreign capital where nothing but French is spoken, and where I was told respectable lodgings are peculiarly hard to find. She has probably not provided herself with sufficient money to take her back to England even if she knows enough of the language to accomplish the return journey.

Should the young servant girl, however, be fortunate enough to suit her employers, and be happy with them, there remains the great difficulty of her Sundays. Among the lower middle classes in Brussels it is often the habit to leave the house in the morning for a day's excursion, locking the door and not returning till the evening. The servant has her day free; but, unless she has friends, she is almost compelled to spend it in the streets.

In the endeavour to meet these great difficulties and temptations, the British Institute in Brussels was founded in 1884 by two kind and devoted ladies, Mrs. Jenkins and Miss Young (who are the honorary superintendents), and under the special care of the British Embassy. Lady Vivian, the wife of our present ambassador, takes a very deep personal interest in the management of the Institute. The Institute had originally no sleeping accommodation, but was open on Sundays and (I believe) every evening, the desire being that all young Englishwomen might have a place to which they could go on Sunday, and where they would be under helpful influences, and feel that they had friends to whom they might always apply for advice or help. Both servants and governesses soon showed how much they valued the privilege of quiet rooms in which to sit, and of the sight of friendly faces and the sound of English tongues. It is touching to hear them speak, as I have done, of the delight they feel in any such tokens of home. Books and profitable reading are supplied, and in other ways religious help is rendered. A Sunday-school for English children of the poorer working classes in Brussels is undertaken entirely by the Institute.

It was soon, however, felt that the good work done was greatly crippled for want of the possibility of giving lodging to those in need of it. This want has been provided for, and 25 lodgers can now be accommodated. Last year 176 English women were boarded and lodged there. Besides the boarders the Home is open to all English governesses and servant-maids living in Brussels, and on Sunday all are made welcome to a free tea. Any Englishwoman, passing through Brussels, may claim its protection, and anyone requiring to be met, or needing advice as to a situation, can have it by writing to the hon. superintendent, 26, Rue de Vienne. The Committee have always endeavoured to discourage English girls from coming over to Brussels without due inquiry beforehand; but it is a comfort to them to feel that in cases of need the British Institute is now open to all who apply, in sickness as well as in health. Of the personal influence and tender kindness and sympathy of Mrs. Jenkins and Miss Young to those in trouble, too much cannot be said, as, indeed, many a grateful heart would testify.

The British residents in Brussels contribute what they can, but they are not wealthy, and it is felt that the rent of the Institute—£120 a year (towards which £20 is already promised)—must be raised in England, if the work is to continue. It is earnestly desired to raise this sum, if possible, in annual subscriptions of £5, and it is felt that many would be willing to contribute this amount if they knew something of the terrible need for such a work, and of the blessing that has seemed to attend it. The hon. secretary is Mrs. E. Drummond, 13, St. James's-place, W.—Yours sincerely,

Lucy C. Fowler.

EVANGELISM IN GLASGOW.

Subjoined is a part of the report presented at the annual meeting of the Glasgow United Evangelistic Association, held in the large hall of the Christian Institute, on the evening of Monday, May 6. It is only the introduction to the other reports given in at the annual meeting of the Glasgow United Evangelistic Association. Those reports give details of the work as carried on during the year from April, 1888, to March, 1889, both inclusive. Always both interesting and stimulating, they were never more so than on this occasion, doubtless arising from the circumstance that this year there was no exceptional work of an ameliorative nature to record (such as we have had every year for the past four or five, owing to the acute distress through bad trade, &c.), chiefly spiritual work falling to be noticed. The full report embraces seven subsidiary reports:—

"The outstanding feature of the past year has been the visit and labours of Dr. Pentecost, of Brooklyn. As arranged with the friends of the West-end Union, he opened his campaign under their auspices in Kelvinside Free Church. He then moved into the Park and Sandyford districts, the West-end Union continuing to help, both in prayer and effort. Thereafter, in connection with the Evangelistic Association, he successively visited the central, northern, eastern, Pollokshields, and Dennistoun districts; his whole work extended almost continuously from November 26, 1888, till the end of April, 1889. Of the results of his abundant and most acceptable labours, it would be premature, at present, to speak. Having, on previous visits to our shores, shown himself peculiarly fitted to gain the ear of the educated and cultured classes, special efforts were made to bring out our West-end residents to the meetings held in their neighbourhood. These efforts, we regret to say, were only partially successful. On the other hand, nothing has been more noteworthy than the numbers that flocked to the meetings conducted in the poorer districts of the city. The blessing came down copiously on them—as if to show that God still carries on his work on the same lines as in Apostolic days, when, as it is written, 'not many wise men after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble are called; but God hath chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise; and God hath chosen the weak things of the world to confound the things which are mighty; and base things of the world, and things which are despised, hath God chosen, yea, and things which are not, to bring to nought things that are; that no flesh should glory in his presence.'

"We must make an exception, however, in favour of the series of meetings held for business men in the Merchants' Hall. It was a striking sight to see that citadel of our commercial metropolis crowded day after day for six weeks with men of business, many of them well known on 'Change, listening with intense earnestness to the evangelist, as with singular freedom and power he reasoned of 'righteousness, temperance, and judgment to come,' and pressed home, with a directness we have never heard surpassed, the claim of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ on unconditional surrender to Himself. In the addresses then given Dr. Pentecost was seen at his best, and the impression produced was unmistakable.

"The open-air work carried on in connection with the Glasgow Exhibition falls also to be noticed in the General Report. By uniting together the Fellowship Meeting, the Y.M.C.A., the West-end Union, and others, open-air services were held every evening in the enclosure in front of the Kelvingrove U.P. Church, most kindly and heartily placed at our disposal by the managers. These meetings proved most successful, and were attended with much blessing, to the great joy and encouragement of those who conducted them. And it was well that, in the face of so much that appealed attractively and powerfully to the merely sensuous and carnal, a clear and emphatic testimony was day by day lifted up to the spiritual and eternal."

Evangelistic Notes.

Mr. Josiah Nix has concluded the opening mission in Cleveland Hall. Altogether over 120 have professed conversion.

Mr. William Forbes has been giving addresses in Paris in connection with Mrs. Lewis's (Miss Leigh) Mission, and at the Wesleyan Chapel.

Major J. H. Cole has been evangelising at Little Rock, Arkansas, with many tokens of blessing. His daughter, Miss Cole, has conducted services for women with much acceptance; a local paper speaks of her earnest, impressive, and eloquent exposition of the Scriptures.

Bombay.—A definite attempt to reach the educated natives by open-air work has commenced in Bombay. Open-air preaching has been carried on at a spot on the Chowpatty sea face, a fashionable evening promenade for well-to-do natives. The Gospel has been preached in English and Marathi.—Bombay Guardian.

Mr. Henry Thorne has lately commenced a seventeen days' mission in connection with the Y.M.C.A. at Plymouth. The meetings were held in St. Andrew's Hall, and were attended by very large numbers of people. On the afternoons of five days in each week, Mr. Thorne gave Bible-readings to most attentive listeners, who greatly appreciated his clear and forcible expositions of the Scriptures. Mr. Thorne carries with him the love and esteem of all who were privileged to be associated with him in Plymouth.

Mr. Chas. Inglis has held a most successful mission at Martock. The largest building in the town has been filled night by night with all classes and so great has been the interest that numbers have come in five and ten miles to listen to the precious story of the Cross. Many have been in great anxiety about their souls, and in the inquiry-room the workers have had much joy in seeing many brought into life and liberty. A number who were saved during Mr. Inglis's last visit nearly twenty years ago were found still holding on their way and seeking to lead others to the Saviour in these meetings.

THE FREE PROTESTANT CHURCH OF ENGLAND MISSION, otherwise called the Reformed Episcopal Church, exists in order to protest against Ritualism and every form of Popery, by providing a pure and spiritual service, with Scriptural doctrine. Retaining a liturgy which is neither imperative nor repressive of freedom in prayer, the Mission uses the Book of Common Prayer in a revised form. Ministers of Episcopal and Nonconformist orders are alike eligible as ministers, subject to the approval of the Bishop and Mission Council. Women also, similarly approved, are accepted as helpers in the work. The president is Bishop Greenland, formerly rector of Raithby, in the diocese of Lincoln. Further information respecting the Mission may be had from the general secretary, Rev. William Warder, 26, Paternoster-row, E.C.

THE HOME OF INDUSTRY.

On Wednesday evening, last week, a large number of Christian friends met to bid farewell to Miss Macpherson and her family of nearly a hundred children before starting for Canada. Such a bright, happy gathering of children it has seldom been our privilege to see. One could not help going back in imagination to the time when many of the little faces showed signs of former ill-treatment and sorrow. Miss Macpherson described in her telling way how the party had been gathered in, and it was impossible not to see how near to her heart these rescued little ones are.

Dr. McKilliam gave an address on "The Coming of the Lord." The subject seemed one of special comfort and interest to many hearts sad at the thought of parting. After his exposition, he spoke of the incentive that this doctrine is to earnest Christians, and the purifying influence of it. He closed with an exhortation that all present should seek for a closer walk with God, that at Christ's coming we may not be ashamed.

Miss Macpherson spoke with pathos and tenderness to the young workers, giving them as her parting words seven as He's in 1 John. If it be our aim to be "as He" was, there would be no need to talk of consecration; it would be there.

Miss Macpherson and party started on Thursday morning for Canada; prayer is requested for blessing during the voyage, and on the other side.

MISSION TO LEPERS IN INDIA.

The fourteenth annual report of the Mission to Lepers in India opens with expressions of heartfelt gratitude to God for blessing vouchsafed upon last year's work for and among suffering lepers. Not only has interest in this important undertaking been maintained; new friends have been raised up, and the workers in various parts have witnessed much that has cheered them. The committee has authorised the commencement of work at Moulmein, on behalf of the lepers of Burmah, the superintendence being undertaken by Rev. W. F. Armstrong, of the American Baptist Missionary Union. In a small way Christian work has been begun at Colombo, in Ceylon, where there is a leper asylum belonging to the Government, and containing over two hundred inmates. There is great need of Christian sympathy being shown for the lepers of Bhagulpore (Bengal) and Bombay; but, until some one on the spot moves in the matter, the Society is not able to do what it would wish.

So far the healthy children of leprous parents are being cared for with encouraging results. The experiment has been carried on in one place for about twenty years, and during that time only one child out of twenty-one has become a leper, whereas, had they remained with their afflicted parents, nothing could, humanly speaking, have saved them. The reports from the various asylums are full of pathetic interest. During the year a number of lepers professed to accept Christ as their Saviour. This Mission has peculiar claims upon the Church of Christ. Its secretary is Mr. Wellesley C. Bailey, 17, Glengyle - terrace, Edinburgh.

THE NORTHFIELD CONFERENCES.—Mr. D. L. Moody has announced the following data regarding these gatherings: The Summer School for College Students is set for June 29 to July 10 inclusive. Rev. Maurice S. Baldwin, Bishop of Huron, has accepted the invitation to be present as one of the lecturers. The General Christian Conference will open August 1; continuing for thirty days. Rev. Dr. J. Monro Gibson, of London, is to be one of the speakers from abroad.

MISSION WORK IN COPENHAGEN.

Looking back on the past year, our hearts are filled with thanks and praise to the Lord for all his goodness and loving kindness towards us. He has heard our prayers and given us his word to preach to large numbers of people in Copenhagen and suburbs. In the courts and yards we have held 804 meetings. These can only be held when the weather is fine and not too cold. In the large houses of the poor are often living fifty or sixty families, which we have hitherto reached by going from door to door, inviting them to our indoor meetings. They occasionally ask us to come in and have some conversation with them, and the Lord has permitted us to lead many to Him in this manner.

One evening in November, when entering one of these houses, I got the thought given me to sing a hymn on the staircase, and the result was that, before I had finished it, a number of children and grown-up persons had gathered round me to see what was going on. I spoke of God's love towards us in his Son, and did my best, through the grace of God, to lead them to the Friend of sinners. It was a very bad house, but almost all were anxious to hear. I have since then continued such meetings in the long passages of the houses from ground to top floor, and I am nearly always well received, the inhabitants lighting the dark passages up with lamps, and, in much kindness, inviting us to repeat our visits.

In Rosenborg castle garden were held sixteen meetings on succeeding Sunday evenings, at which also the clergy took part; 2000 to 3000 people frequently attended these. On the old ramparts of Christianshavn have been held seventeen meetings, at which Rev. Lic. Fenger has been the chief speaker. More than one thousand people have, on an average, attended these meetings. On the commons have been held twelve well-attended meetings. In the courts of the caserns have been held fifty-seven meetings for soldiers, which have been much blessed, and in the training ship at the Royal Dockyard eight meetings.

Of indoor meetings we have held 225, which have been well attended. The missionaries go out in the streets, and into the public-houses to invite people to come. Altogether 1199 meetings, besides twenty-two meetings in the passages of the houses, have been held last year through the means of the Court Yard Mission.

Much work has also been done in the hospitals, many have been won for Christ, and are now living better lives. The emigrant ships have been visited, and many tracts have been distributed on board.

Of English-speaking friends who have taken part in our meetings last summer, I am glad to mention Mr. W. A. Coote, of the National Vigilance Association, Mr. Elwood Scott, of Indiana, and Mr. Wilson, of Newcastle-on-Tyne. Copenhagen is a fine town with about 330,000 inhabitants, and visitors may have very good accommodation in a large new Mission Hotel at very moderate terms. I shall always be glad to meet with English Christian friends coming this way, and show them what there is to be seen of mission work in Copenhagen.

Vilhelm Wright.

MR. FAIRFAX, of Sydney, has been appointed general secretary of the Brisbane Y.M.C.A., which was recently wound up on account of financial difficulties. It is now to be resuscitated.

JEWS EMIGRATING.—A very large instalment of Jewish families from Galicia, Bessarabia, and Boulgord, are passing through Paris this week on the way to the Argentine Republic. Pressure must necessarily come on our Mission through the urgent need of distributing Hebrew and Russian New Testaments, and we ask the prayers and practical help of the friends of Israel. The question is raised, Who will go to the Argentine Republic to labour among the Jews?

SOLDIERS' INSTITUTE, PORTSMOUTH

A NEW DEPARTURE.

Dear Sir,—I should like to make known to your readers the increasing prospects of usefulness before us at Portsmouth. While still endeavouring, by God's help, to keep every department of the work fully active and efficient, we have made special efforts since January, 1888, for the spread of scriptural truth and for the preaching of the Gospel—first, by the establishment and circulation of our penny monthly magazine, Ready; next, by the erection of a Gospel tent in the very heart of the town, its busiest part, opposite the railway station. God marvellously blessed last summer's daily meetings in this tent, and it is our intention to resume the work at the beginning of June.

Needless to say, there has been much opposition to the work, as incongruous in the very midst of business and pleasure-seeking; but as I have purchased the site, the tent cannot be ordered away. The site is a splendid one, the best in the town for public purposes, 106 feet frontage and 90 feet in depth. Our tent will occupy one-third of the space, the remaining two-thirds being now covered by a large Coffee Palace and Gospel Hall in course of erection. And when that is completed and at work, the part occupied by the tent will also be built over. I shall be glad to forward upon application a prospectus of this latest extension of our work. It is a great undertaking, and I believe will be greatly used by God in his purposes of mercy for this wicked town.

While the place is building, I shall be seeking to raise the money—1st, by gifts; 2nd, by loans secured upon the property. For this object I am planning a "tour" of over three months' duration, in my invalid's coach, built purposely for me, to travel by road only. I go (D.V.) as far as Liverpool and Manchester, returning by another route, and addressing meetings in fifty towns. This may seem a heavy task for one who has been confined to the house for eight years, and who cannot move without pain, but I believe God will enable me to accomplish it. And I do not desire to offer unto Him "of that which doth cost me nothing."

I ask the prayers of your readers for journeying mercies, and that my mouth may be filled with God's praise, and with his honour all the way. Also for success as He shall see fit. If any can help in other ways, also, I shall be glad to hear from them.—Yours faithfully and obliged, Sarah Robinson.

"A NEW MISSIONARY ORDER."—The details given in this article last week, respecting the journey from England to the interior of China, were in one particular incorrectly set out. They should have read: "Passage from London to Shanghai, £33 17s. 3d., P. & O., second class. Journey from Shanghai to interior, £5 to £7 each; in foreign dress, £15 (first-class travelling is compulsory if European dress is worn).

POOR FRENCH IN LONDON.—Pastor G. Barbier continues to carry on an excellent work among the poor French-speaking people of Soho and neighbourhood. Three services are held weekly in the chapel, 11, Portland-street, Poland-street, Soho. There are Sunday and day schools, an employment agency, and a Home for foreign girls. Among other efforts may be mentioned open-air preaching during the summer months, and the circulation of wholesome literature and copies of the Scriptures. Of late this interesting Mission has lost some good supporters through death. Other helpers are much needed, in order that the various operations may be efficiently maintained. In auditing the twenty-second annual report, just published, Mr. Joseph Weatherly, of 51, Gordon-square, W.C., a long-time friend of the work, heartily commends the Mission to the practical sympathy of the Christian public.

AMERICAN NOTES.

[FROM OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.]

THE Christian element is so very decided in high official circles just now, that a noted sceptical writer sneeringly remarks to the effect that the Cabinet is a Sunday-school coterie. Both President Harrison, and Post-master General John Wanamaker have been life-long, earnest, active Christian men. It is too late in the day to sneer at them.

The temperance workers in the State of Massachusetts have met with a great disappointment. The resolution to amend the Constitution in favour of prohibition was defeated at the polls by an overwhelming majority. While the whisky men were intensely active to overthrow the amendment, thousands of professedly temperance people refrained from voting. Hence the victory for King Alcohol. Party politics are blamed; nevertheless the hosts of temperance workers will rally around their uplifted standard, and continue the war.

A calculation has been made that at least 150,000 children are in the habit of daily visiting the saloons of New York city. Bar-tenders have been known to offer children of the tenderest age candies as inducements to patronise their beer-shops. No wonder The Christian Advocate sadly remarks:—

> Could any arrangement for the manufacture of criminals be more ingeniously devised? When thousands of children hear the profanity and the low conversation of the classes who frequent these places, and inhale the atmosphere of the bar-room daily, they will become drunkards and criminals and paupers, or the laws of nature will be reversed; and yet this institution is tolerated and accorded a prominent place among the forces which control the political machinery and social customs of the country. Can these things continue and the nation go unpunished? "God is not mocked."

Truly God is not mocked! Recently we heard of the death of a prominent business man, supposed to be very wealthy, but he died worse off than a pauper, leaving debts to the amount of sixty thousand dollars. He was a whisky man, and one of the first who sent rum from this country to the Congo. His ill-gotten gains melted quickly. Is there no voice of warning in these providences for our ears?

We fear not only will Philadelphia, but the work of the Y.M.C.A. generally suffer a great loss in the prospective removal of Mr. David McConaughy to India. Our worthy brother, who has wielded a powerful and healthy influence in Association circles, feels called upon to enter on similar work in India. But we would not retard the best beloved in their start for Pagan soil, with the worthy aim in view of preaching Jesus to the heathen. May our loving David slay many a Goliath superstition in yonder great empire.

The Convention of ex-Romanists announced to be held in Boston during this month is postponed until autumn. Numbers of converted priests, and others brought out of darkness into the light of salvation, have promised to attend. The Nun of Kenmare has been lecturing in Boston to large audiences. Her charges against the Papacy are neither few nor light.

The most notable event of the year has been the great centennial commemoration of George Washington, as President of these United States. Just one hundred years ago he took the oath of office, and began a course of statesmanship which made him as famous in peace as his generalship had made him in war. The recent celebration evoked universal interest and unbounded enthusiasm. Delegates and visitors from all the States and Territories met in New York to swell the mighty pageant. Triumphal arches spanned the streets along which the vast processions marched. The memory of Washington is deeply venerated. As first in war and first in peace, he still holds a unique place in the hearts of his countrymen.

PEACE DEMONSTRATION.

ST. JAMES'S HALL was crowded last Sabbath afternoon on the occasion of the Peace demonstration, arranged for by Rev. H. Price Hughes. Rev. Newman Hall having offered a fervent prayer for the speedy advent of a time of peace, Mrs. Ormiston Chant uttered a tender, womanly appeal. She pointed out that this new crusade was one in which woman should certainly engage. We must begin with the children, because if we deal with them we shall not have to deal with the strong wickedness in men and women. There is an astute plan to bring the abominable curse of the conscription into England. Preparation for war only aggravates the war spirit. Penn lived at peace with the Indians when his followers were unarmed, but when the warlike spirit entered the councils of the country, it broke up the reign of amity. Journalists, members of Parliament, and even ministers of the Gospel, go to the Bible to prove that war is right, when, in truth, the Bible spirit is utterly against it. We are asking for improved dwellings, and other material blessings for the people, yet we permit the war cloud to menace us.

It was announced during the afternoon that the Peace Movement, headed by Canon Westcott, is growing; already the Baptist and Congregational Union have pronounced their allegiance to it. A Peace Congress is to be held at Paris on June 23 and five following days.

MR. GEORGE CLARKE IN IRELAND.

As one of the honorary secretaries of the committee at Newtownards, in charge of the mission held by Mr. Clarke, I should like to tell your readers that the services of this evangelist have been wonderfully owned and blessed of God. For a fortnight, Mr. Clarke has been speaking God's message every night to crowded audiences. Those in the inquiry meeting numbered about a hundred nearly every night. Many have professedly given themselves to the Lord. Many Christians, who had become careless, have been stirred up to start anew the Christian race. Every section of the community has been reached by this mission. Respectable churchgoers have been warmed with enthusiasm, and drunkards have been led to adopt a changed life.

Some of the cases were truly wonderful. One wretched victim of drink came to the house where Mr. Clarke was staying, to see him. He wanted to get rid of the drink demon, but it was too strong for him. Mr. Clarke persuaded him to stay in the house out of the way of temptation were it only for a day, and come out to the service in the afternoon. The poor fellow felt the power of God at the meeting, and was enabled to start a new life. All classes were drawn to the meetings, and at the farewell service, it was a pleasant sight to see the numbers who waited to speak to Mr. Clarke, and thank him for the words he had spoken that had been so used by the Spirit of God to save them.

It is worthy of note that nearly all the ministers of all denominations in the town, united to support the evangelist.

JOHN FORBES, LL.D.

MISS LITTLE, of Reading, recently left London by the Coromandel for Bombay, to join Miss Rumsey in the work in connection with the Homes of Hope, &c., in that city, carried on by the late Mrs. Gladwin, and, since her decease, by Mrs. Dyer.

GORDON MISSION HALL, PLUMSTEAD.—This hall was recently opened for evangelistic and other services. A tea and public meeting were held. Mr. J. R. Jolly, J.P., who presided, spoke of the Christian character of the late General Gordon, and warmly commended this work to the support and sympathy of Christians.

LONDON MEDICAL MISSION.

WE learn from an "Occasional Paper," just issued, that, owing to the prevalence of sickness and the severity of the winter, there has been an increased expenditure in every department of the Mission. No fewer than 2356 visits have been made by the physicians to the poor of St. Giles, and the large number of 5367 persons received medical advice at the Mission dispensary during the quarter ending March 31. In all these instances there were opportunities of ministering to the spiritual necessities of the people.

Plans are now out for the re-building of the adjoining freehold premises in Short's-gardens for the permanent work of the Mission, as the lease of 47, Endell-street expires next year. Funds to meet this additional outlay are greatly needed. Last year there were 124 admissions to the Convalescent Home at Folkestone, and 249 children were sent to Holiday Homes on Brasted Chart for a fortnight. The needs of the work are at all times considerable. Communications may be addressed to Dr. Latchford, medical superintendent, 47, Endell-street, St. Giles.

WILD KURDISTAN.

MY first association with your paper began on my transfer to this place from Erzroum four years ago last October, Rev. G. C. Knapp kindly favouring me with the reading of it. I hardly need say we all find it most profitable reading, and helpful in many ways. The Lord richly reward those who so kindly remember us pioneer workers in wild Kurdistan.

Perhaps in none of the Turkey missions can the workers feel so keenly the need of remembrancers—such encouragement as letters from friends and the printed page give—as do those located in this, perhaps, the darkest corner of all this benighted land. The country, so far as the interior is concerned, has fallen into a most deplorable state. Misrule, oppression, plunder, and poverty have become most alarming indeed. Robbery is very prevalent, not only upon the highways, but even within villages and large towns during the night. Some of the leaders in such rascality find their haunts in the towns, and have their abettors in the local Government even! Plunder, murder, oppression, together with the violation of the honour of families, are almost too common to call for special mention.

Famine too has come in to make all the darker the hopes of the people, owing partly to failure in the last wheat crop, and partly to general stagnation in business. The famine is more from lack of money than wheat, as the latter is to be had, while from lack of the other, or any credit with which to secure it, not a few would have died already, only for the help we have been able to furnish in the small resources we had at hand. That is nearly all gone now, and what the future will be for the poorer ones, till harvest comes in, I dare not reflect, unless again Christian charity comes to the rescue. Heaven pity this poor, unfortunate land!

Not a little of our time of late has had to go in serving tables—trying to plan to make the most of the few loaves and fishes we had by us. Never was there more need for the good cheer the "old, old story" affords in these parts; and we have not a little encouragement in that department.

YOUNG MEN OF SWITZERLAND.—The triennial Congress of the Young Men's Christian Associations of French-speaking Switzerland has taken place at Neuchâtel. In 1886 there were ninety-five Associations, with 1000 members; to-day there are 106 Associations, with 1500 members. Moreover, there are thirty new Associations in course of formation. The Congress was a season of joy to many Christian workers, and wil lit is believed, mark an epoch in the progress of the Y.M.C.A. movement.

For the Young.

A SEVENFOLD LIFE-RULE.

Suggested by Mr. Lewes Sayer's address to young Christians at Stoke Newington, May 14.

LOOK TO JESUS day by day
As we tread the narrow way;
Ever keeping Him in sight,
Run the race and fight the fight.

Lean on Jesus day by day,
All our burdens on Him lay;
He will all our trouble share,
Lighten toil and sweeten care.

Learn of Jesus day by day,
And his blessèd will obey;
In his Word take great delight:
Seek to know and do the right.

Led by Jesus day by day,
May we walk in wisdom's way;
Ever take Him as our guide,
Follow Him whate'er betide.

Loving Jesus day by day,
May we never go astray;
But rejoicing in his love,
Foretaste know of bliss above.

Long for Jesus day by day,
For his coming watch and pray;
May we faithful servants be,
Longing our blest Lord to see.

Live with Jesus day by day,
In communion with Him stay;
May we in his likeness grow,
As with Him through life we go.

YOUNG INDIAN CHRISTIANS.

I am sure the young people of the "Scripture Union" in England, and the old people, too, will be glad to hear something of what the children of the "Scripture Union" in Calcutta are doing. They have lately had their tenth anniversary meeting, and a delightful meeting it was. The hearts of those at home would have been encouraged and gladdened could they have looked in upon us. Thank God for the "Scripture Union." Daily and systematic study of "the Word" is just what is needed for our young Indian Christians.

The meeting was on Saturday, April 6, at half-past five in the afternoon, after the fierce heat of the Indian sun had passed away, and the cool of the evening was drawing on. From all directions the young people gathered, many of them from the various mission institutions of the city. Boys and girls, one group after another, came flocking in till the room seemed full. Yet they continued to come, and each sat a little closer to his neighbour, and more room was found. After it seemed as if every place was taken, and not another seat could be had, in came twenty or more bright-eyed, sunny-faced girls from the French Normal School with their lady superintendent, and they, too, were tucked away somewhere, one hardly knows where.

What a pleasant sight they made, this room full of young people with their bright happy faces, and their pretty flowing Indian garments; and so quiet and orderly as they were, too. The addresses were made in their own language. Earnest men from among the native clergy, inspired by the bright upturned faces before them, spoke earnestly and eloquently of the advantage of regular Bible study. So simply did they speak that the youngest child there could understand. "Read your Bibles!" "Study your Bibles!" was the one theme of the meeting. And I am sure many went away with new resolutions in their hearts, especially as this meeting had been preceded by special services and special prayer to the same end.

After the meeting came sweetmeats and some pleasant social intercourse. "Did you have a pleasant time?" I asked one young girl. "Oh, yes, very," was the answer given, with a face wreathed in smiles. And it was a good meeting. Upon these young people, these young Christians, the Church of Christ in India, in the future, must depend for its pastors, its teachers, its evangelists. May they be so truly taught by his Spirit and sanctified by his truth that they shall become "vessels meet for the Master's service, and prepared unto every good work."

THE CHRISTIAN is a great comfort to us, and I thank you most heartily for so regularly sending it. SARAH GARDNER.

"THE KING'S FLOWERS."—The article on May 10, by Mrs. Evered Poole, gave the violet as the favourite flower of William I., Emperor of Germany. This should have been the blue corn-flower, called Kornblume and Kaiserblume. The violet was the favourite flower of the late Emperor Frederick.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—The following are the portions for the ensuing week:—Sun., May 26, 1 Cor. ii. 1—16; Mon., May 27, 1 Cor. iii. 1—11; Tues., May 28, 1 Cor. iii. 12—23; Wed., May 29, 1 Cor. iv. 1—14; Thurs., May 30, Ps. cx. 1—7; Fri., May 31, Ps. cxi. 1—10; Sat., June 1, Ps. cxv. 1—18.

CHILDREN'S SPECIAL SERVICE MISSION.—Mr. T. Lewes Sayer has concluded a fortnight's services at Raleigh Memorial Church, Stoke Newington. The meetings increased greatly night by night, and deep interest was manifested. The results were very encouraging. Portfolio and Bible-searching competitions contributed to the success and interest of the services. The local branch of the Children's Scripture Union was also added to and strengthened.

NEW SURREY CHAPEL.

SIR,—Many of your readers will be interested to know how we are getting on here. I am happy to say that souls have been converted nearly every week since the place was opened. The congregations are encouraging, and some twenty-two meetings are held every week, including a midday prayer-meeting on Wednesday, and a special service for young people in the lecture-hall on Sunday evenings, with an average attendance of about 300. We have just presented our balance-sheet to the district meeting, and they have highly commended us for our success. The whole property has cost us £14,077 7s., towards which we have received £7077 7s.; and we have £1600, which we hope to make up to £2000 by the first anniversary in September.

The church thinks I ought to have a little rest and change after ten years' hard work, so they have very generously given me three months' holiday, and I have made arrangements to leave on June 12 for a trip to the United States and Canada. The pulpit here will be well supplied during my absence, and I shall hope to return with renewed strength and give myself more fully to the spiritual work of this place. I beg to thank you and your readers for past kindness, and still hope to have your sympathy and prayers.—Sincerely yours,

B. SENIOR.

REV. GEORGE C. NEEDHAM has been giving a series of special Bible lectures in the Park-street Congregational Church, Boston. The object in view is for the encouragement of workers, and their further instruction in the Word of God. The class was very large.

THE FAMINE IN CHINA.

DEAR SIR,—We have received a telegram from China as under:—

"Further assistance famine not required." Our latest letters tell of a distressing state of things, but I suppose that it is now considered that the funds in hand will suffice to tide the poor sufferers over the few weeks that yet remain before their own harvest time.

We are most grateful to your readers, who have so kindly contributed to meet the awful need of the last few months.

Yours truly, B. BROOMHALL.

FOOT GUARDS UNDER CANVAS.

THIS is the eighth summer the foot-guards from London and Windsor Barracks have been to Pirbright Camp for rifle practice. It has been my privilege to be their tract distributor from the first Sunday they spent here till the present time. There are 1700 men here now, who are very pleased to get something to read, and say they read more whilst under canvas here than during all the rest of the year in London.

They attend the chapel services in good numbers, and after service on Sunday evening they stay for half an hour, and sing Sankey's hymns, each one being at liberty to choose his own hymn. Many of them can sing nicely, and some can play the harmonium. We spend all Sunday afternoon at the camp. Mr. Cockrain, of Richmond, holds an open-air service there from 3 to 4 o'clock, and generally has good congregations.

They also attend the week-night services fairly well. On Monday we have a prayer-meeting, at which the Christians are glad to attend. On Wednesday, Bible-class; on Friday, singing meeting. We have a large room, formerly used as a day-school, close by. This we let them use to read in, or write letters, or spend a quiet hour any evening during the week.

My husband is the minister of the chapel; has been so engaged just over nineteen years. He is not strong enough for open-air work, but often has overflowing congregations of soldiers, who appear to pay good attention, and we do pray and ask your prayers that these men may turn from sin to Christ, for pardon and peace.

We are firm teetotalers, and have prevailed upon some of them to give up the dreadful drink, which is such an evil with them. We should be very thankful to any readers of THE CHRISTIAN for gifts of tracts, booklets, or cards; and large-type hymn-books would be acceptable. There are 1700 Foot Guards under canvas here now from London barracks. Parcels by post may be addressed: Mrs. Fifield, Chapel House, Pirbright, near Woking; or by rail, Brookwood Station, till called for.

HOMES FOR LITTLE BOYS.—The May fête in connection with the Homes at Farningham and Swanley was held on Saturday at Farningham, where a large number of visitors spent a pleasant day. The spring fête, in which the Sunday-schools of London take the important part, was last year omitted on account of the great loss sustained by the death of the secretary and founder of the Homes, Rev. A. O. Charles, who did so much in the direction of training homeless orphan youths for useful callings. This year it was determined to include in the day's proceedings the crowning of the May Queen, which proved to be a very interesting ceremony. During the afternoon the visitors were able to inspect the workshops, where the boys could be seen at their various trades—printing, bootmaking, carpentry, tailoring, painting, and in the laundry and bakery. Several boys are also being trained as horticulturists, and in the management of farm stock. Special attention is given at the homes to thorough technical education, and the boys receive a good moral and physical training. Each house contains thirty boys, who are in charge of a "father and mother." At the present time two of the houses are empty for want of funds, and the committee and secretary, Mr. Benjamin Clarke, are making efforts to throw them open to sixty children.—Times.

Notes on Popery.

While present day Romish tendencies in Britain cause something like alarm among Protestants, Papists on the Continent do not hesitate to say what in all probability those at home think with regard to the development of Ritualism in our midst. A Paris paper, L'Univers, calls the lately erected reredos in St. Paul's Cathedral "a magnificent and impressive monument," and, after referring to the countenance it gives to the adoration of the Virgin Mary, says:—

From the worship of the Holy Virgin to the worship of the saints there is but a step, and, this step once made, the Protestant Ritual will more easily be drawn into conformity with that of Catholicism. Nothing will then remain but to come back to Rome.

In similar language a Spanish paper, the Faro de Vigo, writes on "The Triumphs of Catholicism":—

Every day the tendency in England towards a return to the Catholic traditions becomes more marked; not only does the number of converts increase, but all the Protestant churches tend more and more to the Roman Catholic Church in the exterior practices of worship.

After a reference to the reredos in St. Paul's Cathedral, the writer says:—

When worship is rendered to the Most Holy Virgin, little is wanting but that the same should be done to the saints. As soon as this step has been taken, all that will remain, for the uniting of the Protestant Ritual with the Catholic, is submission to the Pope, which is not going to offer great difficulties. It seems as if the day is not far distant when José de Maistre's prediction will be fulfilled, that "the century will not terminate without mass being said in St. Paul's."

It is thus that those who know not the Gospel in its purity and power find pleasure in things which ought not to be allowed to be done under the name and sanction of Protestantism.

One of the most alarming signs of the times is the advance of Ritualism by leaps and bounds, and the no longer stealthy, but bold and blatant, advance of Popery. We are laying up a plentiful store of shame and sorrow for our children. Is there no possibility of arousing British Christians from their deadly slumber?

The fact that young and inexperienced persons who enter monasteries and nunneries are denied free intercourse with their friends, and, therefore, should they repent of their vows, are not able to regain their freedom, is exciting increasing attention among Christian people. Especially is sympathy felt for the thousands of women imprisoned in convents, to whom escape is practically impossible. Petitions to Parliament in favour of a Bill for appointing a Commission to inquire into the condition of monastic and conventual establishments, and to take such steps as shall secure the due observance of the law and the liberty of the subject, have been largely signed in some places. A valued correspondent writes: "Why should not every town in Great Britain take the matter up?" In the hope that the subject may be taken up throughout the country, we have pleasure in stating that the petitions should be drawn up and filled in with due regard to certain rules and requirements, of which particulars may be had from Mr. A. H. Guinness, Office of the Protestant Alliance, 9, Strand' London.

The Problem of Poverty.

At one of the recent May meetings an Essex minister gave a sad account of the effects of the prolonged agricultural depression in that county (as elsewhere), and especially of its influence in bringing grievous privations upon many of Christ's aged poor in the villages, and also in seriously crippling the resources of persons who in more prosperous days used to be able to contribute liberally towards the aid of the destitute, and towards the support of churches and charitable institutions. Instances were mentioned by the speaker in question of very aged members of his congregation, who, after lives of toil and on attaining such ages as seventy-four, seventy-six, eighty-six, and, in one case, ninety-six years, are now reduced to such destitution that they have each only two shillings and a loaf from the parish to keep body and soul together. It is a wonder how these poor creatures manage to exist. Thousands more over the country are in a similar plight. One of these aged women (mentioned by the minister) had only a single dress, which she turned inside out on Sundays, in order to appear tolerably neat at a place of worship.

It was stated that, in addition to the influences of foreign competition and of excessive burdens upon the land, through taxation and rates, the very remarkable continuance of unfavourable seasons and deficient harvests had seriously affected our agricultural districts. With little exception, as for instance, in partial degree, the Queen's "Jubilee Year," we have not had a fine, long, warm summer since the year 1868, or for more than twenty years. Constantly, since that date, we have had prolonged frosty, or windy and bleak springs, with wet or cool summers, or at any rate a most striking absence of what may be termed genial, sunny years. The present season has, so far, been a further illustration of this ungenial and unseasonable weather.

But the remedy for such a remarkable and significant state of affairs is utterly beyond the power of legislation, or of any human influence, except in one direction, namely, by the exercise of humble, united, persevering prayer, that God may be pleased to come to the help of his suffering human family, and grant more fruitful harvests and more sunny seasons; also that He may give to legislators, philanthropists, and the people, more true wisdom, for the successful solution of the grave social problems, in relation to pauperism, intemperance, and other evils, which now press so heavily upon millions.

The Lord's supremacy must be more humbly acknowledged by us, as a nation, in these matters; and, perhaps, He must be more recognised by reverent, united, persevering prayerfulness, as the great and alone Sovereign Disposer of human affairs and interests, if happier, easier and more satisfactory conditions than of recent years, are again to prevail. I earnestly commend the practical consideration of this subject to your readers, and to their ministers and church officers especially.

MARINERS' FRIEND SOCIETY.—We think it right to state that the announcement of the anniversary of this Society appeared in our list of May meetings by inadvertence.

STUDY OF PROPHETIC SCRIPTURE,

Conference Hall, Clapham Road,
June 18, 19, and 20.

For the sixth time, we invite your attention to our Conference for the Study of the Prophetic Scriptures. So far as we are aware, there is, at present, no other annual series of public meetings in the country devoted exclusively to this momentous subject. Surely such ought not to be the case. If a blessing was pronounced upon both readers and hearers of the Word of Prophecy eighteen hundred years ago, the understanding of that Word should now be regarded as indispensable; for all things seem to proclaim that the Lord is at hand.

According to the almost unanimous opinion of prophetic students—however much they may differ in other points—the prophecies which affect the long ages are now either exhausted or nearly so. The prophecies of the Last Times are in active fulfilment around us. Everywhere we may detect symptoms of the great "Falling Away," in which men were to deny the Mystery of Godliness, and to listen to the avowed teaching of demons and wandering spirits; while the gigantic forms of the last mighty foes (Rev. xvii.)—Popery and Secularism—are emerging from the clouds of self-pleasing, indifference, and scepticism which have been for some time thickening around us.

The moral state of mankind resembles more and more closely the inspired sketch of its final corruption: the political powers of Christendom seem not only prepared for the wars and rumours of wars which are to be the immediate heralds of the End, but also ripe, through their internal dissensions, for those civil tumults which are to disturb the Roman world (Mark xiii. 8). Meanwhile, the Jew, still threatened in Europe, continues, though slowly, to increase the number of his people who are already located in their own land.

Such are some of the reasons which induce belief that the days of waiting are well-nigh ended, though we know nothing of the exact period of our Lord's return, neither the day nor the hour. While, then, it is yet permitted, let us search the Word of Revelation, that, by the grace of Him who has commanded us so to do, and who purchased us by his own blood, we may have understanding of the times, and know what we ought to do.—Yours in the Hope of his coming,

Canon Wilberforce, in course of a recent address at Torquay, referred to the late Duchess of Sutherland's signing the pledge and wearing the blue ribbon. No one knew the opposition she had to encounter. She wore the blue ribbon at the Queen's dining table, in the Queen's drawing-room. They could not tell the result of her example, nor how many wore the bit of blue in consequence. He knew of one case, of a young girl who had signed the pledge and was almost bantered out of it, when she had one of the Duchess of Sutherland's dresses that was sent to a shop in Regent-street to alter, she saw the bit of blue, and said to herself, "If the Duchess of Sutherland can wear the blue ribbon in the society in which she lives, I am not going to take it off."

REV. BURMAN CASSIN,

Rector of St. George the Martyr, Southwark.

OUR sketch to-day has for its subject a clergyman of the Established Church who is known far and near as an able and evangelical preacher, an earnest advocate of many a good cause, and a true-hearted Christian gentleman.

BURMAN CASSIN was born at Bristol in 1835, of Christian parents, and, like Timothy of old, owing chiefly to his pious mother, he knew the Holy Scriptures "from a child." Entering St. Paul's School, London, while the accomplished Dr. Kynaston was high master, he was brought under influences which permanently affected his character. He was also privileged subsequently to number several masters among his best friends and advisers. During his school-days Burman became a regular Sunday-school teacher, and in other ways engaged in Christian effort. Towards the close of school days we find him third monitor, then obtaining an exhibition of £80 a year for four years at Trinity College, Cambridge, besides encouraging recognition for his successful studies in classics.

At college young Mr. Cassin was a decided favourite with tutors and lecturers. He applied himself well to his work, and was privileged to be the constant guest of the late Dr. Jeremie, Regius Professor of Divinity. He gave cottage lectures under the late Canon Clayton, and superintended the Abbey-road Sunday-school, under Rev. J. H. Titcomb, who was afterwards Bishop of Rangoon. Mr. Cassin graduated B.A. in 1858; the following year found him in full orders; in 1861 he proceeded to his M.A. degree. His first and only curacy was that of Merton, in Surrey, which he held with universal satisfaction for a year and a half. During this time he established popular lectures and entertainments for the people, by whom he was greatly loved.

In 1859 he accepted the incumbency of St. George's, Battersea, and for thirteen and a half years sustained a considerable popularity as a preacher to the masses. He carried on a truly good work, and his little church was often inconveniently crowded. A number of hearty friends assisted him, and when he left, the parish was much better organised than previously. While holding this charge Mr. Cassin married Miss Frances Anne Ready, daughter of the late Rev. T. M. Ready, vicar of Mountnessing, Essex. Eight of a family of nine are still living, the one having been killed by being run over in the street. The sad occasion called forth much sympathy at the time, four years ago. Many persons, besides those to whom Mr. Cassin and his devoted helpmeet in every good work were personally known, condoled with them in their painful loss.

Mr. Cassin's experience goes beyond the southern counties, for in 1872, at the request of the congregation, he was appointed to the vicarage of St. Paul's, Bolton. For five years he worked with much success in that important Lancashire town. A weekly Bible-class, attended by some ninety persons of both sexes, and of ages ranging from sixteen to forty, was a specially interesting phase of activity. Much was done to equip the parish with working machinery, Mr. Cassin being the means of building three of the six schools. There was a large band of Sunday-school teachers, and the scholars numbered about one thousand. Here Mr. Cassin saw somewhat of the Sunday-school enthusiasm which is so characteristic of the northern counties; bringing out their savings on the occasion of a schoo lanniversary, the children and congregation would give as much as £250 on one day.

In 1877, on the strong recommendation of Canons Fleming and Cadman, Mr. Cassin was appointed rector of the parish of St. George the Martyr, Southwark, by Lord Chancellor Cairns. He was specially commended to the Bishop of Rochester by his much-loved friend, the late Bishop of Manchester (Dr. Fraser), who was himself intending at the same time to offer him an important charge in his diocese. For eleven years Mr. Cassin has laboured with much success in Southwark. A large band of Christian workers look to him for direction, and cheerfully co-operate with him.

Mr. Cassin's parish is densely populated, and may truthfully be described as one of the poorest in London. The residents are mainly of the labouring class, many of whom are out of regular work a greater part of the year. The most destitute of all live under the shadow of the church, there being in that quarter no fewer than twenty common lodging-houses. Mr. Cassin does his utmost to reach these. Not a few take their places in the well-filled congregation on Sundays, when the rector's words are generally as cheery as the service is hearty. A good work is being done in a mission-hall in Chapel-court, Borough High-street, which was opened four years ago. Two mothers' meetings are held weekly; the poorest of the poor prize these happy occasions, one meeting being attended by about sixty, and the other by about 130 persons. Connected with this mission-hall there is a Young Men's Institute, which numbers over sixty members who meet twice a week. Much benefit results from the operations of a Help-One-Another Society. Mr. Cassin is entirely responsible for the expenses of this Hall—£50 a year.

Three deaconesses connected with Mildmay labour in the parish. They have a hall and a refuge, and do a very self-denying work, especially among their fallen sisters. Among the many duties of the deaconesses may be mentioned house-to-house visitation, the holding of mothers' meetings, and attention to the needs of the sick and destitute. Another branch of work, due to Mr. Cassin's outside influence, and carried on under his superintendence, is styled "The Camden Chislehurst Mission." Three years ago the congregation of Christ Church, Camden, Chislehurst, determined to undertake mission work among the poor of London. A committee having been formed, operations were commenced in Mr. Cassin's parish, and a chapel, which was previously disused, has ever since been the centre of beneficent operations. A mothers' meeting has 250 members, and temperance and devotional meetings, such as are held in the other Halls of the parish, form an important part of the work of this very interesting mission.

Mr. Cassin is a good friend of the ragged school movement, and among the societies whose cause he has often pleaded are the Church Missionary Society, the Church Pastoral Aid Society, and the London Society for Promoting Christianity among the Jews. His favourite mission, for which he has frequently obtained large sums of money, is the London City Mission, five of whose missionaries work in his parish, three under his own superintendence. He has an indefatigable curate, Rev. H. A. Geake, who is like a son to him. His three eldest daughters help in the Sunday-schools, one of them, the eldest, who superintends his Girls' Sunday-school, being almost a second curate. Being generous-minded and earnest, Mr. Cassin is on the best of terms with his Nonconformist neighbours, with whom he works in pleasant harmony.

A HOSPITAL FOR ARMENIA.

ARMENIA was once a beautiful country, but its fate has been very similar to that of Poland in Europe: at repeated intervals the Turks, Russians, and Persians have invaded, and afterwards robbed it, morsel after morsel. Thus the Armenians have become exiles over the face of the earth; a great number of them are to be met with in Asia Minor, under Turkish dominion. Here, as elsewhere, although mixed up with several other nations, they have strangely retained their customs, their own tongue, and their religion, the Christian-Gregorian.

About sixty years ago the American Board sent some missionaries over to Asia Minor, and, mostly through their efforts, 15,000 Armenians have embraced the evangelical Protestant faith. But the Turkish yoke seems to have deadened their energies; originally intelligent, they live now as if suffering were as natural a thing as breathing. The soil is fertile, the people clever in many: espects, especially in commerce and trading; yet money is very scarce, because there are no means of exportation, no railways, only bad roads, infested with thieves and robbers. Famines are frequent. Last winter half the population of an important town in Asiatic Turkey was starving.

One point to which special attention should be drawn is the sad condition of the sick poor. In the whole vast territory called Asiatic Turkey not one hospital is to be found. Some Christian friends ardently wish to make a beginning in the town of Marsowan (Turkey in Asia), and to try and raise there a hospital. They would be happy to find help in Europe, and in England. Marsowan has 18,000 inhabitants; it is situated in those districts called Pontus and Cappadocia. Asia is Europe's elder sister, and centuries back she sent over to us religion and floods of light! Now that she has fallen back into darkness, can we refuse to help her in our turn? Fuller particulars of this effort may be had from Mrs. J. R. Clark, 1, Chesham-terrace, Brighton, or Madame Rossier de Visme, 6, Rue des Jumelles, Lausanne, Suisse.

POPERY IN PORTUGAL.—In my haste I fell into an error in my recent letter on this subject. The fine in option for the extra three months should be £2 and not £20. Kindly correct this.

MRS. STAREY'S RECEPTIONS.

THESE are not held at a grand mansion in the West-end, neither is the hostess the wife of one of Her Majesty's Ministers. Those accepting her invitation to be present will meet no great ones of the earth nor any fashionable ladies, neither will any carriages be seen taking up or setting down guests of the evening; and yet, notwithstanding the absence of these, I doubt if at any reception in London there is as much unalloyed pleasure given and received as here. They are held in the Board Schools of Aldenham-street, Somers Town, not far from King's-cross station, in the heart of a district almost, if not quite, as poor as any to be found in the East-end of London. Many of these guests come from Westminster, Lambeth, Hampstead, Edgware-road, and other distant places, and, as a rule, walk the whole way, wet or fine. N one is absent except from sickness; they woul not miss coming for any consideration, the Thursday evening is the bright spot of their week. Perhaps you think Mrs. Starey has tea and coffee or supper prepared for them; not at all. The only inducement is to be in her presence, listen to her words, and to hear music or the lecture which she has prepared for their enjoyment. Of course each blind person must have a guide, generally a child, to conduct them to the reception, and for each of these Mrs. Starey allows threepence, and that is the only thing they get in the way of pay.

As we make our way up the room, crowded with blind people, we notice many old acquaintances whose faces we are familiar with in our streets. Mrs. Starey takes us up to the platform, where all the "sighted" are accommodated, and then goes to receive her other guests, to whom she says a few kind words while guiding them to the chairs arranged in rows down the room, and which are nearly all filled, although it yet wants a quarter to seven. Presently she brings an interesting looking girl up to us for a chat. Before she became blind she had been to college, and gained a scholarship of £40 a year. She was greatly excited this evening, because Mrs. Starey had been successful in obtaining for her a £10 pension from Gardner's Trust. I asked her if she could do anything towards gaining a living, to which she answered, "Yes, by type writing." Ninety cases out of a hundred in the room were blind by accident or through sickness; and a fact which interested me greatly was that, no matter what privations they are called upon to endure, they would willingly bear all, and more, to preserve their home life such as it is. Their objections to being sent into a Home are insurmountable.

We were obliged to bring our conversation to a close as seven o'clock was striking, and as the sound died away a blind man took his place at the piano, while another, with sightless eyes and earnest face, gave out in a clear, firm voice, the first verse of the hymn "Brightly beams our Father's mercy," which was sung by all present. As the second verse was in like manner given out and sung, one line struck us as pathetic, seeing that most of those singing it would never see anything again in this world—it was "Eager eyes are watching, longing, for the lights along the shore." This done, the blind man who gave out the hymn offered a short prayer for them all, and then Mrs. Starey, in a few bright, cheery words, introduced the gentleman, an Oxford man, who was to tell them something about an Oxford college. It was an interesting lecture, but our attention was taken up with its effect on the audience. Many of the women occupied themselves during the address making lace, crocheting woollen petticoats, and doing fine needlework, their little guides merely threading the needles for them.

When the lecture was over, any blind person desiring to do so was permitted to speak, and remark upon what had been said. Three of them took advantage of this, and spoke well and to the point. At length the roll was called by our hostess, assisted by one of the blind men, and now occurred what, to me, was the most curious part of the proceedings. As Mrs. Starey called out the names, those present answered, "Here"; but now and then there was silence, broken, however, by her helper, who, looking round the room as if he could see into every corner, said, "She has been here, but had to leave early," or "No, he is not here to-night," and so on. Well, this seemed to us almost uncanny, and we asked for an explanation. It appears that, as the guests come in, it is the duty of this blind man to pay the guide money; he never makes a mistake, and knows every voice, calling out their names as he gives the money. Some of the young ladies have tried to puzzle him by disguising their voices, and going up to him with the request, "I want my guide money, please"; but he is not to be taken in—his answer is, "Who are you? I don't know you." An evening more full of interest and pathos I never spent.

If anyone wishing to better the condition of these sightless ones would send contributions to Mrs. Starey, 53, Hilldrop-road, Camden Town, N., they need have no doubt as to the money being expended in the very best interests of the blind, and without pauperising them or taking from them their self-respect.—The Queen.

SEED-SOWING IN ITALY.

MR. E. C. NEWBERY writes from Bordighera:—With us on the Riviera, God is awakening the people to come to hear his Word. The fear of God got into the heart of the people a good deal through the earthquake, and elder people look upon three events which happened on the same day, close at hand, as a great warning from God—viz., the earthquake, the burning of the theatre at Nice, and the railway collision between Nice and Monte Carlo. In each of these catastrophes many lives were lost. Since then we have been sowing faithfully in these towns and villages the word of God and tracts, and we see Jesus working in men's hearts.

Three missions are now established, and are prospering, the San Remo one especially, where the people willingly stand up an hour or more after a hard day's work, as we have not enough chairs to provide sitting accommodation. Other places are now asking for Gospel meetings. No people are more ready to receive the Gospel than Italians, if properly dealt with. God has opened doors, is raising workers, and will certainly lead us and increase us.

Sioux, the city where Rev. G. Haddock was murdered because of his advocacy of temperance, is now under prohibition, and, it is said, was never before so prosperous.

"MAY MEETINGS."

Mission to Deep-Sea Fishermen.

THE big navy-blue flag that floated over the entrance to Exeter Hall on the afternoon of Wednesday week indicated that some nautical business was on hand. Inside the hall there was a profusion of flags and pennons, with mottoes which indicated that it was the annual review day of the Mission to Deep-Sea Fishermen. On the platform were ranged a lot of stalwart seafaring men, with bronzed faces, and clad in comfortable-looking jerseys. They were an instalment of the brave fellows who do battle with the elements on the stormy waters of the North Sea, in order that London's tables may be supplied with fish.

We congratulate Mr. MATHER, the devoted Director of this Mission on securing a chairman who is no figurehead, but a practical helper in the work—Mr. T. B. MILLER, Chairman of the Council. It was touching to hear the vicar of St. Thomas's, Southwark, in the opening prayer, beseech God to bless the toilers on the deep. "May they realise thy presence in tempest and in calm. Thou who didst call fishermen to be thy disciples, make many of those men thy true disciples." It is just close on seven years since the Mission was founded, and the proceedings took the shape of a birthday celebration. Among the letters of apology and regret for absence from the meeting was one from a lady, who has been a warm friend; she sent £50 towards the collection, as she could not come herself. Another lady sent £10, and there were additional tokens forthcoming of the widespread interest that this young but singularly successful Mission has awakened.

The Chairman, in a short speech, expressed great thankfulness at the extent to which God had set the seal of success on the work. If he could take the whole meeting out to the North Sea, where they might witness for themselves the scope and the measure of that work, he was certain all would return its heartiest friends and supporters. At the close of his remarks, Mr. Miller made a departure from the programme, and asked Sir EDWARD BIRKBECK, M.P., who sat on the platform, to say a word or two. That gentleman responded right heartily; his words, though few, were much to the point, and exceedingly earnest in their advocacy of the Mission. Its work, he said, is as yet only half done; but he felt sure a kind public would enable it to complete the noble undertaking it has in hand. Three weeks ago he was in the West of England, and heard of the great need for a mission vessel among those who have gone to a new fishing-ground in the Bristol Channel. He had represented the matter to Mr. Mather, and was glad to know that the need would soon be supplied. The hon. baronet had to leave at once for the House of Commons; but before going, he again commended the Mission to public sympathy with all the earnestness at his command.

A resolution expressing thanks for the past, and calling for increased support in the future, was moved by Rev. J. A. JAMIESON, rector of St. Leonard's. As one of the oldest friends of the work, he was thankful to know of the numberless blessings that have come from the efforts of the past seven years, both to the bodies and the souls of the men who toil on the deep. The Mission has been built up on the prayer of faith, and God has honoured the trust reposed in Him. Dr. SCHOFIELD (who instructs the Mission skippers in surgery, &c.) urged seven reasons why the work should be heartily supported. First, it has broken entirely fresh ground; second, it is a specialised Mission, and God has greatly honoured such concentrated effort; third, it is a body and soul Mission, and, therefore, it is Christlike in its character; again, it is a Medical Mission to a class that peculiarly demands such an agency; fifth, it is necessarily an expensive Mission, because mission vessels and hospitals have to be provided, but we are not to give to God that which costs us nothing, and the money is well spent; further it is an individual mission in so far as it was due to the devotion of one man (Mr. E. J. Mather), on whose heart God laid the burden, that it has been founded and perpetuated. Last of all, it is a most successful Mission in the best senses of the word.

In supporting the resolution, Rev. Dr. STEVENSON MOORE said that time would fail him to describe all he had seen with his own eyes of the blessed results of the work in the North Sea; he could only call it splendid. He attributed much of its success to the practical character of the help rendered to the men. Many who had formerly no regard for religious matters were drawn within the scope of its spiritual influence by the silent testimony of the philanthropic part of the work. Not content with seeing something of the work on the North Sea, Dr. Moore said he had made personal investigation at some of the home ports and had discovered how the conversion of fishermen afloat had influenced for good many of the families on land.

At this stage Mr. E. J. MATHER awakened the utmost enthusiasm by stating that he had received a note from Sir Henry Ponsonby, at St. James's Palace, enclosing a message which was (said Sir Henry) an honest wish from the Queen, backed up humbly by himself. The message was, "The Queen wishes every success to the Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen." A sudden and happy inspiration led the organist to play the opening bars of the National Anthem; then the audience rose and lustily sang the first stanza. The incident was dramatic and very gratifying in its character. May Her Gracious Majesty have a host of practical imitators.

A very decided and gratifying testimony to the worth of the Mission work was given by Mr. CHARLES JEFFS, superintendent of one of the Grimsby fishing fleets. He was followed by Mr. ASHTON, of Hull, who, as a North Sea fisherman himself of many years standing, declared that the Mission had let light and happiness into the lives of those who are tossed on those northern billows for so many months in the year. If the work were to drop, he pathetically urged, there would be a return to "chaos, disorder, and darkness." His limited vocabulary would not enable him to express all that he felt, but he prayed that God would help the Christian public to help on such a Divine work. Yet another weighty witness to the nature of the work was Mr. JOHN MANN, a bluff old salt, who has been doing business on the mighty deep for some fifty years. He narrated some incidents within his own cognisances as to the blessing that the Mission has been to his comrades on the sea, and his rough and ready but heartfelt talk made a deep impression on the audience.

Mr. MATHER (who, we much regret to know, has been laid up for some weeks from rheumatism) made an interesting and important statement as to the needs of the work. He told of its wonderful growth, and said that much-extended help is now needed. He confided to the meeting the most interesting fact that, as a birthday gift to the Mission, a lady has offered £3,750 to build a new hospital ship, thoroughly furnished, to be placed in some fleet at present without such a vessel. This lady's husband had read "Nor'ard of the Dogger,' and his sympathies were so aroused that he had commended the work to his wife and other friends. He died quite suddenly, and his wife now carries out what she believes would be his wish, by this generous gift. Unveiling a portrait which hung on the platform rail, Mr. Mather said he wished he were at liberty to tell of the devoted service rendered on behalf of the Mission by the young lady whom it represented, and who is now deceased. He indicated that a memorial Mission ship, the Alice Fisher, was contemplated, and asked for donations towards the completion of the project. As showing how friends could help, Mr. Mather also told of a lady who undertook a local secretaryship, after hearing one of his lectures, and who in a few months had collected £500. Another lady had collected a similar amount simply through writing and circulating letters in connection with the work. Little children had written to him, and sent the fruits of their self-denial. One little girl had grown mustard and cress, and sold it to her friends at 3d. a cupful, forwarding the proceeds. As a crowning argument, the Director said that during the year 7485 sick and injured fishermen were treated medically by the sixteen surgeons and the Mission skippers; such a fact, he thought, was alone sufficient to justify the existence of such a work, and to call forth the heartiest support on its behalf.

The collection having been made, the chairman was warmly thanked, on the motion of Mr. James Runciman and Mr. R. M. Ballantyne (both of whom, as the result of personal observation, have wielded their powerful pens in advocacy of the work), and the assembly broke up. Another meeting was held in the evening, one of its special features being the personal testimony of the fishermen.

The British Jews' Society.

THE forty-sixth annual meeting of the British Society for the Propagation of the Gospel among the Jews was held on Tuesday last week in Bloomsbury Hall, W.C. A goodly number of friends and supporters mustered on the occasion, and some sacred pieces were sung by the choir of Highbury-hill Baptist Church. The report, an abstract of which was read by Rev. J. DUNLOP, told of cheering results of earnest endeavour in many lands. The receipts during the year amounted to £8,926, including legacies. An increased income from regular subscribers is much to be desired. The missionaries number thirty-one, and there are more than ninety voluntary workers. Among Jewish women in East London more is being done than formerly. Mr. Dunlop related some deeply interesting cases of Jews finding in Christ the Messiah of ancient promise.

Mr. G. H. DEAN, who occupied the chair, spoke of the work as representing a great duty devolving upon the Christian Church. Not only is faith required, however, but that sincere love which excludes prejudice or misunderstanding. Rev. J. H. SCOTT, rector of Spitalfields, avowed a personal love for the Jews which has grown with his growth and increased with his years. He was, he said, delighted to find that the Society's operations among the thousands of Jews in his parish are well directed and much blessed. In the course of some Scripture allusions, the speaker showed that God's unconditional promise to Abraham must yet be fulfilled. Great things ought to be looked forward to among the Jews; and, in praying for the peace of Jerusalem, Christians will be showing a proper anxiety for a people who, by various equipments, are ready, when themselves converted, to take the Gospel into all the nations of the earth. In conclusion, Mr. Scott deprecated "Gentilising" the Jews. Israel must remain a nation, even when confessing Christ.

Rev. J. JACKSON WRAY expressed himself in cordial sympathy with the Society's aims and methods. He referred to the need for approaching the Jews on special lines, spoke of the great reparation English Christians have to make for oppression dealt out to Hebrews in years long gone by, and mentioned our religious and other indebtedness to the race, "of whom, as concerning the flesh, Christ came." Having alluded to the great present-day movement Christward, Mr. Wray called attention to the many gracious promises of God concerning the Jews. All these considerations should emphasise our duty and cheer us in our work.

Hearty addresses were also delivered by Revs. W. H. King. T. Eynon Davies, and H. G. Rosedale.

The Protection of Children.

OF all the phases of "man's inhumanity to man," surely the very worst is the commission of acts of cruelty or neglect affecting little children. Yet our human nature has sunk so low that such cases are frequent enough to demand a special Society to deal with them. That institution, the London Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, is not yet five years old, but it has ferreted out and investigated in that period some 1200 cases, more than a thousand of which have turned out to be very bad ones. When we take into account the many other cases that must have remained undetected, we are not able to pride ourselves much on our superior civilisation, to say nothing of our Christianity.

The public interest that has recently been aroused as to the work of this Society was reflected in the large attendance at the Mansion House last week, when the annual meeting was held. There was a strong platform, and the place of the Lord Mayor (who had not returned from Paris) was taken by Alderman Sir J. W. Ellis. It is usual at the meetings of this Society to take the report as read, and possibly many of the details of the work would be too repulsive for utterance to ears polite. We trust, however, that no false delicacy will prevent the sympathetic portion of the public from getting to know something of the cruel doings which the Society is doing its best to stop. Copies of the report may be had from the office of the Society, 7, Harpur-street, Theobald's-road, London, and every lover of the little children would do well to send for a copy. In a letter which the hon. director, Rev. B. Waugh, has lately written to Mr. Mundella, M.P., he says that for most of the calamities that fall on young children there is at present no legal remedy.

Cruelty to dogs and cats is a punishable offence. It is unlawful to work a horse with sores and bruises. To work a child with them is still lawful. To leave and animal without food is an offence. No owner of a child can be so punished. A child must be emaciated, well-nigh dead, before the law will interfere. It was said of Herod that it was better to be his pig than his child. It is better to-day to be the pig of an English brute than his child.

As many people know, a Bill is now before Parliament which, if passed, would enable the Society to deal with cases where at present they are helpless. In a touching speech at the meeting in the Mansion House, Mr. MUNDELLA told of his struggles to get the Bill passed, and how he had succeeded in getting it to the Committee stage, where its progress is blocked at the will of a single member of the House. The gentleman who has earned this unenviable notoriety is Mr. J. R. Kelly, the representative for Camberwell; surely some of the humane electors of that division of the Metropolis will endeavour to bring the honourable gentleman to recognise the claims of the suffering and unprotected children.

The speeches at the meeting were all good, and calculated to place matters in their true light. Cardinal MANNING commented on the gross inequalities of the law to which we have referred, and advocated the passing of Mr. Mundella's Bill. Lord ABERDEEN spoke of the judicious way in which the Society put its machinery in motion, and of the deterrent effect that its action has on cruelly disposed parents. His Lordship referred to the great step in advance that has been made through the recent ukase of the Chief Commissioner of Police in London, instructing the police to co-operate with the Society. Mr. MONRO, the Chief Commissioner himself, bore striking testimony to the humane and kindly sympathy of many in "the force" towards the children, and said they could not always do as their feelings dictated. Whatever help the police could render, within the limits of the law, he would answer for it the Society should receive. Mr. Monro was singularly hearty and outspoken in his cordial expressions of good will, showing how complete is the confidence that the authorities repose in the officials of the Society.

Rev. W. MOORE EDE, of Gateshead, testified to the sympathetic action of the Chief Constable in his district, and also as to the deep interest taken in the work of the Society by the working people of that community. Of Mr. Mundella's pathetic appeal we have already spoken. A very warm tribute of praise was rendered to Mr. WAUGH, the hon. Director, for his numberless services in the furtherance of this cause. Mr. Waugh in reply, deprecated receiving any praise himself, and proceeded in the same breath to praise Mr. Monro for the wise and statesmanlike step he had taken. Mr. Waugh added that he hoped the day was at hand when no child would be publicly charged with any crime without having proper facilities for defence.

It was resolved that the name of the Society should in future be the National Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children; certainly the question is a national one, and we trust the good cause will receive national support.

Turkish Missions' Aid Society.

THE work of the Turkish Missions' Aid Society continues to have the charm of peculiar interest as well as the recommendation of increasing importance. This was abundantly shown at the thirty-third annual meeting held on Wednesday last week at Exeter Hall. The Earl of Aberdeen, president of the Society, occupied the chair, and there was a goodly muster of friends. Rev. Dr. Brown, secretary, presented a report which told of increased usefulness and much encouragement. The year's revenue available for grants in aid showed an improvement, and although some old supporters have gone to their rest, the Lord has raised up others in their place. The meeting was very pleasant in tone, several of the speakers referring to the singularly happy fact that Christians in England should be systematically helping American missionaries who, in the providence of God, are successfully labouring in lands which, in consequence of delicate political complications, cannot profitably be occupied by British workers. It was gratifying to hear that Bible principles are steadily at work in the Bible lands—indeed, that in Eastern Turkey there are many churches of Christ fully alive to their privileges and duties.

In some hearty words, the CHAIRMAN directed special attention to the undenominational character of the organisation. Rev. Dr. DONALD FRASER followed with a capital address, in which he well pointed out that while promoting a new work, the friends of the Society are really helping the cause of Christ in the place where it was first planted. Rev. ARTHUR HALL spoke of what he had seen of the praiseworthy labours of the American missionaries in Syria and other parts of the great Turkish field.

Rev. Dr. HERRICK, of Marsovan, speaking on behalf of the entire body of American missionaries in Turkey, thanked the supporters of the Society for the welcome aid they render from year to year. He told of the spread of the Gospel both by the living voice and the printing press, showing that the patient toil of the past fifty years is at present showing itself in much fruit. The colleges are highly valued by the people, and while the religious teaching imparted in them is counteracting the influence of infidel literature on the one hand and the propaganda of the Jesuits on the other, it is equipping a body of Christian men who will one day be the leaders of the communities in which they live. Having spoken of the remarkable generosity of the poor people, who, once they are Christians, put the work of God before their own comfort, Dr. Herrick showed that evangelical truth has now taken a very firm hold in many districts, the distribution of the Bible by colporteurs having been fruitful of definite and most blessed results.

Rev. A. N. ANDRUS, of Mardin, in an account of work in that very interesting part of the field, pointed out that the endeavour of the missionaries is to establish churches with native pastors, and organise them on a basis whereby in due course they will be independent of foreign aid. Every church member is taught to be a church worker, so that wherever there is a body of Christians there is a centre of influence to all the region round about. Having dwelt upon the increasing spirituality of the Jacobite and Nestorian Christians, the speaker expressed the conviction that those communities have been providentially preserved, in order that they may evangelise the Arabs of the plain and the Koords of the hill country. Rev. W. WINGATE added a few words of cordial sympathy.

The Protestant Alliance.

A MOST enthusiastic meeting was held by this organisation, in the Lower Exeter Hall, on Thursday evening last week. If the whole country could be permeated by the depth of feeling that characterised the proceedings, there would be little to fear from any insidious advances of Romanism, and its bastard imitation, Ritualism.

Hon. P. CARTERET HILL (who presided for a time in the absence of Col. Sandys) said that we were living in perilous times. The nation has been asleep, but it is now beginning to awake. To the Protestant settlement, made 200 years ago, we owe all our civil and religious liberties. It is impossible that the State Church can be Romanised without affecting the whole of the Empire, and we must sink all party and sectional feeling, in order to conserve the Protestantism of the country. Commenting on the Bishop of Lincoln's trial, The Standard had said that the condemnation of that Bishop would cause a great disruption of the State Church, and had further contended that the Church of England ought to be large enough to hold both parties. This position Mr. Hill strenuously contested. He cited utterances from some great Reformers of the past who witnessed against the Romish errors of their day, and he held them up as ensamples of faithfulness that we ought to follow.

After a statement from Mr. A. H. GUINNESS, the secretary, a resolution declaring continued adhesion to the Protestant constitution of the country was moved by Dr. FULTON, from America. Describing the causes that led him to devote himself to the work of Protestant agitation, he remarked that Romanists in America, as well as here, desire to catch the rich and care nothing for the poor. He told some startling facts about the evil character of Romish ecclesiastics in America and the supineness of their church about it; these things had led him to enter the field in order to expose their doings. He pleaded for a manly sort of Christianity that would testify against Romanism, whatever the consequences were. To show what can be done, he told of several persons in America who, by the simple faithful reading of the Word of God, had brought about wonderful results in the quelling of persecution and the conversion of Romanists. A little bit of manliness, said the Doctor, is needed in your English churches and vicarages. Why don't you Churchmen go to your vicars and tell them that if they do not stop their Romanising practices they will have to get out. The great need is for individual action and faithful witness-bearing, every one in his own sphere. We have got to hold up the open Bible before the people; we cannot honour the Word of God without Him honouring that Word and those who tell it out. The Doctor said the only thing he regretted about the meetings that day was that there had been no prayer-meeting. If he had a crusade against Romanism in the autumn, when he returned to this country, he wanted it to be thoroughly understood that every meeting must begin with a half-hour of prayer. We must make these Romanists feel that we love them: the power of love in reaching their hearts is wonderful.

The flow of the Boston Doctor's burning eloquence is not easy to stop; but, as Sir ARTHUR BLACKWOOD was set down to speak, and had to ve and fulfil another engagement, Dr. Fulton ired at this point to allow Sir Arthur to ond the resolution, which he did in a weighty d cogent defence of the Protestant faith. e must not yield, he said, to the popular cry "concessions" to Catholic sentiment. hat we have to do is to uphold intact the th of God. There must not only be the de- ce of the truth, but united action. As the airman said on one occasion, we must edu- te, organise, and combine. The Church of gland, said Sir A. Blackwood, has got the dry in her by her compromising alliances with tualism and Romanism, and, therefore, there st be combined action on the part of those o hold by Protestant truth, whatever be eir Church relationship. The white heat to ich Dr. Fulton had raised the meeting was ll kept up by Sir Arthur, who declared that a le of enthusiasm and feeling on this matter rising throughout the country. The whole the kingdom ought now to be covered with network of branches of the Protestant liance.

In a rousing speech, the DEAN of ACHONRY pported the resolution. Englishmen, he ex- aimed, study your Bibles, and read Eng- h history, if you would prevent your tion again coming under the heel of the apacy! We want your help in Ireland to ive Romanism out of it; you want our help England to keep Romanism out. The rthy Dean wound up with a fine per- ation in vindication of the Bible and its ving truths. One good bit of closing advice gave: When a general election comes, never ind "politics," but stand by the Protestant ith.

Then Dr. FULTON was accorded an oppor- nity of finishing his speech, and he took up e thread of his previous remarks by urging personal effort on behalf of Romanists. me very plain speaking came from the octor about the evils that are prevalent in nvents, and he gave some instances of it at startled the meeting. He asserted that London the evil is rampant, but people are raid to speak out about it. But they will ve to speak out without any fear or false midity, if they would not be undone. "Men England, be true to God, and you will find at God will be true to you," were his closing ords, and his impassioned appeal was cheered the echo.

Another resolution, urging action at elections as submitted, and supported, and the pro- edings were altogether of the most enthu- astic and thorough-going kind. Mr. T. A. enny read a letter from Mr. C. H. Spurgeon, armly commending the objects of the Alliance. At a conference held earlier in the day it as resolved to take energetic action all hrough the country in the way of influencing olitical opinion when a general election omes round.

Tract Society's Breakfast.

HE Religicus Tract Society's missionary reakfast gathering in the height of the May eeting season is always one of special in- erest. That of Tuesday week, when the large all of Cannon-street Hotel was filled with uests representing India, China, East Africa, he Congo, New Guinea, Belgium, &c., formed o exception to the rule.

Mr. E. Rawlings, the Society's treasurer, ho presided, bade all a hearty welcome in the ame of the Committee. A noteworthy fea- ure in all the addresses, delivered in response, as the reference made by speaker after peaker to the good which had been achieved y tract circulation. In this vein spoke Pastor ppia, Belgium, Rev. P. Davies, from the ongo, Rev. J. Macgowan, from Amoy, Dr. ohn Murdoch, recently returned from India, ev. W. S. Price, Freretown, and Rev. H. cott, late of New Guinea. The best feeling was xcited, and at the close, Rev. Dr. L. Borrett hite announced that donations had been eceived amounting to upwards of £300.

Gray's Yard Ragged Church.

THE work amongst the casuals and destitute children at Gray's-yard has been carried on with unceasing devotion during the past year, and an encouraging report was presented at the annual meeting held last week. The work is of course largely one of seed-sowing. But now and again the hearts of the workers are cheered by witnessing conversions, and they patiently toil on in faith that God will give success in due season. The work amongst the children was spoken of as being the more promising, and special reference was made to the recent opening of the new building, in the spacious hall of which the meeting was held.

General Sir Robert Phayre, who presided, having had a good deal of personal experience in the work at Gray's-yard was specially qualified to speak of it, which he did in very hearty terms. Rev. F. B. Meyer has undertaken the personal oversight of the lodging-house which has lately been opened on the premises; for the small sum of fourpence each sixty-four men can obtain a comfortable bed, in addition to a basin of soup and a cup of coffee. The Word of God is read and prayer offered every evening. Mr. Meyer urged that philanthropists should multiply such lodging-houses, so that the thousands of tramps in London might get decent sleeping quarters instead of being compelled to spend their nights in the loathsome dens which at present they have to make their homes.

Dr. Donald Fraser spoke a few hearty words commending the work, as also did Messrs. F. A. Bevan, T. A. Denny, George Hanbury, Philip Gough, A. G. Fraser, and Colonel Macgregor. Urgent appeals were made for help to wipe off the debt of £1500 still remaining upon the new buildings, and prayer was offered that the work may be increasingly prosperous.

The Railway Mission.

EXETER HALL was well filled on Thursday evening, last week, on the occasion of the annual meeting of the Railway Mission. At conferences held in the afternoon, and also on the preceding day, delegates from various parts reported interesting developments of work. Assembled for the public meeting, all were greatly delighted to hear stirring addresses by Revs. E. A. Stuart and John McNeill, and it is devoutly to be hoped that many profited by the sound and loving words that were so powerfully spoken.

Some idea of the extent and character of the work was given by the secretary, Mr. RICHARD NIXON, in the form of extracts from the report. The one object in view is the salvation of the railway men, and in promotion of this some hundreds of devoted workers co-operate with the Mission. There are 263 branches in the United Kingdom; 36 in London, 173 in the English provinces, 10 in Wales, 29 in Scotland, and 15 in Ireland. Special Gospel missions were, during last year, conducted throughout the country by fifteen evangelists and missionaries, who held 2506 services, besides taking part in informal meetings held at just such times as the men could in some places be hastily assembled. Large numbers of Bibles, books, and tracts have been distributed, while The Railway Signal has circulated to the number of 490,000 copies. Several railway men have taken situations in South Africa in order to preach the Gospel there; two also have gone to South America to work as missionaries, while filling situations on the railway. The Railway Mission Christian Association, which is an inner circle of the work, has increased by over a thousand members. Over 90 per cent. of the Christian railway men are total abstainers, and among the entire body an earnest Gospel temperance work is in progress. Mr. Nixon appealed for help to clear off a debt of £800, and funds to increase the number of evangelists, as well as to provide missionaries for the foreign field. He also begged that the active interest of railway companies should include the provision of coffee-taverns at the stations, so that the men may be able to procure temperance refreshments. Mr. S. G. SHEPPARD, hon. treasurer, stated that only £2600 was contributed last year in subscriptions and donations. He asked for much larger support.

The EARL OF ABERDEEN, who occupied the chair, delivered a hearty address. He expressed pleasure at realising that the Mission is being increasingly recognised, adding that he was convinced that it was only necessary for the public to know of the needs of the work for the requisite funds to come in promptly.

Rev. E. A. STUART followed with an address in every way suited to the occasion. If to any class of people punctuality is an article of importance in life's conduct, that class is the railway men. On this familiar ground the speaker met his audience with some searching words. Quoting from Hebrews iii. 7, the clause, "the Holy Ghost saith, To-day," he uttered solemn warnings against procrastination. He did not believe Satan had a more terrible weapon than the word "to-morrow." A man dreamed that he stood by during a colloquy between Satan and some of his agents as to how most effectually to ruin men. One spirit was for tempting men to drink, another was for promoting infidel opinions among them, a third was for letting them fully believe in eternal verities, but persuading them that there is always plenty of time in which to leave off a life of sin. While infidelity may slay its tens, and drink its hundreds, procrastination causes the ruin of thousands. "The Holy Ghost saith, To-day," and every moment is of importance. Every day a man or woman remains out of Christ gives a day more to repent of, and a day less to repent in. In conclusion, the speaker urged the railway men to lose no time in coming to God in Christ for eternal salvation.

A forcible address, which was greatly enjoyed, was then delivered by Rev. JOHN MCNEILL. In some introductory words, he referred to his experiences on "another platform," saying, in a humorous manner, that he sometimes felt sorry for preachers who had not had half a dozen years' experience on the railway. After, in some kindly words, cordially commending the Mission to the sympathy of shareholders and directors, he spoke out straight to the railway men present. How, he asked, does it stand with us as regards that service which is greater than the railway service? I trust we are all on the up line, and not only all in Christ's service, but altogether there. In the passenger service there is at times much difficulty and anxiety, owing to people not getting promptly into the train, as instructed. So with regard to the way to glory, which is, wonderful to say, a system of "free passes" throughout, those who, as preachers, do platform duty, are often perplexed because of the uncertainty as to whether some people are out or in. We should either stand in or stand out; either be hot or cold. After other lessons and parables, urging the men not to put off the great question of salvation, the speaker pointed out that as, when seated in the train, passengers do not trouble themselves about the permanent way, so all who are in Christ may be without anxiety as to arriving at the end of the journey. There may be tunnels and ups and downs, but God has never yet lost a passenger. All Christ's sheep are safe, and will safely arrive home, and see, to their joy, the glory of the Lord.

Several delegates made short speeches. One said he could not look back with any pleasure upon the old times, but as for the present, there are daily grounds for thankfulness to God. Another pointed out how much yet remains to be done. At Swindon there are eight thousand men, and only a few small meetings held. A chief inspector, in one great centre, though not himself a professing Christian, admitted to one of the delegates that the men have been better behaved since the Mission operations commenced. On the whole, the delegates told a story of progress and blessing.

Mr. RICHARD CORY, of Cardiff, spoke of the needs of South Wales, and expressed a hope that a godly man who is prepared to work the district should be appointed as evangelist. Towards the expense, the speaker and his brother promised £50 a year. At the close of the meeting, several friends promised sums of money, the total amounting to between £200 and £300.

Evangelical Alliance Conversazione.

A CONSIDERABLE number of friends and members of the Evangelical Alliance were present on Tuesday week at the Conversazione in Regent's-park College. Many Christian workers, at home and abroad, whom distance and duty had long parted, shared the joys of the réunion, and the conversation was free and pleasant, in the Dining-hall, where light refreshments were served.

Lord POLWARTH presided over the meeting in the Library an hour or so later. First of all, the secretary, Mr. A. J. ARNOLD, recounted his recent deputation experiences in the Peninsula. There was much to tell of a couple of months' "journeyings oft," consultations with fellow Christian workers, meetings, semi and wholly public, hindrances and encouragements; but a twelve minutes' rapid speech comprised all. Mr. Arnold presented now the dark and then the bright side of the picture. Taking the bright side first, he announced the success of his mission in its main object—viz., the formation of a branch of the Evangelical Alliance, even in Spain; for he has found, notwithstanding the change for the better which that Papal country has undergone during the last twenty years, there is only toleration as yet, not full religious liberty. Madrid was the chief centre of his labours, and a branch of the Alliance was there organised. In one large town two pastors and two congregations, both Protestant, agreed, in view of this deputation visit, to unite for once at least. What was contemplated as only a temporary union, now promises to be of a permanent character. The meetings, held alternately in the two chapels, were crowded to excess; and the two congregations are to hold united prayer-meetings every month. Mr. Arnold had also good attendances at meetings held elsewhere in Spain. The dark side of the picture has the complexion of persecution strongly marked upon it; not the fearful oppressions of former times, but grievous enough in the form of petty, persistent persecution, attaching to all who have the courage openly to profess evangelical Christianity. Some suffer greatly. Protestant congregations, as a whole, exist under a band. The parish priest, alas! is not the only hinderer. Mr. Arnold reports the doings of "enemies within the gate." First, there are English residents who, if they do not exactly oppose Christianity in Spain, either frown upon it or, at any rate, will have nothing to do with it. Happily, they are not all alike; and there are real friends, as well as veiled foes. Nevertheless, a hopeful prospect looms in the future—near, it is hoped. As the secretary pointed out with frankness, felt by all present, the Bible is being largely circulated in Spain, and the Gospel is being preached; Christian union is increasing; and we may confidently and earnestly pray for God's blessing on all such Christian work faithfully conducted.

The practical demonstration of Christian union was spoken to by Rev. HENRY APPIA (Nessonvaux, Belgium), who wished a branch of the Alliance to be started for the Netherlands; by Rev. E. BARNAUD (Mazamet, France), who testified to the utility of unity in the Free Evangelical Churches of France; and by Rev. W. SALTER PRICE, the veteran founder of Church of England missions in East Africa, who set a high value on Christian fellowship among missionaries of various but evangelical denominations in the foreign field.

Seamen's Christian Friend Society.

THIS Society celebrated its forty-third anniversary last week, and had most successful gatherings. The annual meeting was held at Exeter Hall on May 14. The place was well filled, and the gallery was occupied by a large company of sailors, who seemed to take a hearty interest in the proceedings. Mr. George Williams, who presided, said they heard a great deal nowadays about apostolic succession; he claimed for this Society Jesus Christ's succession. He went after seamen and fishermen, and sought their highest welfare, and that is what this Society was doing. It did an enormous amount of work, at very little cost.

The report read by Rev. G. J. Hill, secretary, showed that the income and the work had been much larger than in any previous year, though the funds had been insufficient to meet the needs of the work by £380. During the year 3878 Bethel services, temperance, and other meetings had been held ashore and afloat, 376 libraries and bags of books had been placed on board outgoing vessels, relief had been given to distressed seamen, a vast amount of Scriptural literature had been distributed, and letters had been sent to sailors all over the globe. London, Liverpool, and nineteen other ports had been missioned, twenty missionaries and agents had been employed, eight Sailors' Rests and Bethels, with several reading-rooms, mission-boats, steam launch, and Bible-carriage had been supported, and the whole of this work had been done with an income of less than £3000.

The adoption of the report was ably moved by Rev. H. Nevile Sherbrooke and Rev. John McNeill. Admiral Grant, C.B., said he looked upon the Society as doing a most patriotic work, because the nation was judged abroad very largely by the life and character of our sailors. Mr. H. W. Maynard said he had seen much of the Society's work in Cornwall and in London, and there was no place where Mrs. Maynard and himself spent happier times than with the sailors in this Society's chapel in Ratcliff. Mr. Robert Paton thought the best way for people to get their interest in this Society's work stimulated would be to go down and see what was being done among the sailors on their own ground by Mr. and Mrs. Hill. Brief testimonies from several Christian seamen followed.

The sermons, preached by Revs. G. M. Butler, Dawson Burns, D.D., and Archibald G. Brown, were largely attended by seamen and others, and were, it is believed, blessed to the good of many.

Tottenham Deaconesses' Institution.

THE anniversary meeting of Dr. Laseron's Evangelical Protestant Deaconesses' Institution and Hospital, at Tottenham, was held on Saturday afternoon under the presidency of Mr. James Laing, of Sunderland. The aged founder and director has been ill, and looked considerably reduced in strength, but he was sufficiently recovered to be present, though able to take little part in the proceedings. His son-in-law, Rev. B. A. Schleicher, read the report. The number of deaconesses connected with the institution is sixty-three—34 of whom are resident in the parent-house at Tottenham, 2 at Cork, 3 at South Dublin, 20 in Sunderland, 2 at Scarborough, and 2 in the hospital at Jerusalem of the London Society for Promoting Christianity among the Jews. The sisters have attended during the year 10,819 cases, every opportunity being taken of speaking to the patients of the Great Physician. Evangelistic work in almost all its phases has been carried on amongst the poor in Tottenham, and much blessing is known to have resulted from the devoted labour of the sisters.

The CHAIRMAN referred in warm terms to the work of the sisters in Sunderland, and testified to the esteem in which they are held there, and to the good they are accomplishing. Mr. ELIOT HOWARD, J.P., remarked upon the important fact that the sisters are all Christi women, who aim at winning souls to Chri Prebendary SHELFORD, of Stoke Newingt vigorously replied to the charge which h been levelled against Christianity, that it ca only for the hereafter of men, and overloo their present needs; he cited this instituti as one of many that care "as well for the bo as the soul." Rev. W. FLEMING, secreta of the London Jews' Society, spoke of the hi value which is set upon the work of the siste at Jerusalem, who were sent out last autur at the expense of the Countess of Meath. R GEORGE TURNER, as a local minister, testifi to the great usefulness of the institution in t neighbourhood, saying he knew not a few w had found the Saviour while lying upon one the beds in the hospital through the ministr tions of the deaconesses.

Mr. JOSEPH WILKINSON mentioned that the is a portion of the hospital set apart f private patients, who are admitted at charg varying from two to five guineas per week, a appealed to those present to make the instit tion more widely known. Some words hearty support were also spoken by S Edmund Lechmere, M.P., Mr. Joseph Howar M.P., and Rev. W. Spensley.

The London Jews' Society.

SIR JOHN KENNAWAY presided over the eight first annual meeting of the London Society f Promoting Christianity among the Jews, whi was held a few days ago at Exeter Hall. The was an influential attendance of friends, a the children belonging to the Society's schoo sang a number of anthems and hymns. T report, presented by Rev. W. FLEMING, stat that the aggregate income during last year w £34,814. A good deal of solid work was do both at home and abroad, many missionari having taken the Gospel to the scattered nati in the various countries in which they a found. On all hands there were reasons f gratitude to God for giving blessing upon t labour of his servants.

In the course of a hearty address, the CHAI MAN referred to Israel's great need, and e larged upon the Society's efforts in London a Palestine. The ARCHBISHOP OF CANTERBU followed with a speech full of sympathy. H urged increased exertions in Palestine, whith the Jews are now going in steadily augmente numbers. If, he said, you throw your energi upon that country, think what will happen this influx goes on. You will have the mo remarkable centre in the world. Other re gious centres and localities decay, that w have become more bright and thriving tha ever. And what will the people be that yo have there? A people trained among all nation trained in every nation of the world, knowin the habitudes, the feelings, the principles th belong severally to all the nations of the worl Why, look at them now! It is not merely th they are strong on this Bourse or that E change, but that they really are, with the immense capital, and with the sagacity wit which they devote it to every end, helping a nations. And their poor, the world over, a doing the hardest and humblest work for th least recompense, and of all people they do in the most patient, industrious, and self-den ing spirit. Well, those characteristics of the rich and their poor will follow them; an therefore I say, that if you do fix your who heart on the work in Palestine, if you fix there in a generous and comprehensive spiri and try to enlist the sympathies of the who Church in your work, you will, so long as yo continue to act on evangelical principles, di fusing the Gospel in its plainest purity, hav there an agency such as can nowhere else b found.

Sir R. N. FOWLER spoke of the excellen working of the Society's several missions in th Holy Land, as seen by himself last autum Rev. A. J. ROBINSON, rector of Whitechape id that he had reason to hold in the highest ssible esteem those of his church helpers who e converted Jews. Revs. C. H. Banning, of rood, and S. T. Bachert, missionary in amburg, also addressed the meeting.

Aged Pilgrims' Friend Society.

IE object of this Society is to befriend, with- t pauperising, aged and poor disciples who e no longer able to earn their own living, by oviding them small pensions, and housing ners in asylums specially erected for the rpose. At the eighty-second annual meeting, the Lower Exeter Hall, on Monday evening, e secretary, Mr. J. E. Hazelton, reported that ere are now 1200 aged Christian men and omen receiving pensions of either five, seven, ten guineas per annum from the Society, e number of inmates of the four asylums ing 180.

Messrs. F. A. Bevan (chairman), James skip, W. J. Parks, the Dean of Achonry, evs. James Ormiston, W. Lancelot Holland, J. Baxter, and others, warmly commended e beneficent work of the Society to the tice of the Christian public, especially be- use of its essentially evangelical and Protes- nt character; and earnestly pleaded for an creased income, particularly in the form of nual subscriptions.

RIENDLESS GIRLS IN LIMEHOUSE.

r interesting meeting was held on Saturday, Mitre House, 8, Three Colt-street, Lime- use, in connection with Miss Forsaith's rk among friendless girls. The Rector of mehouse presided, and Miss Forsaith gave a ief but very graphic and interesting account her Home. The Hon. Lady Sebright llowed with an earnest and deeply touching spel address, dwelling chiefly on the central ought of Ps. xxiii., "The Lord is my epherd," and showing how the Good epherd is ever seeking and saving the lost. he Bishop of Bedford gave a most forcible d practical address, in the course of which strongly advocated the establishment of nall homes, such as "Mitre House," where e family life and personal motherly super- sion are possible, rather than the "Institu- on" or "Penitentiary" system. His lordship ngratulated Miss Forsaith on her balance eet, and on the business-like manner in nich the affairs of the Home are conducted. the conclusion of the meeting the visitors f whom there were about 50) were invited to spect the Home, and the Bishop kindly gave brief and most appropriate address to the rls.

Miss Forsaith's third annual report has been sued, and is of a very encouraging character. he past year, though one of "much trial in tward circumstances," has been "marked ore than any which has preceded it by great iritual blessing among the girls." Many of em have become decided Christians, and ose out in situations are doing well and owing much gratitude for the kindness they ceived at Mitre House from her whom they ll "mother." Though the Home is rendered some extent self-supporting, by means of a undry, Miss Forsaith is glad to receive the lp of any friends interested in the work, and perusal of her cheery little report cannot fail awaken sympathy in all Christian hearts.

PERNICIOUS LITERATURE IN BELGIUM.—In a cent newspaper article, M. de Laveleye points out at vigilance has done something towards suppressing e traffic in foul literature in Belgium. Not long ago rtain booksellers in Brussels made a profitable pecialty of publishing unclean books, such as no one red to print even in France. These books were sold at high rate in France, England, and Germany. rosecutions were in due course instituted, and though the offenders could not always be visited with gal penalties, they were so disgraced in the estimation the public that they have since been much less active their wicked traffic.

FAITH MISSION PILGRIMS at BRISTOL

DEAR SIR,—Five Pilgrims, Brothers J. E. Govan, J. A. A. Wallace, and C. Paterson, and Sisters Hay and Martin have been conducting a fortnight's mission (May 4 to 19) for Christians in this city. Meetings have been held twice daily, at 3 p.m. and 7.30 p.m., during which expositions of Scripture have been given with force and point, directed chiefly against the unrealities of the professing Christianity of to-day, with appeals to give up compromises and be out and out for God.

The striking feature of the work has been the overwhelming conviction of sin that has accompanied the addresses, and few, if any, have escaped from realising in some degree "Thou art the man!" The detailed charges as to inequalities of Christian character in the matter of worldly conformity, the lusts and passions of the flesh, the fear of man, unreal religious exercises and selfishness generally, accompanied as they have been with powerful appeals as to the responsibility of Christians to God, and the great claims upon them, in prospect of eternity and in the light of God's love as exhibited at Calvary, to be co-workers together with God in seeking to save a dying world, and in putting the kingdom of God and his righteousness first, always and in all things; the urgent persuasions to entire consecration and to a putting off of the "old man" with his deeds and to a putting on in his place of the "new man," created in righteousness and true holiness—all this has made an epoch in the religious experience of those attending these meetings, never to be forgotten. In short, we may say that, while the brethren dealt with the exceeding sinfulness of sin and the power of God to deliver his people from all their enemies, it was clearly demonstrated how God through his Spirit would honour and use fully-surrendered ones, in bringing conviction of guilt home even to his own dear children, but only in order to open up a path of triumphant victory over all the power of the evil one, through abiding in Him who "always leadeth us in triumph."

Some of the friends here are returning with the Pilgrims to Scotland, to be present at the Holiness Convention being held at Rothesay this week. ROBERT H. FALLON, M.D.

This communication bears in addition the signatures of twelve other members of various denominations.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For blessing on a tent mission at the North Camp, Aldershot, conducted by Mr. Thomas Wales, of the Evangelisation Society.——For special services by Mr. Opie Rodway, at Primitive Methodist Chapel, Sherston, Wilts. To commence to-morrow (Saturday).——For blessing on a mission being held by Mr. George Clarke in Enniskillen, Ireland, until June 2.——For blessing on a Christian Convention at Kingswood, Hockley Heath, Warwickshire, June 4 to 6.——For a clergyman who is a slave to the habit of smoking, that God will incline his heart to give it up for his sake.

LIFE-BOAT WORK. — The Royal National Life-Boat Institution has recently issued its annual report, which is as usual full of interest and deeds of heroism. During the past year the Society's work was carried on with great activity and unflagging energy. We learn that at last there is a possibility of a successful steam life-boat being produced. In the year the life-boats, of which the Institution now has 293, were launched on service 295 times, and were the means of saving 626 lives and 26 vessels, in addition to which the Committee granted rewards for the saving of 174 lives by shore-boats and other means, bringing up the grand total of lives saved, for which the Institution has granted rewards since its establishment in 1824, to 34,043. Notwithstanding the number of times the life-boats were out on service, and the 768 other occasions on which they were launched for exercise and inspection, only four life-boat men perished in their noble and self-sacrificing work. Provision was promptly made by the Institution and the localities in which the disasters occurred for their bereaved families.

PARLIAMENT AND SENTENCES.

SIR,—The first place in the business of the House of Commons on Friday evening, May 24, at nine o'clock, has been obtained by Mr. E. H. Pickersgill, for the introduction of a motion on the treatment of crime in general, and in particular as to the inequality of sentences.

Considering the importance of this subject it is very desirable that your own readers should immediately urge their Parliamentary representatives to be present on the occasion, and to secure an effective debate.—Respectfully yours, WM. TALLACK.

UNDILUTED POPERY.

SIR,—You were good enough to publish, a short time ago, copies of notices concerning masses at St. Clement's, Cambridge.

In consequence of this, they have been withdrawn. May I ask you to publish a notice which I copied in St. Barnabas Church, in Oxford, on the 14th inst.:—

"Confessions are received in the Church on Fridays at 3 p.m.; on Saturdays at 3 p.m., and at 8.15 p.m. before great festivals; also by appointment."

There was a crucifix on the super-altar, a huge cross and seven brass lamps, with red glasses hanging from the ceiling, a picture of the crucifixion in the south aisle, and the stations of the cross all round the church. The pulpit was divided into nine panels, with figures painted on them, three of which were Popes, with triple crowns. Two of them had the Pope's glove, with the jewelled imitation of the "pierced hand of Jesus." The names of the Popes were:—

(1) Gregory the Great, 604;
(2) St. Leo the Great; 461, and
(9) St. Clement, of Rome.

I went yesterday into St. John's, Regent-street, where I saw in the daylight three lamps, with red glasses, burning, and four candles burning on the "altar," on which was a crucifix. The stations of the cross were round the church, and a notice, asking for the prayers of the congregations for the dead, was at the door.

Surely all this is undiluted Popery.

W. P. PARTRIDGE, Deputy Surgeon-General.

Beckenham, May 18.

THE JOHN BUNYAN BIBLE CARRIAGE.—A deeply-interesting meeting was held at Wellington Lodge, Ashby-road, Bristol, on Wednesday week, to commend the two evangelists who accompany this carriage, to the guidance and blessing of God. Mr. James A. Vicary described how the van came into his possession, and how it had been adapted to colportage work. The two young men accompanying the carriage having spoken, Mr. Douglas Russell, Mr. A. G. West, and Mr. H. Harris followed with encouraging remarks. The carriage, heavily laden with precious seed, left Bristol on Thursday morning for Weston-Super-Mare, en route for the Bath and West of England Agricultural Show at Exeter, commencing June 5. The prayers of our readers are asked on behalf of this the third Bible and Gospel-mission carriage under the direction of James A. Vicary.

COLPORTAGE.—Mr. Spurgeon presided on Monday evening, in the Metropolitan Tabernacle, over the twenty-second annual meeting of this association. The report stated that there were now eighty colporteurs connected with the association. The total value of the sales for the past year had been £8916. The chairman declared that this colportage business was a necessity of the Christian Church, and he wished that they would see it to be so. They must meet bad literature, and it could only be met by the production of good literature. The colporteur, however, did more than counteract the influence of bad literature; he was an agent of the Church of Christ—when unable to sell books, always leaving a tract and speaking a word for Christ, preaching where able, conducting services when needed, and comforting and instructing the sick and dying. Addresses were also given by several of the colporteurs.

THE CHURCH OF ROMAN SOLDIERS.

By Mrs. FOWLER WILLING, M.A.

We do not usually look upon soldiers as missionaries; yet God may permit the English to evangelise the 30,000,000 of Italians through their Military Church in Rome.

This body of evangelicals can hardly be large, on account of the removal of regiments and the discharge of those whose term of service has expired; but its power is felt throughout the nation. It has usually about 150 communicants, and 1000 or more under direct instruction.

The Italian military force may yet be the salvation of the people. A standing army of consumers, supported by the producers, taken from the peaceful studies and industries, and taught the art of destruction, driving thousands of young men who ought to use their talent and muscle at home to escape conscription by emigrating, it is difficult to see how this can be a blessing. But in Italy it is always the unexpected that happens.

This is a new country, holding her position, as boys of pugilistic age think they must do, by physical strength. Her arch enemy the Pope exercises the rights of domain in her capital, gathering immense sums of money from her people, and, with his standing army of priests, nuns, and Jesuits, plotting constantly for her overthrow, ready to betray her into the hands of any hostile power that will re-establish his sovereignty.

In self-defence, Italy gives every young man who is able to bear arms military drill. About 175,000 are kept in camp, and the rest may be called into service any day.

Her army helps the poor by giving them contact with the better classes. The son of the nobleman and the son of the beggar go into the ranks side by side. The Crown Prince has worked his way up to the command of a regiment. It educates. Papists never educate the masses, unless they are driven to do so in trying to hold their power over the people. Italian soldiers are not dismissed from the service till they have learned to read and write. Thus the fearful illiteracy of the nation under the Papacy is being overcome.

It unifies and makes loyal the young manhood of this conglomerate Italy. Piedmontese, Lombards, Venetians, Tuscans, Romans, Neapolitans, Sicilians are different peoples with different dialects. When they have been kept together under loyal military drill for two or three years, they become Italians. There is no class in Italy so free as the soldiers for evangelical instruction. They are away from their home superstitions, and the women, through whom the priests hold the country. In the breaking up of old customs, the blending of ideas, and the quickening of thought, the army does for Italians what the railway network does for the English and Americans. Though they are nearly all Roman Catholics, they are not provided with chaplains, because the priests are the worst enemies of the State.

The Government favours religious toleration. When Luigi Capellini, who is the founder and pastor of this Military Church, began his work of reading and expounding the Scriptures in the barracks, where he lived as a soldier, a council of general officers came together to consider how this evangelical heresy could be put down. Prince Umberto, now King of Italy, closed the council by saying, "See that no political plotting goes on under the garb of religion; but do not hinder the men from fulfilling the duties of their faith."

Since he has come to the throne, Umberto has conferred on Capellini the order of Cavaliere of the Crown of Italy.

The evangelical soldiers have had to endure bitter persecutions when their superior officers were bigoted Papists, and when they have been ill in hospital under the care of priests and nuns; but they have shown a courage and faithfulness like that of the primitive Church under similar trials.

These converted soldiers become the natural missionaries. After their term of military service, they go back to their little country villages marked men. They have been in Rome. They have seen something of the world. They have learned to stand erect and wear good clothing. They have been taught to read and write. They are cut loose from the low superstitions of the little place. Best of all, they have Christ in their souls.

This work commends itself especially to the English people. Cavaliere Capellini was converted by the means of a Testament sent here by English benevolence. His first evangelical instruction was given by a colporteur, supported by an English lady. His work is carried on by English money. He needs greatly a building in which to hold his services and the means with which to extend their influence through all the camps in Italy. Will not English ladies and gentlemen of means, the Lord's stewards, come to his help, and extend throughout Italy this tremendous enginery of evangelism?

MISSIONARY JOYS AND SORROWS.

We have had the privilege of perusing a deeply interesting letter, dated March 18, sent to a friend in this country by the wife of a missionary stationed in a very unhealthy district of South India. We are sure that the tidings it contains will awaken a chord of sympathy in the hearts of all our readers. After describing a series of united meetings held at the station, partly for missionary business arrangements and partly for reaching the natives, the writer says:—

"On looking back we cannot help feeling that God was indeed with us, and that He heard our prayers. Never, in all the time we have been here, have the educated Hindus turned out night after night as they did. And this not to be amused, for even the very lectures were on subjects the most sacred to Hindus. They came in larger numbers even on the Sunday nights to the service.

"The Reddy who was baptised during the Conference has given himself up almost entirely to preparing others for baptism since then. He is a rich man, and has no need of actual work. He had prepared fourteen men and women to the very best of his ability. Two others he had rejected, because of a flaw in their characters. We baptised eleven of them. He assures us with deep earnestness that their wives and children will soon join. It was wonderful to the people about here, and especially to the Mala Christians, to see so large a group of caste men sitting down with them in this way, waiting for baptism.

"Last week, Mr. —— sent out Mr. —— again to ——, when five more Sudras and seven Sudra children were baptised. Only think, there have been sixty-seven adult baptisms and thirty children baptised this year that is not yet three months old. While God is with us, pouring out his Holy Spirit on our people like this, need we fear any such partial statements as have recently been made? No!

"The tears come to my eyes, even as I am writing, at God's great goodness to this Mission. 'I suppose you mean to stay here until you die,' said a man to me at our Bible-reading last Monday. 'Yes, until I die,' was my answer, 'unless God show me very plainly indeed that I must go away.'

"'But this is such a bad, unhealthy place to live in,' he said. 'Yes, I know it is, and God knows that too, and so He gives us our hearts' desire, that for which we came to India, precious souls for his kingdom.'

"This is just how it appears to me. God knows how body and soul are crushed by this terrible climate, and it is a joy to the missionary's heart, that He who knoweth our frame gladdens and uplifts our spirits by giving us this most precious encouragement. While one man is writing one hard thing about its climate, and another says, 'Nothing shall ever induce me to come to ——,' we go on in our fever-laden atmosphere. And God is with us. Only think of it; I had twelve girls, five boys, and myself, all down with fever at one time last week. One girl was delirious for hours, and we thought must have died from exhaustion. Our surgeon's son died last week from cholera, and five others. My girls' school, which had ninety-seven present last month, could only muster fifty yesterday for the inspector; all the others being too ill to come. I have five girls in hospital with chicken pox. And yet, although I have had so much fever this two months, God has given me, if not the strength, at least the energy to go down and pay all my regular visits to my school; to carry on the services in our house, and to superintend all the work this two months while my husband has been out in camp. He is now more than one hundred miles away."

DR. BARNARDO and the CHILDREN.

The following appears in the May number of Night and Day:—"Our readers will remember that some months ago we referred in these columns to vigorous attempts then being made to compel the Editor of this journal to give back to the custody of immoral or criminal parents, the unfortunate children (in many cases little girls) who had been rescued with difficulty from their clutches. These cases were rendered more complicated owing to the fact that in some instances the children were the offspring of mixed marriages, and in order to remove them from our care, the Roman Catholic hierarchy energetically supported the so-called 'claims' of the wretched parents.

"In all these cases we have firmly resisted such unhallowed attempts, and hitherto with success. Just as we go to press, however, we observe that a further application has been made to the Queen's Bench to obtain an attachment against the Editor, on the ground that in one of these cases an insufficient return was made by him to a writ of habeas corpus issued in February last. The application was ex parte, and a rule nisi was granted, which will come on for hearing in the Queen's Bench in a week, just as this magazine is being published. But as the child in question is not now in the United Kingdom, and as, moreover, she was not in our custody for some time prior to the commencement of the proceedings, we do not think that it is likely, when all the facts are before the judges, that the order will be made absolute, or in other words, that the Editor will be committed to prison for non-compliance with the terms of a writ which it was clearly out of his power to obey!

"It would not be respectful for us at this juncture to comment on the strictly legal bearings of the case, but as regards the moral issues involved there can, we imagine, be no two opinions concerning the rightness of our action. We therefore calmly await the result, whatever it may be, comforted assured that in any event we shall have the consciousness of having faithfully performed a difficult duty on behalf of the poor children committed to our care. And we believe we shall also have the prayerful sympathy and support of all who, in every place, love our Lord Jesus in sincerity."

PREO. NATH. CHAKRABURTTY, Calcutta, formerly an officer in the Salvation Army, having altered his views of the Army doctrines and regulations, resigned his position as an officer last year. Having returned to this country he has married Miss Prewett, of Luton, an earnest Christian worker, and desires to engage in evangelistic work in this country. He may be communicated with at 54, Park-street, Luton.

EDINBURGH UNIVERSITY M.S.C.A.

Last Saturday evening the Edinburgh University Medical Students' Christian Association held its summer gathering in the saloon of the Royal Hotel. About 200 young men were present. We have seen larger gatherings at these meetings, but seldom have we been so encouraged by the sight of so many new faces, and we are sure that we have never observed a healthier spirit, nor enjoyed more pleasant intercourse than we did on Saturday evening.

The meeting opened with a tea, during which each older member was busy hunting up the freshmen who were present in response to an invitation. The chair was subsequently taken by Professor Crum Brown, who opened the meeting with an inspiriting address, whose only drawback was that it was unreportable; for the Professor's style of oratory is peculiarly his own, perfectly original, and utterly indescribable. His remarks anent the scepticism of learned men were specially applicable to an audience of students, for, said he, "It is nothing but conceit for us who know but a very little more about the works of God in nature, to be any more sceptical than those who are more ignorant of them or more stupid." His address, as Professor Stewart, who followed him, said, was the only thing wanted to to start off a meeting happily. Dr. Pentecost, referring to the medical profession, placed it next to the highest in point of rank, and commended the Lord Jesus to all medical men as the patron saint of the profession, for was He not the Great Healer? He compared the warm Christian feeling which exists among the leading men of the profession in this country, with the scepticism and irreligion of their professional brethren in the United States; this latter fact he deplored, though he has hopes of a revival among them.

The delegates from Aberdeen and Glasgow spoke words of cheer and brotherly sympathy. It was to everyone a source of regret that the Oxford delegate was prevented from paying us a visit. Altogether it was a delightful meeting.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

Petitions in favour of Sunday closing have been generally adopted by the Wesleyan District Meetings.

Mr. John Abbey, of the C.E.T.S., has issued his usual appeal to farmers to get their harvesting done without the injurious practice of giving intoxicants to the workers.

The Birmingham Post says that "In anticipation of the committee stage of Mr. Stevenson's Sunday Closing Bill, which is fixed for June 26, both parties to the liquor controversy are girding up their loins for what may prove a severe struggle."

Fifty lurries passed in a string through Belfast streets one day recently, from the stores of Dunville to Donegal quay, with casks containing 30,000 gallons of whisky, the largest shipment that ever left the capital of Ulster. The drink was going to Lancashire.

The Church of England Temperance Society has received £100 from an anonymous donor, to provide a missionary for Clerkenwell Police Court. A similar sum has also been promised by Rev. Dr. Oliver, of St. Mary's, Ealing, for a missionary for Thames Police Court.

A series of marquee missions has been decided upon by the Hoxton Hall committee, to be held during July, August, and September. A marquee to hold 400 to 500 persons has been secured, fitted with all the necessary requirements. A large and varied staff of speakers is available.

At the annual temperance breakfast in connection with the United Presbyterian Synod, Edinburgh. Rev. J. B. Carr mentioned that 315 ministers in charge within the United Presbyterian Church are total abstainers; fifteen ministers without churches are so, and nineteen of those abroad are pledged not to take strong drink.

Mr. George Blaiklock writes to The Gospel Temperance Monthly, en route for Australia:—I regret to say we have a lot of drinking and drunkenness on board, and some quarrelling and fighting. The bars seem to be placed in conspicuous positions, and liquor is sold with no regard for the consequences. Even drinking people have expressed to me their disgust at the intemperance on board.

At a meeting of the Glamorgan County Council, held at Neath on the 7th inst., the following resolution was carried by 53 to 3:—"That in the opinion of this Council the Sunday Closing Act has been a decided success in the county, and that a petition be presented to the Royal Commission that the Act, with such amendments as will render its success still more complete, may be continued."

KESWICK CONVENTION.

LETTER OF INVITATION.

Beloved Friends and Servants of Jesus Christ,—In the name of our Divine Master, and in humble dependence upon Him for direction and blessing, we again invite all who love our Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity, to meet, God willing, in a Covention in Keswick, from Monday, July 22, to Saturday, July 27, 1889; that, whilst humbly acknowledging past failure, we may together seek to "be filled with the Spirit" (Eph. v. 18—21), and realise closer union with Christ Jesus, so that, guided and upheld by Him, we may in daily life glorify our God and Father.

We cannot review the past fourteen years' meetings at Keswick without humble and devout gratitude to our God for having revealed Himself to so many in a way they never before experienced, and for the practical results which have followed, in the earnest desire to be in all things conformed to his will, and joyfully to serve Him.

As we are only learners in the school of Christ, let us again seek his teaching by his Spirit through the Word, that we "may grow up into Him in all things who is the head, even Christ" (Eph. iv. 15), and "beholding as in a glass the glory of the Lord," may we be "changed into the same image from glory to glory, even as by the Spirit of the Lord" (2 Cor. iii. 18).

Above all, may we seek to grow in love to Him who is "the chiefest among ten thousand," and "altogether lovely" (Song Sol. v. 10—16); each one of us knowing this as the test of qualification for service, "Lovest thou Me" (John xxi. 15—17), and so be enabled with more tender and gentle care, under the direction of the great Shepherd, to feed his lambs and sheep.

In the expectation of the near approach of our Divine Master and Lord, may we be watchful, that in the midst of much active service for Him who says, "I know thy works," He may not have to say to us, "Nevertheless I have somewhat against thee, because thou hast left thy first Love" (Rev. ii. 2—4.)

This "First Love" includes in its all-embracing limits "unfeigned love of the brethren" (1 Peter i. 22). The Apostle Paul, writing to the Thessalonians, says "As touching brotherly love ye need not that I write unto you: for ye yourselves are taught of God to love one another." Still, he adds in ver. 10, "We beseech you, brethren, that ye increase more and more" (1 Thes. iv. 9, 10). Let us remember that God is Love, and "He that dwelleth in love dwelleth in God, and God in him" (1 John iv. 16).

May we prayerfully ponder our Lord's message to his churches, remembering his words, "Behold I come quickly," "Hold that fast which thou hast, that no man take thy crown" (Rev. iii. 11).

We would unitedly pray that those whom He commissions with messages to us may be filled with his Holy Spirit, and speak only "as of the ability which God giveth: that God in all things may be glorified through Jesus Christ, to whom be praise and dominion for ever and ever. Amen" (1 Peter iv. 11).

The appeal made last year for the purchase of the Convention Lodge and the New Tent, at an estimated cost of about £1200, was liberally responded to, and £962 12s. 11d. given. The Lodge is conveyed to the trustees of the Battersby Memorial Fund for the use of the Convention. The amount expended on the land and house, with additions, was £993 10s. 7d., the estimate being a little exceeded. No provision is as yet made for the New Tent. The sum contributed last year for mission work in connection with the Convention amounts to £908 8s. 8d. This includes a gift of £200 from one lady and £300 from another, both of which were for purposes specially named. Several of the contributions were made annual.

Full information as to the way in which it is proposed to appropriate these funds, so as best to carry out the views of the donors, in accordance with the constitution and design of the Convention, will (D.V.) be given when we meet. Much prayer for guidance in this important matter has been offered; we ask all to unite in earnestly desiring that this fund may be made a rich and extending blessing.

The Lecture-hall has been again kindly granted by the Rev. J. N. Hoare. The Drill-hall also will be used for meetings. Service in the tent on the Sunday afternoons before and after the Convention, a prayer meeting on Saturday evening, July 20, and a choir practice on Monday afternoon, July 22.

Mr. John Postlethwaite, Eskin-place, Keswick will again kindly act as hon. secretary, to whom applications for lodgings or hotel accommodation may be sent, stating particulars of what is desired. Anyone taking rooms for longer than one week will find it easier to obtain accommodation early.—We are, yours faithfully in Christ Jesus,

Robert Wilson, Broughton Grange, Carlisle.

May 17.

The Book World.

Gleanings from many Sheaves. Bemrose & Sons. Over six hundred "Thoughts," many of them very beautiful. Originally collected by a lady for study by her pupils, they will, it is hoped, in this form, do something towards refining the minds and brightening the lives of many young people.

Words of Cheer for Timid Christians. By A. Moorman. Stock. Showing in brief "all that the Lord is to his people in this present world," this little book is likely to comfort many a troubled soul. Each of the brief chapters is based upon precious expressions from God's Word, and the goodly heritage of those who are Christ's is made abundantly clear.

My Jewels. This is the title of a beautiful little volume, containing selections of sacred poetry and Scripture texts for every day in the year, arranged by Miss Sarah Sharp. The desire has been to bring into prominence our Lord's priestly office. Having associated the months with the gems in Aaron's breast-plate representative of the twelve tribes of Israel, the compiler has grouped her selections in harmony with what she holds to be the signification of the several stones. The work shows a careful hand throughout, and not a little ingenuity, for the compiler has given effect to her belief that the English-speaking people are the "ten tribes." (R. Banks & Son.)

The Science and Art of Religion. By S. B. G. McKinney. Kegan Paul, Trench & Co. Never having met anyone able rationally to explain the science and art of religion, Dr. McKinney has himself come forward with a text-book of nearly 500 pages, with the special object of satisfying the inquiries of Chinese and Hindoo scientific students. While admiring the versatility displayed, we observe that the author does not always distinguish between his fancies and speculations and undoubted or probable truth. Some curious minds will doubtless revel in these vigorous pages, which are alternately matter-of-fact and mysterious, but in our judgment few will be able to read them with definite spiritual profit.

The Unchanging Christ, and other Sermons. By Alexander Maclaren, D.D. 5s. Alexander Shepheard. This volume presents a veritable feast of fat things. Each of the twenty-eight discourses deals in a decidedly attractive and instructive manner with great spiritual truths. From the first, "The Unchanging Christ" (Heb. xiii. 8), to the last, "The Burden-bearing God" (Ps. lxviii. 19, R.V.), the theme is grandly one. Among the intervening discourses deserving of special mention are "The Secret of Immortal Youth" (Isa. xl. 30, 31), "God's Certainties and Man's Certitudes" (2 Cor. i. 20), "The Vision of God and the Feast before Him" (Exod. xxiv. 11), and "The New Name" (Rev. ii. 17). This volume of discourses, which are all as eminently readable as they are lucid and pointed, will enhance the high reputation of their well-known author.

Church History. By Professor Kurtz. Vol. ii. Authorised translation, by Rev. J. Macpherson, from the latest revised edition. 7s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton. The second volume of this valuable work comprises the deeply interesting period from the tenth to the sixteenth centuries inclusive. Early missionary enterprises, and the Reformation with its many subsequent activities, are depicted with admirable succinctness; while the development of the papacy and the ecclesiastical controversies which characterised the middle ages, are described with lucidity and fulness. In the German Universities there is no more reputable text-book than this on the subject to which it is devoted; the English student, too, who will carefully digest this well-sectioned work will certainly be amply repaid for his pains. This latest statement of events of perennial interest—this careful estimate of men and movements which stand out prominently in Christian life and action from the days of the Lord until now, will be completed in a third volume, and the whole will constitute a very useful work of reference in theological libraries.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

At St. James's (Church of England, unattached), Harlesden, N.W., there is a very earnest, warm-hearted congregation. The incumbent, Rev. B. G. Richardson, invites as preachers any sound evangelical ministers who are visiting London at this season.

It is said that a new organisation, somewhat on the lines of the Salvation Army, is about to be started. It is to be called the Saviour's Missionary Army, and one of the essentials is that all its officials shall be members of the Church of England, although the organisation will carry on its work entirely independent of episcopal control.

On Monday week the Bishop of Marlborough held a conference with London cabmen at the Church Army Training Home. He expressed great interest in that class of men, and said he would gladly come and meet them when able. The Church Army have set aside one of their evangelists specially to watch over the interests of London cabmen.

The death is announced, in his 84th year, of Rev. Prebendary Vaughan, incumbent of Christ Church, Brighton, from 1838 to 1886. Few clergymen, perhaps, have done more than Mr. Vaughan to maintain simple evangelical truth in the Church of England. As a preacher to children he was a great favourite, and his monthly sermons to young people used to attract enormous congregations.

The Rock regrets to state that Rev. H. W. Webb-Peploe, who has suffered from an affection of the eyes, underwent a severe operation on Saturday week, and is in consequence laid aside for a few weeks, being kept in a darkened room. He is going on very satisfactorily. There is no man more thoroughly conversant with everything that goes on in his own busy parish, and in the poor districts he has annexed, yet he speaks and preaches all over the country, including our Universities.

METHODIST.

Methodism is extending in Leeds, and a scheme for the erection of new chapels and schools, involving an outlay of £15,000, has been entered upon.

As the result of a mission conducted at Barrow-on-Soar by Miss Burdon, twenty-three candidates for membership received the right hand of fellowship at the Wesleyan Chapel on Sunday week.

Rev. Edward Smith is at present engaged in preparing for the Press an account of his work in Clerkenwell. The book will be called "Three Years in Central London," and will be issued by the Wesleyan Book Room.

The Wesleyans, despairing, at last, of securing a site from Lord Salisbury for a chapel at Hatfield, have secured two houses from another source. These are being demolished, and the foundation stone of the long-desired chapel will be laid on May 29.

A delightful indication of practical Christianity has been intimated to the sisters working in connection with the Wesleyan West-end Mission. A lady has instructed the keeper of a dairy in Soho to provide them with milk for the sick and the poor whom they visit.

BAPTIST.

Rev. Dr. Clifford left for a holiday in Germany last week. He hopes to be back in London on the first Sunday in August.

A new chapel, erected by the London Baptist Association, has been opened at Fulham. The Baptists in the neighbourhood have held services and conducted evangelistic work for some years past.

Rev. G. W. White is holding a series of monthly evangelistic song services in the Baptist Tabernacle at Enfield. At each service a clear earnest Gospel address is delivered, in which sinners are pointed to Christ, the Saviour of men.

At the morning service at the Metropolitan Tabernacle on Sunday week, Rev. H. D. Brown, of Dublin, offered prayer. His supplication "that the Prince of Wales, ere he be called upon to wear the crown of England, might be led first to lay hold of the crown of everlasting righteousness" elicited a chorus of hearty "Amens."

Rev. C. H. Spurgeon, who has been enjoying a few days' rest at the seaside, officiated on Sunday at the Metropolitan Tabernacle. Mr. Spurgeon was suffering from considerable physical weakness, and, contrary to his usual custom, asked one of his deacons at the morning service to assist him by offering prayer.

The scholars in the Sunday-schools connected with Shoreditch Tabernacle (Rev. W. Cuff, pastor) number more than 1100. Many have had to be turned away for want of accommodation. In a few weeks the foundation stone will be laid of a new building, comprising a main schoolroom, surrounded by twenty-six class-rooms and an open gallery. The cost will be £4000, over £3000 of which has already been contributed.

At the anniversary of Parson's-hill Church, Woolwich, an encouraging report was presented: 155 had joined the church during the year, 107 by profession of faith. There is a vigorous temperance organisation, which has since its commencement taken 3000 pledges. A society for home mission work, which conducts three indoor services in the winter, and four open-air meetings in the summer. The pastor's Sunday afternoon lectures in the [illegible] Tavern are very popular, and have been made a blessing to many.

SALVATION ARMY.

General Booth has been invited to tell the history of the Salvation Army in connection with the course of lectures at South-place Chapel, Finsbury, on Sunday afternoons.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

The Home Mission Committee of Dublin Yearly Meeting was able to report good work done last year. There seems wide scope for service, especially in Ulster, and Friends are embracing the openings thus ready for them.

Philadelphia Yearly Meeting began on the 15th ult., and lasted five days. The committee for holding public meetings was re-appointed with somewhat extended powers; and the largest evening meeting of the week was that of the temperance association.

A Union Missionary Organisation is exercising the thoughts of American Friends. The relative position of men and women, how to utilise the separate committees, and co-operate with the greatest harmony and power for work at home and abroad, will require the best care of the coming yearly meetings.

Thomas Kimber, of New York, has completed a series of very able papers in Friends' Review, and they are to be published as "The Early Christian Church." Mary Pryor Hack, of Brighton, in her recent volume, "Hold the Fort," gives valuable aid to the temperance cause. Both volumes deserve wide circulation.

PRESBYTERIAN.

London South Presbytery hope to arrange a system of Presbyterial visitation to all the congregations.

When Rev. J. T. McGaw (who has just been appointed general secretary of the English Presbyterian Church) went to Sale, the church there had a membership of only twenty-five; now it numbers 252.

A ten days' mission is to be held at the close of the year in Sunderland, in which Rev. Dr. Black (Inverness), Rev. Hugh McIntosh, and Rev. Z. B. Woffendale (London), have promised to take part.

Mr. George M. Reith, assistant minister at M'Cheyne's Free Church, Dundee, has accepted the pastorate of the English Presbyterian Church at Singapore, which is under the care of the London Presbytery.

Rev. John McNeill says the welcome accorded him by the Regent-square congregation exceeds anything he had dared to expect. Mr. McNeill attracts very large congregations, and at night chairs are required in the aisles.

Dr. Thain Davidson had a very crowded congregation at his monthly sermon to young men on Sunday week. It was a curious coincidence that Dr. Davidson condemned the practice of betting; and his words had a special point given to them by the news on Monday of the raid made on the gambling clubs.

CONGREGATIONAL.

Rev. Dr. Goodrich, of Glasgow, preached at Westminster Chapel for the third time on Sunday, and will continue to occupy the pulpit morning and evening throughout the month.

Among recently started branches of work in connection with Providence Church, Uxbridge, are a Band of Hope, a monthly prayer-meeting in connection with the Christian Association, and a fortnightly Bible-class conducted by the pastor (Rev. J. Adams), which has already fifty members.

Connected with Queen's-street Chapel, Wolverhampton (of which Rev. C. A. Berry is pastor), there are four Sunday-schools, eight mission stations, thirty local preachers, and nearly ninety Sunday-school teachers. The parent church and its branches are the centres of many forms of religious and benevolent activity.

The friends connected with the church at Victoria-road, Southsea, are endeavouring to raise funds for the erection of an iron building in which to carry on their services, the present building, a schoolroom, being too small. A gentleman interested in the work has offered to hand over to a donor of £20 a book written upon slips of bamboo, in the Burmese language, on the laws and religion of Burmah.

The local destination of the Weigh-house Chapel seems to be now fixed. The application of the trustees of the Court to sanction the acceptance of the offer from the Duke of Westminster of a piece of land in Duke-street, Grosvenor-square, at a peppercorn rent, has been granted. Plans have been prepared for the building of the new chapel, schools, and parsonage-house at a cost of £25,000.

Rev. A. A. Ramsey, who came from Dewsbury to Barry-road, East Dulwich, some five months ago, is making his influence widely felt in the neighbourhood, and it is to be hoped that the proposed new church at Barry-road will soon be erected. Last Sunday evening he preached a powerful discourse on "The Idolatry of Luck," in which he dealt very trenchantly with the gambling propensities of the time.

Rev. C. Buchanan Ryley, for eighteen years pastor of Hanover Chapel, Peckham, has accepted the pastorate of Christ Church, Addiscombe. During Mr. Ryley's work in Peckham the church more than doubled, the chapel was thoroughly renewed, the schools were twice enlarged, gymnasia at both schools were begun, working men's club, youths' and girls' institutes were started, and a large organisation of district and charitable work carried on.

NOTES FROM IRELAND.

The Women's Temperance Association, of which Mrs. Byers, of Belfast, is the secretary, is doing a most valuable and important work.

Rev. Joseph and Mrs. Caldwell, of Amerton, have been conducting in Limerick evangelistic meetings, which have been made a great blessing to many.

Gospel meetings, at which several professed to decide for Christ, have been held by Mr. James Dickson, Methodist evangelist, at Edgarstown, near Portadown.

Largely attended Gospel services have been held by Rev. R. Crawford Johnson, Methodist evangelist, in the Mission-hall, Sydenham, near Belfast. A powerful impression for good was made.

Mr. J. T. Morton, of Caterham, has offered to pay for three years the salary of another medical missionary and two native assistants, to be appointed by the Irish Presbyterian Foreign Mission Board.

NOTES FROM SCOTLAND.

Mr. Richard Murphy is conducting a mission at Brachead. This evangelist both sings and preaches the Gospel.

Four weeks of special mission services, conducted by Mr. Wm. Thomson, evangelist, and others, at Cumbernauld, have ended with very cheering results.

Evangelistic meetings are being held this week in the E.U. Church, Shotts. The meetings are conducted by Messrs. Pollock and Wallace, students, Glasgow University.

Rev. Dr. Scott has retired from his secretarial position in the United Presbyterian Church; and Rev. John Young, of Newington Church, Edinburgh, has been appointed in his place.

Miss Tyson, of Brooklyn, U.S. (lately of Dr. Pentecost's congregation), has been successfully holding meetings for the young at Hope Hall, Paisley. They are to be continued this week.

Mr. Gilbert Ross, a well-known and active Christian worker in Glasgow and district, met with a serious accident on Thursday last at Milliken-park Station, by being crushed between the buffers of two waggons.

The centenary of Sydney-place U.P. Church, Glasgow, of which Rev. J. M'Elwee is minister, was celebrated on Sunday week. Dr. Edmond, of London, preached in the morning, the pastor in the afternoon, and Principal Cairns at night. The soirée in the City Hall on Monday evening was addressed by Drs. Edmond, Monro Gibson, and Fergus Ferguson.

Rev. James Scott, Free Church missionary, of Natal, speaking in Edinburgh the other day, declared that the greatest African hero, surpassing Stanley and even Livingstone, is Mr. Alexander M. Mackay, of the Church Missionary Society, who thirteen years since went out to Uganda, in Central Africa, and though left long alone has never ceased to work. He has reduced the native language to writing, and printed the Gospel of Matthew with his own hands.

FALLEN ASLEEP.

At Whitehall, Irvinestown, Mr. Robert Montgomery, an earnest, faithful Methodist class-leader. At Ramelton, Rev. H. Smythe, for nearly fifty-seven years minister of Craigmore U.P. Church, aged 88 years. — Rev. Canon T. S. Evans, Professor in Durham University.—Rev. J. R. Grant, for forty-four years parish minister of Buittle, Kirkcudbrightshire. — At the age of 90, the widow of the Hon. and Rev. Baptist Noel.—Rev. J. F. Johnson, American Presbyterian missionary in China.—Rev. A. G. M'Gillivray, senior minister of Roseburn Free Church, Edinburgh. —Rev. R. Murdoch, Free Church minister of Johnston and Wamphray, N.B.

Appeals.

Shaftesbury Institute, Lisson-grove, W. — Miss Margaret Brown writes: Additional workers are required for our girls' evening classes. Will any ladies accustomed to the management of rough girls spare us two evenings in the week? Cast-off clothing will be gratefully accepted, and also Christmas cards for scrap books.

Gloucestershire Militia. — On June 3 the Gloucestershire Militia (numbering about 700 men) will assemble at Horfield for twenty-seven days' training. It is proposed to hold special meetings, in connection with the Soldiers' Christian Association, at the Temperance Hall, Bishopston, and to give the men an occasional tea. The expenses will be very heavy, and we ask the hearty fellowship of Christians.—Cecil G. Smith, secretary, 5, St. James's-square, Bristol.

Manor Park Gospel Mission.—A work which was begun here early in the year has grown to such proportions that a larger meeting-place has become needful. A building has been placed at disposal, but in order to make it suitable about £20 will have to be expended in seats, fittings, &c. The superintendent is Mr. G. Sage, of the Evangelisation Society, the hon. secretary of which, Captain W. E. Smith, writes that the work is "true and genuine." An earnest appeal for help is made by the secretary of the Mission, Mr. J. Gray, Hephzibah-house, Winifred-road, Manor-park E.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, MAY 26.—Numbers XIII.

The mission of the twelve spies, which is the subject of this chapter, was evidently demanded by the moral state of the people, as we learn from Deut. i. 19—22. Had there been a living faith in God, there would have been no talk about spies. What need is there to spy out the land which we know is ours by the gift of God? The thought of sending spies, which God assented to, was one of the first stages in Israel's unbelief.

The time (20) was about August, and they traversed the land to the extreme north. They seem to have gone up by the Valley of Jordan, and returned by the western borders of the land. Eshcol is a little S.E. of Hebron, and its sloping hills are still covered with the choicest vines; one cluster sometimes weighs 10 lbs. or 12 lbs. The muscular and tall frames of the warriors of Canaan must have been even more impressive, when contrasted with the almost puny and diminutive Egyptians.

The evil report (26).—They looked at circumstances, as Peter looked at the winds and waves, and directly we begin to count up the numbers of giants and walled cities, and other difficulties, we shall not only be depressed ourselves, but shall depress others. "We be not able" (31) is the language of unbelief and despondency; but if it is followed by "our God whom we serve is able," then it is the glad shout of faith and assured victory.

Faith as represented in Caleb does not ignore difficulties, it is quite aware of them; but it does not concentrate its gaze on them, but on the living God (xiv. 8). In every life there are Amalekites, sins of the flesh, and the Hittites, Jebusites, and Amorites of besetting sin. None must dare to suppose that we must always be overcome by them. But trusting in God we may confidently expect that they will be put under our feet.

MONDAY, MAY 27.—Numbers XIV.

Amid the murmurings of the people, of which this chapter is a melancholy monument, Joshua and Caleb stood firm as rocks, though at the risk of their lives (10). How important it is to bear an unwavering witness against the evil around us, at all costs. But we can only do so when we are living in the light of God ourselves and are following Him fully (24). Are we doing this? If so, we shall not fail of the Land of Promise. Difficulties are the bread by which the soul grows strong (9).

The Land of Promise in our own lives is the type of that life of rest and victory which is within reach of all God's children. It is a mistake to consider it only or principally as relating to heaven. Heb. iii. and iv. clearly show that it is a matter for to-day. Its New Testament equivalent is the sevefold heavenly places of Ephesians. We are to live by faith, as heavenly citizens, who are still exposed to the wiles of the devil, but who have learnt the secret of the overcoming life. Let us see to it that we do not miss it through want of faith, and have to turn back to the wilderness of restlessness and failure.

Moses' intercession was very noble (13, &c.). He had no unholy or selfish ambition. His one thought was God's glory and his people's good. We must not think that God was less merciful than his servant, but that these intercessions were the expression through human lips of the tender mercies which were in the heart of God.

The fruit of unbelief (28).—As unbelief shut them out of Canaan, so will it shut us out of the blessings of the New Covenant. It would seem as if God Himself stood paralysed before it (Matt. xiii. 58). The antidote of unbelief is the concentration of the heart on promise. "The breach of promise" is rather change of purpose. God never alters in his dealings with men, hence He must change, when they change from faith and obedience to their opposites. It is useless to attempt to carry things with high hand, when God is against us (44).

TUESDAY, MAY 28.—Numbers XV.

What a marvellous contrast between the closing verses of the previous chapter and the opening lines of this. In the one we read man's failure and the punishment of unbelief, in the next the faithfulness of God, whose purpose should be ultimately realised. Israel had forfeited all, yet they should still come into the land (2). The wine and oil could not be freely offered till they came into the land of vineyards and oliveyards, and, therefore, this was prospective. Joy and gladness are the accompaniments of life in the Land of Promise, which is inherited by faith.

The stranger was carefully remembered (14, &c.), an anticipation in those days of the time when the Gentiles should share in the privileges of Israelites (Eph. ii. 13, &c.). It is said that the Jewish housewife still fulfils this custom in her bread-making (20).

The distinction between sins of ignorance and of presumption (22, &c.).—For the former ample provision was made; sacrifices were prescribed, which forcibly typify the various aspects of our Saviour's death. How clear is it then that sins of ignorance are equally sins in God's sight, needing to be acknowledged and forgiven. For these, if for no other reason, we require daily to seek cleansing. Sins of presumption were treated rigorously; and a solemn instance is given of one who violated the Sabbath and was stoned after careful consideration (34, 35). What need for David's prayer (Ps. xix. 13).

The ribband of blue was a heavenly memorial attached to the borders of the garments, so that the Israelite might be kept in mind. We have something better in the ministry of the Holy Spirit, whose special office this is (John xiv. 26). Beware of turning God's appointments into occasions for self-display (Matt. xxiii. 5).

WEDNESDAY, MAY 29.—Numbers XVI.

Here the wilderness story is resumed, teaching us what man is and what God is—man's failure, God's grace. Jude calls it the gainsaying of Core (11). It was a very formidable conspiracy (2), and originated in a dissatisfaction at the transference of the priesthood to a family so closely identified with the great leader (3).

Moses' behaviour was very beautiful; he committed his cause to the Lord, and left on Him the responsibility of dealing with the malcontents. He soon received the test which was to decide the case (5, quoted 2 Tim. ii. 19). Would that we might be caused to draw near! (Ps. lxv. 4). It is always sweet to leave our questions and difficulties with God, saying, "The Lord will show," and "The Lord will choose." After all, it is not our matter, but God's, and it is for Him to say what position He would have any of us occupy in the body of Christ. There seems to have been some further cause for this conspiracy, because in the case of Dathan and Abiram, Moses sought for a special interview. Whilst Korah sought the priesthood (10), they seem to have chafed against the civil supremacy of Moses (12). Though the meekest of men, he could not restrain his indignation at these unjust and groundless charges.

The doom of these families was very terrible (27), and yet it is needful in such circumstances to act with promptitude and decision. If this spirit had spread, the whole camp would have become a mob. "Quick" is the old English word for "alive" (30).

What a remarkable type of Christ was Aaron, when he stood between the living and the dead, and the plague stayed. "I will consume them," is the language of justice; but God's mercy prevailed (Rom. v. 21).

THURSDAY, MAY 30.—Numbers XVII.

The controversy about the priesthood demanded a final and authoritative settlement. For the removal of all doubts and the silencing of all objections, a notable miracle was wrought in the budding of Aaron's rod. There was no room left for man, he was put out of the way, and only God appeared (10).

The rod of Aaron was probably that which had been used by Moses, working so many miracles. They were dry sticks, or wands of office, which had been transmitted from father to son. And surely besides serving their immediate purpose they were apt figures of Israel's condition, and indeed of the condition of everyone of us by nature, without sap, or life, or power.

The miracle was very remarkable (8), and a beautiful illustration of what grace can effect in each of us. And after all there is no test of true discipleship, or of a call to the ministry, which can be compared to fruitfulness. This is God's seal of acceptance and designation to his work. We need to be grafted into Christ, so only can we bear fruit (John xv. 4, and Hosea xiv. 8).

The complaint of Israel (12, 13) was indicative of a sad want of simple trust and love. It seemed to be entirely forgotten that they had brought all their sufferings on themselves. How many of our own sorrows are self-originated.

Between the end of this chapter and the beginning of xx. there is a long interval of thirty-seven years. Nothing is known of that interval but the bare record of encampments (xxxiii.). But Ps. xcv. would lead us to conclude that it was one long series of provocations.

FRIDAY, MAY 31.—Numbers XVIII.

It was not all honour conferred on Aaron and his house, there was also considerable responsibility. It was God's answer to the complaint of the people in xvii. 12. "That there be no wrath any more" (5). The brethren of the house of Levi were to be joined to Aaron, they worked with the high priest, and it will be well indeed for us when we learn to work with Christ for holy service: joined unto the Lord in one spirit (1 Cor. iii. 9).

The priests' portion (8—20).—We, too, are priests by reason of the anointing of the Holy Ghost (8, see also 1 John ii. 27), and we, too, must learn to feed our souls in the tabernacle (1 Cor. ix. 13). An enumeration is made of the various offerings on which they were to feed, by a perpetual covenant, as endurable as salt (19). How lovely is it when the Lord says to a soul, "I am thy part, and thine inheritance" (20; Josh. xiii. 14; Ps. xvi. 5; 1 Cor. iii. 21). But we must be clean to enjoy what God provides (11), and we must give God our best.

The Levites' portion (21, 22).—As the people assigned a tenth to the Levites, so they were to assign a tenth to the priests; and when this was done they might use the remainder for themselves. Even the very ministers of God are not exonerated from giving Him a certain proportion of all they have.

How well did God provide for them all! And he will provide also for us. There is nothing that He will withhold from us if we walk uprightly. Alas for us when we depend for our support on the world, which knows Him not. There would be no sin in thus feeding on hallowed things, because God, whose they were, had freely given them. The labourer is worthy of his hire (31, 32).

SATURDAY, JUNE 1.—Numbers XIX.

The red heifer was a beautiful type of Christ. No spot, no blemish, no yoke of sin ever came on Him (2). Led forth without the camp (3; Heb. xiii. 12). That outside place becomes not Him only, but us also. Let us go forth unto Him. The blood was sprinkled, when the heifer was slain, as a figure of the perfect presentation of Christ's blood to God, as the meeting-place between God and the conscience (Heb. ix. 13). Seven is the number of perfection. Christ's sacrifice is once for all, entirely and for ever satisfactory. The precious blood of Jesus for ever pleads and claims our peace with God. Our acceptance with God is not determined by our feelings, but by his blood. The body of the heifer was burnt to ashes (5, 6), which were carefully collected and brought into the camp, and used to purify those who were ceremonially defiled (18).

Death is the type of sin, and it is impossible for us to go through the world without being almost unconsciously defiled. Our hearts ought to be as closed vessels, but too often they are open. Hence we need daily cleansing, and to come to the precious blood of purification, or we must not stand in the presence of the holy God.

This daily cleansing from sin is beautifully taught in John xiii., where Jesus washed the feet only, which had been contaminated by the dust of the highway. We need daily to resort to Him, and, though we go to Him seventy times seven, we may unhesitatingly count on his complete forgiveness (Matt. xviii. 22). And such forgiveness will make sin increasingly abhorrent.

PITCAIRN ISLAND.—The barque Firth of Clyde visited Pitcairn Island on February 9. Mr. M'Coy, chief magistrate, and five men came off in their whale boat. Captain Smith had the greatest difficulty to get the islanders to accept anything, it being their Sabbath Day. They hold the seventh day of the week instead of the first, their reason for so doing being obedience to the Fourth Commandment. The only thing Mr. M'Coy would accept was some wine for Communion purposes and some medicine. Captain Smith supplied them with all the latest newspapers, both American and English, which were thankfully received. Religious books were carefully sought after. Mr. M'Coy held Divine service on board, and a number of Moody and Sankey's hymns were sung. There are 117 souls on the island, forty-five males and seventy-two females. About thirty-eight of this number are children; they are all in good health.

Sunday Afternoon, June 2.

JESUS BEFORE THE COUNCIL: MARK xiv. 55—65.

GOLDEN TEXT: JOHN xv. 25.

JESUS is now before the Council, or Sanhedrim, a court for the trial of ecclesiastical questions. It was composed of chief priests (the heads of the twenty-four orders of priests), scribes, and elders —seventy in all, and was presided over by the high priest. It had the power to pass sentence of death, but could not execute it (John xviii. 31). Jesus is arraigned before this tribunal, and stands facing the high priest. The trial is a mockery, as this lesson shows; and when we remember that it was during this trial, and the painful indignities which followed it, that Peter denied his Lord, we shall better appreciate the sufferings of the Saviour.

The false witnesses (55—59).—"The council sought for witness" (55).—This condemns their action at once. Their work was to try charges brought against Jesus, and to acquit Him if they were proved false. But they aimed only at securing his condemnation and death; and, in order to this, were engaged in seeking for witnesses against Him. Matthew says "false witness" (xxvi. 60). For by no other kind of witness could they condemn Him. All witness against Him is false. It is greatly to the glory of Christ that his condemnation could only be secured by such means; and greatly to the shame of men that they were willing to bear such witness against Him. "We heard Him say," &c. (58, 59).—This is the worst charge that his enemies could bring against Him after He had lived and worked and taught publicly for three years. For this they went back to the beginning of his ministry (John ii. 19), and perverted his words as spoken then. And from Matt. xxvii. 63 we may infer that they understood this utterance to refer to his own resurrection, and therefore wilfully misapplied it in order to get even the semblance of a charge against Him. And even in its perverted form, wherein is there ground for his condemnation? If He had announced the destruction of the Temple, He also promised to restore it, so that no charge of hostility to the Temple could be based upon such evidence. And even upon this charge the witnesses did not agree (59). And since the agreement of, at least, two witnesses was necessary to secure a conviction (Deut. xix. 15), the condemnation of Christ upon this contradictory evidence could not be legal. We have need to be thankful for the result of this supposed trial. It establishes the fact of the perfect innocence of Jesus, and condemns his accusers and judges.

The confession of the True Witness (60—62).—"The high priest stood up" (60), "a piece of theatrical affectation on the part of the high priest, who pretended to be filled with holy indignation."—Lange. "Answerest thou nothing?" (60). As though he would intimate that notwithstanding the contradiction of the witnesses there was some truth underlying the charges; and he would have Jesus become his own accuser. "What is it which these witness against thee?" To this challenge, and to the false witness, Jesus "held his peace, and answered nothing" (61). There was nothing to answer. No real charge had been made against Him, and so He fulfilled the prophecy concerning Himself (Isa. liii. 7). Perhaps the early Church was right in attributing his silence to the fact that He was our representative, and was willing, therefore, to be regarded as charged with our sins. "Art Thou the Christ?" (61).—Matthew represents this more solemnly, "I adjure thee," &c. (xxvi. 63). It is practically an abandonment of the charges brought by the false witnesses. It means simply that if Jesus confess Himself to be the Messiah He will be condemned. "Jesus said, I am," &c. (62).—Hardly ever had He so plainly and boldly declared who He was. Such a confession must condemn either Him or his judges. If his works have not sustained the confession, He is condemned; but if He has done the works predicted of the Messiah, then they are condemned in condemning Him. But our Lord adds to the confession the solemn prediction, "Ye shall see the Son of Man," &c. (62). It was a sublime utterance at such a moment. Never did He appear so weak, nor his cause so near to utter extinction. Yet He can declare this to his accusers and judge. It practically meant that the case should yet be reversed. He should be in the place of power, and do the work of judgment, and the high priest should see Him. And in this would be a further sign of his Messiahship (Dan. vii. 13, 14). This is the confession of the True Witness. He is already at the right hand of God (xvi. 19), and soon He will come in the clouds, and every eye shall see Him (Rev. i. 7).

The condemnation (63—65).—"The high priest rent his clothes" (63), in pretended horror at the blasphemy he had just heard. "The practice of rending the clothes on occasions of supposed blasphemy was based upon 2 Kings xviii. 37....At a later period, when these outbursts were more theatrical than real, their exercise was regulated by special rules. The rent was from the neck downward, and about a span in length. The body-dress and the outer garment were left untouched."—Lange. "What think ye?" (64).—After this mockery of a trial the Sanhedrim is asked to pass judgment. Already the high priest has decided that Jesus has uttered blasphemy, without inquiring whether the life and works of Jesus confirmed his claim to be Messiah, "and they all condemned Him," &c. If the charge of blasphemy had been sustained, death was the legal punishment (see Lev. xxiv. 16; Deut. xviii. 20). This sentence was confirmed at another meeting of the Sanhedrim in the morning (Matt. xxvii. 1); because Jewish law forbade the investigation of any capital crime during the night, and, according to Roman law, a sentence pronounced before dawn was not considered valid."—Lange. "Some began to spit on Him," &c. (65).—An expression of greatest contempt (Num. xii. 14), yet in thus insulting the Saviour they again fulfilled prophecy (Isa. l. 6). Then covering his face they smote Him, and said "Prophesy...Who is he that smote Thee?" (Matt. xxvi. 68). Patiently and meekly the Saviour endured all. Possessing the power to resist, He never exercised it.

The whole trial not only condemns his accusers, and evidences the perfect innocence of Christ, but it suggests—

(1) The treatment his people may receive (John xv. 20; Rom. viii. 17).—The world is still the same (John xvi. 33). Slanderous reports, false charges, mockery, and contempt—these were his portion and may be ours.

(2) The spirit in which such treatment should be met.—Jesus embodied his own teaching in his conduct (Matt. v. 39). See 1 Pet. ii. 19—24. Even in his sufferings, Jesus is not only our atonement but our example. To retaliate is to fail (Luke xxi. 18, 19).

TALBOT TABERNACLE, BAYSWATER.—Pastor Frank H. White, in a year-book just published, gives some account of the completion of the new church building. The undertaking involved much labour, but no real anxiety, for the needful money was sent in as needed from all parts. Since the new Tabernacle was opened, much blessing has been experienced. The number now on the church roll is four hundred. Towards the end of his pastoral address, Mr. White entreats his people to study the Scriptures more. He says, "Make the Bible your every-day text-book. Live out its precious precepts amid the various relationships of life in which the hand of God has placed you. 'Be filled with the Spirit'; then you will indeed be the very salt of the neighbourhood." Mr. White has the good wishes of Christians of various denominations in his important work.

QUALITY v. QUANTITY.—No greater mistake could be made by missionaries than that of yielding to the present popular demand for "results" in the shape of conversions and baptisms. Any missionary knows that he could baptize very many more than he does. He could bring in flaming reports every year; but it will be fatal to the Native Church of the future if there is any letting down of the high standard of the Gospel, in order to secure converts. Sacrifice of quality to quantity will wreck missionary effort. Better have twenty truly converted and fully consecrated souls in your native church than two thousand whose daily lives bring reproach on the Cross of Christ. On the other hand, no missionary should forget that the Word of God warrants the expectation that sinners will be convicted and converted if our preaching is "in demonstration of the Spirit."—Indian Witness.

CHRISTIAN YOUNG WOMEN.

CHRISTIAN YOUNG WOMEN of from 20 to 30 years of age, of ladylike appearance and of thoroughly approved character, willing to devote themselves to the development of an important scheme of Christian usefulness, can find remunerative employment in London almost immediately, with an assured income.

Applicants must be pledged abstainers, and should produce testimonials from the Clergymen or Pastors whose ministry they attend. They should be persons of good address, and possessed of thoroughly good health.

It is not necessary that candidates should be of advanced education: to read, write, and cypher with accuracy is all that is needed.

Communications are to be addressed in writing only, on one side of the paper, and not crossed. Such letters should contain some account of the candidate's former employments (if any), Christian experience and usefulness. In the very first letter copies only of testimonials should be enclosed: not originals. If possible, a photograph of the applicant should be submitted: this will be returned. An interview with suitable candidates will be subsequently arranged.

Address—VISITOR, care of E. J. C., 6, Portland-place North, Lower Clapton, E.

Notices.

Many correspondents write in reply to the query in our last issue respecting the lines,

If such the sweetness of the stream,
What must the Fountain be.

They occur in the hymn beginning:—

When languor and disease invade
This trembling house of clay.
'Tis sweet to look beyond the grave,
And long to fly away.

The author was Rev. Augustus Toplady.

A correspondent inquires as to the authorship of the following:—

When first you moved on earth, a little child,
Perchance you wept while all around you smiled;
So live that, coming to your last long sleep,
You then may smile while all around you weep.

[As it is found that infidels and others send tracts to the persons whose names are inserted here, it is most desirable that all books and papers received should be carefully read before being given away.]

PERSECUTION IN MARÉ.—Rev. J. Jones, late missionary in Maré, has lately received a communication from that place stating that the Protestants are still being persecuted. On January 14 a native pastor, named Waiwi, was invited to attend the wedding feast of a young woman, one of the church members. While there, and while they were in the midst of the feast, a number of native policemen, who are under the direction of the French authorities, came suddenly upon them and broke up the feast, handcuffed the pastor, took him away a distance of some miles, and put him in prison. He was afterwards tried, and sentenced to cease administering the ordinance of the Lord's Supper to the people. Tawaishi Naihel, the bride, who had invited her pastor to attend her marriage feast, was also taken and cast into prison. Her crime was that she had been zealous in holding Bible-classes with the young people. She was sentenced to one year's imprisonment! A man named Polama, a good man, was imprisoned for three weeks for writing a letter to the English missionary, simply giving an account of the work.

DONATIONS
TO MONDAY, MAY 20, 1889.

 Will donors oblige us by giving explicitly and fully the titles of the missions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Mistakes which sometimes arise will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that our Donation List is made up for the Printer on Monday morning? Any amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number.

 We would respectfully urge all our friends, when remitting to us, to make Cheques, Money Orders, or Postal Orders payable to Morgan & Scott, and to cross them "City Bank;" this will effectually prevent loss of same.

 Donations should be sent by Cheque or P.O. Orders, not by stamps.

PARIS EXHIBITION.—Mr. J. R. Mackenzie, Secretary of the Monthly Tract Society, has paid a visit to the Exhibition for the commencement of the Society's work of tract distribution from the Salle Evangelique, in the Place de Trocadero. During the first five days about 10,000 tracts were given away, and of that number only six were thrown away. "It was quite a pleasure," writes Mr. Mackenzie, "to see how grateful the people were for these messages of truth." Mr. Mackenzie urges British visitors to the Exhibition to embrace every opportunity of bearing testimony for God in pleasure-loving, God-forgetting Paris.

DROOPING CAGE BIRDS.

Who will help the pale and pining cage birds of the London slums to enjoy a fortnight's change of air and scene in the

RAGGED SCHOOL UNION HOLIDAY HOMES?

In addition to the Five Homes and a number of well supervised Cottages which were used last year, a sixth Home has just been secured and opened at

FOLKESTONE.

No less than two thousand three hundred children, some elder scholars, factory girls, and working lads, with a few of the humbler Ragged School teachers, were benefited last year, and a still larger number are now eagerly expecting the fortnight's needed rest and change. This, however, will largely depend upon the kind response to this appeal.

All should Help—and Help now—these Holiday Homes and Country Cottages.

HACKNEY ROAD MISSION.

(Instituted 1869.)

UNION CRESCENT, UNION ST., HACKNEY ROAD, LONDON, E.

JOHN GIRLING, Hon. Pastor and Superintendent.

TWENTY years have nearly elapsed, and this is the first appeal made by paid advertisement; but our present position makes it imperative that we urgently appeal to the Lord's people for funds to aid us in carrying on the work among the teeming poor in its locale. Truly God has honoured this effort as a means of blessing to hundreds. It has been the spiritual birthplace of several who are either ordained ministers or missionaries in China and elsewhere. Many are the testimonies which prove its inestimable blessing under God. Its band of workers all serve voluntarily, seeing to the Mission's requirements after daily toil, each working with a burning love for the souls of the poverty-stricken and wayward. There are the usual agencies at work here. In the Hall there are meetings specially for adults, as well as children, during the week, also on Sundays; a crowded Sunday School, with its indefatigable staff of teachers; Monday night meetings for children during seven months of the year, where many have to be refused admission from want of accommodation, and these of the poorest class. The Lord has signally blessed the frequent open-air meetings of this Mission, both on the Triangle, Columbia-road, and in the back streets and slums, where the simple Gospel is preached to them. A great means of attraction and good is the effective singing of the choir. There are lectures given on Bible subjects, illustrated by the lantern; Band of Hope meetings; grants of coals, bread, and clothing, with special allowances and festivals for young and old at Christmas time; also a trip to the sea-side in August. All these require means, which we are sadly in need of, owing to decease of some of our principal contributors.

As the Lord has prospered you, kindly aid us. In addition to the ordinary requirements of the Mission, there is a necessity to ventilate our Hall, the temperature of which is intolerable at any time; and our seating accommodation is inferior, and requires renovating and remodelling, besides other structural improvements.

The Committee earnestly appeal for relief from anxiety consequent upon being in debt and having to curtail the good work.

A Friend offers us ten per cent. on the total amount received by June 9.

If the readers of THE CHRISTIAN forward their donations by this date, it will materially benefit the Mission and strengthen our hands.

Donations can be sent to the Hon. Treasurer, JAMES HUNTER, 67, Hackney-road, E.; or the Hon. Secretary, CHAS. C. GIRLING, 33, Queen Margaret's-grove, Mildmay Park, London, N.; or to Messrs. MORGAN & SCOTT, Offices of THE CHRISTIAN.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give portrait and sketch of the late Dr. W. R. Summers, of Bishop Taylor's African Mission.

Mr. E. F. Baldwin, of Mogador, Morocco, desires us to state that any sums contributed for his mission work through our columns will be used for the support of such workers as are studying the language, or those who are resting between their missionary journeys. The present support of all the existing staff of workers is provided for.

Despite the numerous protests against vivisection, and the fact that the practice some time ago was limited by legislation, a recent Parliamentary return reveals the unpleasant fact that, during the year 1888, 1069 experiments upon living animals were performed "under licence." The division of these experiments into pathological, therapeutical, and physiological does not remove the painful element from the figures, and we regret that it has not been thought proper and necessary to tighten the limitations and to extend a further measure of protection to God's creatures.

M. Pasteur's much-talked-of treatment of hydrophobia involves an amount of cruelty to dumb animals which calls for vigorous protest on the part of Christian people. Those who fear God and would honour his handiwork do well summarily to conclude that it is morally impossible that a providential means of safety from the results of dog-bite can be found in means which involve acute and sustained torture to dogs, rabbits, guinea-pigs, and other harmless animals. M. Pasteur's experiments proceed distinctly on the lines of materialistic science, and surely men in whom the Spirit of the God of mercy dwells cannot reasonably expect blessing therefrom. A tract (3d. per dozen) to be had from Lamley's Library, 1 and 3, Exhibition-road, South Kensington, not only draws attention to these important facts, but gives figures showing with what remarkable success hydrophobia has been prevented by cauterisation and other methods of treatment.

A report to the French Zoological Society states that the swallows are rapidly disappearing from France, in consequence of the slaughter of these birds for the supply of feathers, wings, and even whole bodies for the decoration of ladies' bonnets and hats. It is asserted that, during the spring, hampers containing thousands of dead swallows are sent from the south of France to Paris for use by the milliners. It is a very difficult task to influence fashion in this matter, but a severe lesson will be taught when agriculturists begin to suffer, as undoubtedly they soon must do if this wholesale bird-murder is permitted to continue. Not the least remarkable point in the Creation is that of the nicety of the balance in certain directions; and where this balance is disturbed, retribution must necessarily follow, until the balance ordered and arranged by the Creator is restored.

Lord Aberdeen's letter to The Publishers' Circular, on the subject of "pernicious literature," will, we trust, do much to remove wrong impressions in regard to the liberty of the subject to deal in that which is dangerous to the public morals. His lordship also pleads for liberty, but it is liberty on the part of the community to exercise the power of legal suppression in the case of books which are essentially pernicious. There should be no difficulty in deciding what volumes fairly come within that limit. That some of our classics are not outside it, unfortunately we must admit, but it would be better to banish them than to make their objectionable use a ground for the admission to our libraries of others of even a worse tendency, and that too without the thin disguise of a foreign language.

It is stated in various Romish journals that Rev. Lord Archibald Douglas, a Roman Catholic priest, is about to embark in "outdoor preaching for the conversion of non-Catholics," and that he has provided a sort of "chapel on wheels" in which he has arranged to visit country districts in Scotland. One paper says that in addition to holding services and distributing tracts, Lord Archibald's idea is that of "generally stirring up the natives to spiritual enthusiasm." The same journal thinks that if the perambulating priest "succeeds in removing some of the prejudice with which the Catholic Church is regarded in the land of John Knox his expedition will have been worth the trouble and expense." If this modern friar will tell the plain truth about Romanism he will certainly increase rather than diminish the existing feeling against it. We shall be surprised if in Scotland he finds many people prepared to give up their Bibles, and transport themselves back to the dark ages.

The Christian Union publishes the address, as revised by the author, which was delivered in St. Paul's Church, New York, before the President and two ex-Presidents of the United States at the recent Centennial Anniversary. In it Dr. Potter, Bishop of that city, was bold enough, before representatives of the mercantile wealth of America, to warn against the sway of plutocracy, and of the politics of party, and of machinery instead of just ideas. The address has, on these accounts, been strongly objected to, but the example of the Bishop, as indicated in the following forceful words, might be fittingly followed by church dignitaries in other lands:—

> Another enormous difference between this day and that of which it is the anniversary is seen in the enormous difference in the nature and influence of the forces that determine our national and political destiny. Then ideas ruled the hour. To-day there are, indeed, ideas that rule, but they must be merchantable ideas. The growth of wealth; the prevalence of luxury; the massing of large material forces which by their very existence are a standing menace to the freedom and integrity of the individual; the infinite swagger of our American speech and manners, mistaking bigness for greatness, and sadly confounding gain and godliness—all this is a contrast to the austere simplicity, the unpurchasable integrity, of the first days and first men of our Republic.

Such terse words do not stand alone. They indicate that, while grateful for the past, Christian America is also realising the problems which are before her for the century to come.

If the difficulties of our evangelical brethren on the Continent are great, their zeal is great also. And the Lord is working with them in unlooked for ways. Rev. R. S. Ashton stated, at the annual meeting of the Evangelical Continental Society, that now there is scarcely a family in Milan without a Bible. It was stated at the same meeting that in Portugal the Bible is now circulating as it never has before, and in Italy it has this year had a circulation hitherto unknown. In Belgium there is a little village near Liège where the priests have offended the authorities. Protestants entered, and now 57 families out of 62 have declared that they accept the pure Gospel, and family worship is observed in their houses. Let our foreign brethren take heart, and also those who pray for and assist this Continental work.

From the election of Archdeacon Watkins to deliver the Bampton Lectures in 1890 much may be hoped. His exposition of the Gospel of John, when he was Professor of Logic and Moral Philosophy at King's College, London, which finds a place in Bishop Ellicott's "New Testament Commentary for English Readers," has been valued by those who know its worth as one of the most precious of exegetical treatises. Without a touch of pedantry, and yet with sound scholarship, the Professor has offered with rare wisdom, reverence, and insight a most impressive interpretation of our Lord's deathless words and discourses.

Rev. Edward White has revised, for The British Weekly of the 24th instant, a very timely and valuable sermon lately preached by him at a ministerial conference. He shows (from Gal. i. 8) that our Lord's most prolonged threatenings, and the most terrific thunder-bursts of judgment in the Scriptures, are directed against religious teachers who either know not the Gospel of God, or hold back the truth to make merchandise of souls. He pleads that the substance of the true message is not the result of man's work towards God, but of God's work towards man, and that that message is not truly preached unless it rings with a sound of gladness. He contends, further, that people fed only on isolated texts are ignorant of the vast design of Revelation, unfitted to withstand modern scepticism, and unable to understand the more awful aspects of inspiration towards impenitent sinners.

The Select Committee of the House of Lords on "Sweating" continues to unveil many blots in our industrial economy. At one of the meetings of the committee last week it was stated (vide Times report) that the Corporation of Sheffield paid so little for police uniforms that it was impossible to make them in a reasonable manner. Some of the middlemen among Liverpool tailors appear to be very rapacious: mention was made of one who is paid 8s. 6d. for work for which he only pays from 1s. 3d. to 3s. 6d. to the actual operatives. That is extortion worthy of a Shylock. It is difficult to say how far legislation can cure such oppression' but it may be hoped that the public exposures now being made will effect some good in that direction.

That the simplicity of missionary life has of late been called in question can hardly be regretted in view of the many and important testimonies which have been evoked by hostile criticism. Miss A. G. MacInnes, of Hampstead, who in 1888 visited India in company with the Winter Mission, writes to us:—

I stayed as guest in fifteen different missionary homes, besides visiting many others, representing different societies. The differences which seem of such importance in England, were merged in a very large measure before the stupendous fact of heathenism, into a common testimony to the facts of the Christian faith. Everywhere I was received with unfailing and genuine hospitality, while at the same time I remarked the simplicity of the life in the missionary home, and the careful expenditure of mission funds. I saw none of the luxury and aiming for social position of which we have heard so much lately. Some of those with whom I stayed were entirely honorary missionaries, others depended on the society for their board alone. All were united in a spirit of patient self-denying labour which I could only characterise in many instances as heroic. I found Christian ladies of education and cultivation living alone fifteen miles distant from any other Europeans, that they might better reach the village population of the Punjab.

Miss MacInnes expresses regret at the gulf which exists between the missionary and the "station people." She says she never met a dull or discontented missionary, but all were absorbed in their high interests. Hers is truly a cheering testimony.

Over one thousand magistrates of Ireland have signed an outspoken memorial to the Lord Lieutenant on the drink question. They declare that there is something radically wrong in the system which facilitates such wide-spread debasement and destruction. The memorial states:—

It is in vain our judges constantly state that if it were not for "drink" crime would almost cease. We, magistrates, meeting constantly in petty sessions, have cause to know and feel how correctly our judges view the matter, and that, were it not for the unlimited temptations, through the excessive number of public-houses, our work as magistrates would become a minimum, and our workhouses, hospitals, and jails would be more than half empty.

The magistrates suggest a change, whereby licences shall only affect one room in every public-house, and only a select number of licensed persons shall be allowed to sell alcoholic liquors after 8 p.m. Such a reform would certainly go a long way towards bringing about an improved state of things.

Our Queen has now passed the allotted span of human life, according to the reckoning of Israel's ancient leader. In celebration of Her Majesty's seventieth birthday a statue, erected in the premises of the Royal College of Physicians, was unveiled by the Heir-Apparent. In a courtly speech on the occasion, Sir Andrew Clark said:—

However jealously Her Majesty has preserved the prerogatives of the Crown, she has been steadfastly loyal to the liberties of the people, and has been one of the most constitutional sovereigns who ever sat upon the throne. Her Majesty, moreover, has given the example of a pure and high Court, and she has never been so deeply immured in State affairs as to be unmindful of the personal welfare of her people. Furthermore, Her Majesty has given to her sisters, in all walks of life and in all lands, the example of a true and noble woman.

Notwithstanding her long and illustrious reign, we pray that the day may yet be distant, when Her Majesty will have to vacate the high place that she has adorned and filled so well.

Mr. Demorest, of New York, the well-known advocate of prohibitory legislation in relation to the liquor traffic, is now on a visit to this country, hoping to arouse the public sentiment of our Christian communities on this vital and burning topic. He is ardent to a degree in his estimate of the benefits which would accrue to any nation that will exorcise the drink demon, and if a portion of his enthusiasm could be imparted to the leaders in Church and State, we should soon see a change for the better in the social condition of our country. With a view to encourage temperance effort among the young, Mr. Demorest has devised a system of presentation medals to Bands of Hope for the best recitations on total abstinence subjects. We cordially wish him all success in his crusade against the most Satanic agency of modern days.

The motion with respect to Dr. Barnardo and the custody of a child, to which reference was made in our last issue, came before the High Court last week. Mr. Justice Matthew and Mr. Justice Grantham decided that an inadequate return had been made to the recent order of the Court requiring the child to be delivered up, and they ordered Dr. Barnardo to enter into recognisances to answer certain interrogatories to be addressed to him respecting the whereabouts of the child. Replying to some criticisms in The Times, Dr. Barnardo's solicitors have written to that journal, stating that he has not yet had the opportunity of fully disclosing the facts of the case to the Court, and, therefore, that public judgment ought to be suspended. As we understand that Dr. Barnardo will carry the case to the Appeal Court, we refrain from further remark upon it.

THE ANNUAL GLOUCESTER CONFERENCE, convened by Rev. J. J. Luce, is to be held in the Raikes' Memorial Hall, Brunswick-road, on June 10 to 14. The subjects for consideration are—"The Grace of our Lord, Jesus Christ," "The Love of God," and "The Communion of the Holy Ghost." Accounts of Christian work will be given by various friends. The speakers include Revs. Dr Elder Cumming, Dr. S. C. Morgan, John Sloan, F. B. Meyer, J. Hudson Taylor, John Wilkinson, E. N. Thwaites, F. S. Webster, C. G. Moore, Mr. Reginald Radcliffe, and others.

EASTBOURNE.—A fishermen's mission was commenced at Eastbourne during last winter. The men have met every week at the Leaf Hall, and have much appreciated the interest taken in them. An iron "Bethel" is now being built, and will be opened shortly. There is sufficient space for a coffee and reading-room. This will be begun as, soon as it can be paid for. We also hope to have a Christian man there to take the management. The mission is undenominational and evangelistic. The treasurer is Mr. J. W. Nicholls, Darnétal, St. Leonards-road, Eastbourne.

SOLDIERS IN INDIA.—Staff Sergeant F. McKenzie, Bengal Ordnance Department, Ferozepore, India, writes:—"I would make an earnest appeal on behalf of our soldiers in India. Many would, I am sure, be blessed if friends at home would send us old books and periodicals. Not having the privileges which are enjoyed at home we should pass on such literature with real earnestness. An occasional paper posted in Christ's name would not lose its reward. Soldiers' letters and papers can be sent to India at the same rate as they are sent from place to place at home. I will carefully distribute any packets or papers that may be forwarded to me."

Government Morals in India.

THERE has been justifiable rejoicing over the suppression of the vile "C. D. Acts" at home and abroad. But what shall we render unto the Lord for all his mercies? Shall we put up the shutters, and say, "This bank has suspended payment"? Are you not aware it is one thing to enact laws, and another thing to carry them into effect? There are sixty thousand British soldiers in India still as much as ever subject to the principle of the C. D. Acts, for no fresh legislation even, as affects them, has been made.

True, there has been an alteration as regards outward decency. The "Queen's women" are no longer paraded alongside the barracks, and forcible examination is suspended, but otherwise the whole thing is transferred to the regimental bazaar, and is still as much under the control and supervision of the authorities as ever. When the Hon. Sir C. Aitchison moved in the legislative council for the suppression of the C. D. Acts, he was careful to observe that the Bill he introduced only referred to the municipal regulations, which are quite distinct from the cantonment regulations. In fact, as regards our magnificent military establishments with all the immense population, if not directly controlled, at least directly under the influence and prestige of the military, the present state of things continues, as if Sir C. Aitchison's Bill, had never been passed by the Government.

The military authorities have not even reverted to the condition of the army as it was forty years ago. At that time the "forbidding to marry" order had not been issued as regards the jurisdiction of the old East India Company. From that time, the course has been systematically retrograde, and there is now a steady revival of Hinduism in its most modern, and filthy development, with the connivance at least of the State, buttressed by their magnificent military institutions, a very school of the false prophets. There is but one remedy for the passions of men situated like our soldiers in that land of lust and diabolical heathenism. God says: "Marriage is honourable in all," &c. But our authorities proclaim the contrary. Marriage in the army is practically forbidden, some regiments not having two per cent. of married men!

The pitiable condition of Indian women, for whom so much sympathy has been expressed, is inextricably involved in the fate of the quarter of a million of Europeans in India, amongst whom the army exercise a commanding influence. Great as is the success which has been attained by the eminent leaders of the Purity Crusade, the campaign is only begun. While our missionaries are endeavouring to disperse heathenism, the natives are converting our countrymen to their customs of iniquity.

REQUESTS FOR PRAISE AND PRAYER.—PRAISE, for blessing on a mission at Tynecastle.——PRAYER, for blessing on special meetings in Daley Free Church Hall, Edinburgh, commencing June 2, conducted by Mr. M. E. Steedman.——For blessing on a series of evangelistic meetings, to be held in Carluke, N.B., by Mr. Wm. Hall, commencing June 2.——For blessing on tent services at Market Rasen, Lincolnshire, during June.——For Messrs. W. Upcraft and George Warner, now on their way to open a new mission in the province of Sz-chuen, China.——For blessing on a mission by Rev. W. A. Meaton, at Kentish Town Congregational Church, June 13 to 23.——For blessing on tent services, by Mr. John Elliott, in Minety, Wilts.——For blessings on the labours of two evangelists in the streets and alleys of Worcester.——The family and friends of Miss Marsh ask for the prayers of the readers of the THE CHRISTIAN, that, if it be God's good will, He would grant her restoration to sight and ease from pain, by his blessing on the means shortly to be used.

Memories of a Mother.

WHILE our times bear a most gratifying witness to advanced conceptions of obligation in relation to the heathen abroad, and of our duty in relation to the ignorant and degraded of our own land, there is a danger which may become serious, and even alarming, and that is, of not attending, as godly men and women once did, to the Christian training of our own households. An advancement in other respects will be neutralised if it be marked by a weakening of the influence and bonds of the family and the home. And apart from the pressure of Christian work, the customs of our modern life tell disastrously upon the godly upbringing of households. The hurry of transit, the multiplication of diversions, the waning of the separated and guarded security of the Christian home, the introduction of a freedom and laxity which break down former restraints and wholesome barriers, the arrangements of the club as they relate to the father, and of social arrangements as they fill up the time of the mother—all these may be imperceptibly, but most disastrously, changing the entire government of the home. Before they have wisdom to guide them in such converse, young boys and girls may be left very much to themselves in a glare of alluring pleasures and associations, from which they would in other days have been preserved and shielded. If we are wise, we shall not overlook malific devices which have always plotted to hinder Christian progress.

An example, therefore, of a true motherhood, which in our own times made the home a nursery for the growth of a seed of fidelity to the cause of Christ, and which practically apprehended the great and proved principle that the permanent pointings of the nature are given in the very earliest years, will be encouraging and stimulating. A little book* has lately been edited by a literary lady, which contains memorials of a mother in the middle rank of life (we presume in the manufacturing counties), who, after her own training under evangelical influences, brought up eleven children to a "noble manhood and womanhood, rich in the service of God and of mankind," and which contains the hallowed impressions these sons and daughters have chronicled of her character, methods, and influence.

Their first record is of her supreme and ever-prevailing aim. She heard a commission from the All-Father, as every child was given to her, "Take this child and nurse it for Me." For Him—that was her inspiration, and how to attain this aim was, we are told, the subject of her "sustained reflection." For this end she studied the varied characters of her children; pointed out to them, with singular discrimination, the disposition either to be overcome or fostered, and addressed them severally in words of warning or of encouragement. "Our mother analysed our characters," writes one of her daughters. "We all remember the sympathy which she had in our individual struggles, and the aptness of her words to our different necessities" is the record of a son.

And the definite aim she set before herself she sought to make that of her children. She guarded them against supposing that they would become Christians because they grew up in a Christian home, or that they would reach a Christian character by an easy-going passiveness, much less by being borne along by the current on which they found themselves. "She told us," is their testimony, "that life would not shape itself" without our prayer and endeavour. She kept this thought of the responsibility of life before them even from their childhood, and, on their birthdays, while a festival was made, would win them to "quiet self-examination and fresh resolve." "We all well understood," they tell us, "her purpose, that our lives should be consecrated to God."

There was nothing repelling or ascetic in all this. Goodness finds it as hard to grow in a home without cheerfulness, as a rose tree would on rocks. Nevertheless, they were taught to dread and avoid the snare that lay in the modern eagerness for enjoyment. "As I grew up a big boy," writes a son, "it never entered my head to find amusement away from home in the evenings. These were always made attractive to us by our father and mother." The family circle is described as full of fun and one of the merriest. "Home," says a daughter, "seemed to have an invisible wall around it that shut out ugly things. At table no ill-natured gossip was ever heard." Yet conversation that awakened a warm human interest in those living around them, and in matters that touched the welfare of men was encouraged and freely indulged in. "She interested us," say her children, "in lofty causes, trained us in the service of man," and early enlisted her sons "as knights of the temperance reformation." A daughter remarks that, when she craved the doubtful in amusement, her mother would sit down by her, stroke her forehead, saying, "What shall I do for my restless little girl?" and then, "with loving wisdom, would find some outlet for the craving."

Her one aim that her sons and daughters might grow up happy, decided, and useful Christians presided over all her plans, and gave a wonderful harmony and power to her life. For this end she read the Bible among them, and with such a reverent sweetness of manner, they say, as to make them feel that "God and Jesus were particular friends of mamma's." At other times they would kneel around her in prayer, when she taught them, even as little children, "the way to our heavenly Father's feet." But it was at these sacred seasons that they learnt her supreme thought respecting them. "Not honour, nor riches, nor distinction," were her pleas, "but, Father, make my children thine: all thine, not one missing. Other things as Thou willest, only glorify Thyself in every one." We cannot wonder at what we are told in these memorials—the extreme fear these children had of their mother's displeasure, their passionate affection for her, and their unbounded confidence in her wisdom.

But prayer with her children did not suffice. One of them gives this striking record: "She has sometimes told me of a pleading with God which must have come near to being agony: 'Lord, it is not with Thee to save a part, to choose this one and that; Thou wilt glorify Thyself in every one.' She used significantly to say that she had observed that God granted to each one of his servants that on "which they were earnestly and abidingly set." This was the secret of her victory. She habitually realised that the bringing up of her children for righteousness was the main demand which God had laid upon her, and that since this was so, she had his covenant promise as the rock of her faith and her strength.

According to her faith it came to pass. This oneness with God in the fulfilment of his Word, and this harmonious co-operation of all her methods in interpreting and carrying out his will in family life, were succeeded by the blissful and unspeakable recompense she lived for. Her eleven sons and daughters rise up and call her blessed, and, by their united testimony of the effect of an all-controlling aim in a mother's training of them, they have given a lesson of the utmost encouragement to the anxious Christian mothers of this generation. THE SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

LONDON Yearly Meeting was preceded on the 20th and 21st instant by the meeting on Ministry and Oversight. Between 400 and 500 Friends attended including those with certificates from Canada and the United States, and great earnestness and harmony prevailed. William and Susan Tobor Thompson, of New England, were liberated to visit Friends of France, Germany, Norway, Denmark, and Syria and Constantinople; and Samuel Morris and Thomas P. Cope, of Philadelphia, were liberated to similar service except in Syria and Constantinople.

The Yearly Meeting began on May 22, and has also been characterised by earnestness and power. The subjects of the opium traffic and vivisection have claimed its attention; also those of poverty and peace, progress and expansion in home mission and adult schools work have been reported, and several new missionaries for the foreign field are soon going out. The services of American Friends have been felt to be invaluable.

At the Bedford Institute breakfast on Saturday, enthusiasm was aroused by Jonathan B. Hodgkin's able paper on Quakerism, and the speeches of President Mills and other friends. John T. Dorland's addresses to young men too are telling for good. This year there is no burning question to excite the mind of the Church, but the steady determination to move on is felt and manifested especially by the younger members of the body. The morning prayer-meetings have been unusually stimulating and helpful, while the percentage of increase to the Church has given her much encouragement and hope.

It is interesting to note that among those who have presided at the meetings have been Justice Fry and Sir Joseph Whitwell Pease, while members or ex-members of Parliament have shown their lively interest in the proceedings. A testimony of the late John Bright was read amid the profound sympathy of the meeting.

LONDON JEWS.—Mr. A. Hornstein is engaged in efforts to make known the Gospel among his own people at Bishopsgate. Rev. Thomas Grear and his church officers have kindly placed at disposal the Mission-hall, 29, Duke-street, Brushfield-street, E.C. The work is well spoken of by those who know it, the referees including Revs. J. Gosset Tanner, J. Fletcher Porter, Mr. A. Wallis, and Dr. G. H. Vos. The hon. sec. and treasurer is Mr. G. P. Pulling, Suffolk-house, Lawrence Pountney-hill, E.C.

BROMLEY-BY-BOW.—Successful and largely attended week-night adult Bible-classes have been conducted during the winter at the Poplar and Bromley Tabernacle, by Rev. W. Knight Chaplin, who, on the 22nd inst., presided over a public meeting, at which some 200 very useful books were presented to a number of the members as mementoes of the winter series. The spirit of inquiry is abroad, and Mr. Chaplin's aim in these Bible-classes is to enable the working men who attend them to meet the mere surface knowledge of sceptics in the workshop and elsewhere with the "it is written" of God's Word. His efforts have been thoroughly appreciated, and the "breaking-up" gathering, both at the tea-tables and in the meeting that followed, told eloquently that the labour was far from being labour in vain. Several members delivered brief addresses, in which grateful reference was made to the benefit they had received

THE QUESTION OF THE HOUR:—FOREIGN MISSIONS.

Some Remarks on the Papers of "A Missionary."

IX.—A Final Appeal.

I DESIRE now, in this concluding article, to go back again to the Word of God, to the Lord's commission to his Apostles; not with a view to argument on this or that disputed question, but in order to set forth the solemn responsibilities lying upon us Christians.

Now, where shall we look for the Master's special directions to his people as to what they were to do after His bodily presence left them? Naturally we should look at what He said last; and, as a matter of fact, we find that during that solemn period of forty days between the Resurrection and the Ascension, He almost literally spoke of nothing else. At least, scarcely anything else is handed down in the records which the Holy Ghost inspired. I would ask my readers to take the five passages, Matt. xxviii., Mark xvi., Luke xxiv., John xx., xxi., and Acts i. 1—9, and read them together.

(1) In Matthew, there is nothing about doctrine, either true or false; nothing about personal conduct, either good or bad; one thing only, the charge to "go and teach (make disciples of) all nations," "baptizing them," and "teaching them to observe all things," with the promise, "And, lo, I am with you alway;" a promise, be it observed, which is annexed to the command, and which none have a right to appropriate if they are not fulfilling the command. When I say "nothing about doctrine," I do not forget that ver. 19, "In the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost," is a decisive proof of the doctrine of the Trinity; but its very decisiveness arises from its being quite incidental.

(2) In Mark, again, not a word about either doctrine or conduct. Nothing but the one commission, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature," with the appended promise to him that believes, and warning to him that believes not; and the reiterated stress laid upon baptism as the public confession of Christ and sign of separation unto Him. There is also the promise of miraculous power: "In my name shall they cast out devils," &c. This promise is not limited to the Apostles or missionaries—"These signs shall follow them that believe." I see no ground for limiting this to the first ages, nor do I think that, as a matter of history, it has been so limited. The cases have been rare, but their rarity is implied in the word "signs." If they were common, if every believer could work miracles at will, they would cease to be signs. As I said in a former article, God keeps the power strictly in His own hands. And when the cases do occur, they are, in accordance with Christ's own practice, not trumpeted forth over the world. What does the world know of Dorothea Trüdel? I am much mistaken if certain letters which I have published now and again from the Fuh-Kien Province of China do not afford evidence that God has once or twice honoured the simple literal faith of Chinese Christians in the healing of the sick. I do not say this positively; and I am sure that, if it were so, it was not intended to be loudly talked of. But I do not see why we should say that any particular promise was not meant for us. Certainly it will not be fulfilled to those who say so. This, however, is a digression. My point is that in Mark, as in Matthew, there is one charge given to the Church, and one only.

(3) In Luke it is rather different. We have the narrative of the walk to Emmaus, during which Jesus seems to have spoken to the two disciples only about Himself, as both the suffering and the glorified Messiah. And in the later verses, where He gives his instructions to the assembled Apostles, He speaks not of one thing only, but of three. But what three? The answer is truly wonderful: "Thus it is written, and thus it behoved Christ to suffer, and to rise from the dead the third day, and that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his name among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem." What have we here? Three things put on a level, as of equal importance in the scheme of redemption, viz., (1) the death of Christ, (2) his resurrection, (3) the preaching of repentance and remission of sins among all nations! (R.V. omits "thus it behoved," but otherwise its structure is still more emphatic.) Is it possible to put Foreign Missions higher than this? Yet it is the Lord Himself who does it!

(4) In John we have Christ's words to individuals, to Mary Magdalene, to Thomas, to Peter; and naturally we do not look to these for His general instructions to the Church. But we have also His first appearance to the assembled disciples in the upper room on that first Lord's Day; and what does He say to them? First, the salutation of "Peace"; then, instantly, as the one thing of transcendent importance, the great commission: "As my Father hath sent Me, even so send I you." Now, "the Father sent the Son to be the Saviour of the world" (1 John iv. 14); does not the Son send his servants to tell the world of its Saviour? And then, in the last and supplementary chapter of this Gospel, we have the work of those servants represented under two figures. First, we see them as fishers: "Cast the net on the right side of the ship, and ye shall find." Secondly, as shepherds (for the injunctions to Peter cannot be regarded as merely personal to himself): "Feed my lambs," "Tend my sheep," "Feed my sheep." As I have said in previous papers, here are the two great divisions of work for Christ, (1) the evangelistic; (2) the pastoral. All true missionary work, both at home and abroad, provides for both.

(5) Once more, look at Acts i. 1—9, which passage is really a supplement to the Gospel history. We are on Olivet. We hear the Apostles put an inquisitive question to the Lord about the restoration of the kingdom of Israel. Instantly, "It is not for you to know...but——" But what? "Ye shall be witnesses unto Me...unto the uttermost part of the earth." "And when He had spoken these words, as they beheld, He was taken up, and a cloud received Him out of their sight." The very last words of Jesus: "uttermost part of the earth"!

There are very few things indeed in the life and teaching of Christ of which we have a fourfold record. We have it of his sufferings and death; we have it of his resurrection; we have it of his public entry into Jerusalem; we have it of one miracle, and one only—the feeding of the five thousand. Scarcely of anything else. Yet of this thing we have not a fourfold record, but a fivefold record! The duty of the Church to evangelise the world thus occupies a position absolutely unique in the New Testament.

And yet it is the thing of all others that the Church has neglected! I have given some evidence in previous articles that this neglect has not been so absolutely universal as "A Missionary" represented it; and that there have been, after all, a good many people who have cared about missions and missionaries. Still, even with most of them, the unique claims of the Evangelisation of the World upon the sympathy and co-operation of Christians have not been realised as they should have been. And as to the Church of Christ as a whole, it has not realised them at all.

What is the Church set in the midst of the world for? Is it that Christians may bask in the sunshine of their spiritual advantages? Is it that they may sit under popular preachers, and go to prayer-meetings and conferences? Is it that they may spend hundreds on their gardens and greenhouses, or on pleasant summers in the Alps and winters on the Riviera (with due provision of Bible-readings, of course!), and think themselves exceptionally generous because they have risen above the level of the conventional annual guinea, and actually give two? Is it that they may applaud allusions to a Livingstone at public meetings, and talk of the heroism of a Gordon, and admire the skill and resourcefulness of a Stanley, while ignorant of the very names of the men and women who are patiently and quietly preaching Christ in Africa, and India, and China? If the Lord Jesus were suddenly to appear at the breakfast-table or the dinner-table of nine out of every ten Christian households, as He appeared suddenly at the supper-table at Jerusalem, and repeat His commission, "As My Father hath sent Me, even so send I you," which of us could meet Him without shame and confusion of face?

I am not surprised that "A Missionary's" heart has been stirred when the Lord's command has come home to him. And, at all events, he is doing his part in the great work. Let us honour him for that. While almost everybody else has been asleep, the leaders of our missionary societies have been awake; some, at least, of their supporters, especially among the poor and the obscure, have been awake; above all, the missionaries themselves have been awake! Certainly they have not been perfect, either in their personal life, or in their plans and methods. I myself could probably point out more weak points than "A Missionary" has done. But, after all, it is they who have done the work, so far. They, and they alone, have been the Church's representatives in fulfilling the responsibility properly belonging to the whole Church. They are the ten righteous men whose existence in the city has saved it from the just judgments of God. Who are we that we should criticise them and cavil at them?

And, observe, it is no question of results. J. T. Tucker labours twenty years in Tinnevelly, and in that time baptizes two thousand converts with his own hands. Robert Bruce labours twenty years in Persia, and can scarcely show any tangible results at all. But when the Lord comes, his greeting will be, not "Well done, good and successful servant," but, "Well done, good and faithful servant."

Surely the very first duty of those of us who are plainly not called to go out ourselves is to know, and watch, and read of, and sympathise with those who do. It is this living interest, fed by constant supplies of intelligence, that we want at home. Money is quite a secondary thing; but it will come fast enough when people's hearts are touched. Moreover, if we are beginning now to take a fresh interest in missions, let us not be satisfied with knowing and caring for the young missionaries who go out in our own time. They do deserve all the love and co-operation we can give them; but let us inquire, also, regarding those who preceded them, and honour the veterans too. The fame of the "Cambridge Seven" has been one of the most powerful influences of recent years in kindling missionary interest; and it is, indeed, a token of the Lord's approval, for which we should render unfeigned praise, that every one of that noble band has been kept in health and strength unto this day. Yet there were good men, ay, and Cambridge men too, in China, before the seven were even born!

May I mention one more case before I close? It is the case of an aged bishop. Apparently, only two Englishmen who have held that office in the mission field, in connection with the Church I belong to, are known to the Christian world at large—I mean Patteson and Hannington. Of the former I will not speak. James Hannington I knew well: he was a noble fellow, and though he was but still almost what I may call (in comparison with old veterans) a raw recruit when he died, the thrilling story of his brief career is being largely used of God to touch men's hearts. But now I speak of a different man. Edward Sargent went out to Tinnevelly as a young schoolmaster fifty-four years ago. In due course he was admitted to the ministry, and he laboured faithfully forty years, preaching and teaching Jesus Christ. For some years he conducted the institution in which native pastors and evangelists are trained; and a great many of those now at work were brought up under his influence and instruction. At length, in 1877, he was made a bishop, to exercise supervision over the whole district, and for several years he went round and round, from village to village (and there are over a thousand villages in that province in which there are Christians), travelling by bullock-cart over the sandy plains by night, and spending his days exhorting and instructing his people, especially the pastors and teachers. Four years ago, the Church there celebrated his jubilee. A native minister delivered an address on the occasion, in which he gave some striking figures. When Edward Sargent went out, there were Christians in 224 villages; now, in 1008. Then, 8000 adherents; now, 56,000. Then, 114 communicants; now, 11,000. Then, one native ordained minister; now, sixty-eight. Then, the native Christian contributions were nil; now, 33,000 rupees a year.

Pray let me not be misunderstood. I do not quote these figures to glorify Sargent or the Mission. God forbid! They are nothing to boast of. Had we at home done our duty, they ought to have been ten times larger. And I know well that the native church has many weak points, and needs our fervent prayers. My point is this, that the man who in his old age is superintending that growing work deserves to be known and honoured amongst us.

Now, last year, Bishop Sargent came to England. It was a spiritual treat to be in his company, even for five minutes. He was bubbling over with the love of Christ; and this despite such distressing bodily infirmities that he was only once able to appear in public. Had he been strong enough, there is, perhaps, no man upon earth whose fervent and loving addresses would have touched us all more deeply; but this the Lord did not permit. A few months ago, he went back to India to spend his last days among his flock in Tinnevelly, there to die, and there to be buried.

May the gracious Master only grant us all as much of the power of the Holy Ghost as is manifest in Edward Sargent! The Question of the Hour will soon be faced then!

Yes, there is one thing I did not say above, in my brief notes on the "fivefold record," but which I have kept to the last. In all these passages the Holy Ghost is mentioned, or His power implied. In Matthew, "Lo, I am with you," that is, by the Spirit; and there, too, the Three Persons of the Trinity are joined together in the baptismal formula. In Mark we see "the Lord working with them," that is, the Lord Jesus, by the Spirit. In Luke, after the commission, come the words, "And, behold, I send the promise of My Father upon you," and the direction, "Tarry ye in the city of Jerusalem until ye be endued with power from on high." In John, immediately after the commission, we are told that Jesus "breathed on them, and saith unto them, Receive ye the Holy Ghost"—a foretaste of Pentecost. In the Acts it is, "Ye shall receive power, after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you," and then, "Ye shall be witnesses...unto the uttermost part of the earth."

That is what we want!

O Spirit of the living God,
In all thy plenitude of grace,
Where'er the foot of man hath trod,
Descend on our apostate race!

EUGENE STOCK.

SOUTHPORT Y.M.C.A.—Our Sunday evening open-air services have commenced with wonderful success. On Sunday week probably 1000 people stood drinking in the message of God's love, and at the close many entered into conversation with the workers. We need good Gospel tracts to give away at these meetings. THOS. W. GLADSTONE.

ORPHAN SCHOOL FOR MUSICIANS' DAUGHTERS.—Led by circumstances to see how often professors of music were called away to leave their families almost destitute, from no fault of their own, Miss Helen Kenway took a few orphans and placed them at school, paying for them out of her own earnings as a musical professor. After a space she took a house, and gathered her protégées under her own training. This necessitated the giving up of her own means of livelihood, but this she did, with the hopes that her influence would be beneficial to the girls, making her own needs a completely secondary matter. From the house, 10, Darnley-road, Notting-hill, she has been able to pass five girls through the examinations of the Royal Academy, some passing with honours, and one has lately obtained a maintenance scholarship in the Royal College. Miss Kenway devotes herself almost entirely to the studies of her pupils, and these results testify to the efficiency of her teaching. Miss Kenway is most motherly, and delights when the work of the day is over to gather the little ones around her. She is always at home to receive visitors on Thursdays, and will be glad to explain the minutiæ of her system to any who care for information.

LIGHT ARISING IN IRELAND.

DEAR SIR,—May I give your readers some news of the work carried on by the Dublin Mission Schools and Homes? We have visitors who go from house to house specially seeking Roman Catholics—both city missionaries and Bible-women. There are Sunday-schools for adults with an attendance of about 600, daily schools for boys, girls, and infants, in four different parts of the city, and Homes for the wanderers. In all, nearly 1400 children are taught the Scriptures. There is a mothers' meeting three times a week, where for three hours each day about eighty poor women do needlework, while ladies speak to them of Jesus. The Bible stories seem wonderful to Roman Catholics, who have never possessed a copy of it. You can hear a whisper go round sometimes, such as "Did the Lord really say that?" or "I never heard the like."

The bitter opposition during last winter, intended to bring the work into disrepute, was overruled for good. One Roman Catholic sent a contribution, saying he felt ashamed. Many poor people came to the meetings, and children to the schools, who had gained information as to places and hours through these abusive notices.

The children are wonderful missionaries to their parents. One mother said: "My girl knows more in six months than I could learn in six years. She asks us questions about the Bible that we cannot answer, and so we go to the meetings now to learn for ourselves." One old woman having heard of God's love, John iii. 16 being quoted to her, said: "Oh, why did I never hear of this wonderful salvation before? I heard of Jesus only as a Judge, and that we needed his 'blessed mother' to intercede."

"Playing at school" is a favourite amusement with the children. A mission child will gather his or her companions and teach the texts and hymns. In this way the Bible makes its way into dark corners. One mother was so delighted with what her children learned, she sent them to the mission school to learn the way more perfectly. New children come constantly, brought by their companions, and then in turn they bring their parents. "I'll bring my father to the meeting to-night, Miss," said little Katie, a child of eight years old, to her teacher. "Will you speak to him? He is so afraid of being seen, he is a Roman Catholic." True to her word, little Katie came, leading a big man by the hand. She looked very happy. He liked what he heard, and began to attend regularly. Then the mother came and got a Bible. One day Katie said: "My mother says Rom. iii. 23 is not in the Bible she has got." "I will come and see your mother," said the teacher. She had a nice talk with her. After a time they gave up Rome, and, better still, came to Jesus.

I could multiply cases where people are coming to Christ by simple faith and casting off the yoke of Popery. Out of 155 boys in the Homes, I believe that more than half are truly converted to God and working for Him among their companions. Some of our lads have gone out to different parts of the world, and we get cheering accounts from time to time. Our girls, too, have given us great joy. We have sixty at a time in the Home; when trained we send them to service. A lady wrote some time ago, "Can you send me one of your girls? I will wait for one of yours; they are so satisfactory."

This is a glorious mission work—truly a bright lining to the cloud that hangs over poor Ireland. I would only say to friends, Come and see the work for yourselves. Come and know the need. Then I am sure God will lay it on the hearts of his people to do all they can that the Gospel may have free course and be glorified. (MRS.) ELLEN SMYLY.

XXXII.—GOD A CONSUMING FIRE.

HEBREWS xii. 29.

THIS is one of the shortest texts in the Bible. It takes rank with those other three brief sentences which declare the nature of God: God is Light, God is Love, God is Life. But to many it is one of the most awful sayings in the whole of Scripture. It rankles in the memory; recurs continually to the uneasy conscience; and rings its wild tocsin of alarm in the ear of the anxious inquirer. And yet there is an aspect in which it may be viewed, which will make it one of the most comforting, precious passages in the whole range of inspiration.

Fire is indeed a word significant of horror. To be awakened from sleep by that one awful cry will make the flesh tremble and the heart stand still. A baby's cradle wrapped in flame; a beloved form suddenly enveloped in a burning fiery furnace; a ship on fire amid the wild expanse of the homeless ocean, and slowly burning down to the level of the waves—in any of these figures you have a suggestion of almost unparalleled horror.

And yet, for all that, what comfort, and homelikeness, and genial blessedness, there are in the kindly glow of firelight. There is no sign of more abject poverty than the fireless grate. And, however warm the rooms may be in Russia or France, the traveller greedily longs for the blaze of the open fireplace of his native land. Besides, what should we do without this strong, good-natured giant, which toils for us so sturdily. It draws our carriages along the metal track. It drives the machinery of our factories. It disintegrates the precious ore from its rocky matrix. It induces a momentary softness in our toughest metals, so that we can shape them to our will. The arts of civilised life would be impossible but for this Titan worker.

It is obvious, therefore, that whilst Fire is the synonym for horror and dismay, yet it is also full of blessing and goodwill. It is the former only when its necessary laws are violated. It is the latter when those laws are rigorously and reverently observed. Yes, and are not destruction and ruin the strange and unnatural work of fire, whilst its chosen mission is to bless, and beautify, and enrich, consuming only the dross and thorns and rubbish, so that there may be a clearer revelation of the enduring realities over which it has no power.

When, therefore, our God is compared to fire, is it only because of the more terrible aspects of his nature, which are to be dreaded by transgressors? Is there not also, and perhaps more largely, a suggestion of those beneficent qualities which are needed for our purity and comfort? Surely there is a strong flavour of such characteristics in the assurance given to us by the prophet Isaiah, "The light of Israel shall be for a fire, and his Holy One for a flame: and it shall burn and devour his thorns and his briers in one day" (x. 17).

The fire in the Word of God is not all terrible.—When of old God came down on Sinai, its upper peaks were veiled with impenetrable folds of smoke, like the smoke of a furnace. And in the heart of the smoke there was the appearance of devouring fire. There is dread here! Bounds had been set to keep the people back, but a special message must be sent to warn them against breaking through to gaze, lest the fire should break forth upon them. But there was no harm so long as they kept without the barriers, and when Moses entered into the very heart of it, it did not singe a hair of his head, and injured him no more than when it played round the fragile acacia bush, which burned with fire without being consumed—not a leaf shrivelled, not a twig scorched. It is quite true that in the desert pilgrimage there was much of the punitive aspect in the Divine fire, as when there came out a fire from the Lord, and consumed the 250 men with censers who had joined in Korah's rebellion, and had spoken contemptuously of God's anointed servants; but, on the other hand, it did not hurt one other soul; and these were destroyed, awfully indeed, but almost too suddenly to feel the keen smart of pain. And surely that fire did a beneficent work in staying the further progress of evil, which would have honeycombed the whole nation and led to their destruction as a people.

In the days of Elijah the fire of God consumed two captains and their fifties, but the captains and their troops were full of wanton insolence. There was no hurt done to him who knelt at the mountain foot, beseeching the man of God with reverence and humility. And when, shortly afterwards, the great prophet was to go home, it was a chariot of fire in which he sat himself, as in some congenial and friendly element, to waft him to his home.

And on the day of Pentecost, when each head bent low beneath the sound as of a mighty rushing wind, a moment afterwards each was girt with fire. Apostles, disciples, and women alike experienced this sacred investiture, but it hurt them not. They were far from being perfect characters, and yet there was evidently nothing to fear in the descent of that fiery baptism. They were baptized with the Holy Ghost, but they were unconsumed.

Do not these instances shed light upon our text?

I. OUR GOD IS A CONSUMING FIRE; AND THERE IS TERROR IN THE SYMBOL.—But the terror is reserved for those who unceasingly and persistently violate his laws and despise his love. For those who wilfully follow courses of sin, after they have received the knowledge of the truth, there is doubtless a fearful looking for of judgment and fiery indignation. On those who will not obey the Gospel of the Lord Jesus, clearly presented to them, vengeance will be taken in flaming fire. No words can exaggerate the terror, the anguish, the dreadfulness of their fate. Sin is no light matter. In this world even it is fearfully avenged. Walk through certain wards in our hospitals, and tell me if anything could exceed the horror, the agony, of the penalty which is being inflicted on those who have flagrantly violated the laws of nature. And so far as we can see the physical penalties which follow upon wrongdoing are not unto life and restoration, but unto death and destruction. It is necessary that these sufferings should be veiled from the eye of man, but surely they must be taken into account, when we estimate God's treatment of sin. And if such pain, keen as fire, consumes those who violate physical law, surely we must admit that there is a still more awful doom for those who violate the laws of God's love and grace and pleading mercy.

God forbid that we should say one word to lessen men's dread of the penal consequences of sin. There is a great danger lest, amid our growing conceptions of the love of God, we should come to think that He is altogether such a one as we are inclined to be in our dealings with our children—soft, easy, and indulgent. God is love, and yet He permits the little child to be burnt if it plays heedlessly with flame. God is love, but He permits bodies to rot in loathsome disease, without hope of cure, if men persistently do despite to his law. God is love, but He allows the whole course of a life to be blasted by one yielding to transgression and sin. And thus, though God is love, it is possible for sins to be punished with sufferings, bitter as the gnawing worm, keen as the fire that is not quenched.

If once we realised these things (and we should realise them if we would quietly consider the clear statements of the Word of God on such matters), we should come to understand much better the desperate nature of sin, and to yearn with deeper compassion over those who obstinately resist the grace of God, either following the evil courses suggested by their own hearts, or led captive by the devil at his will.

O disobedient soul, who hast read these words thus far, stop and bethink thee of thy danger. Beware lest thou be as the chaff or thorns, which are burnt up with unquenchable fire, on the part of the Lord Himself. Be quick to turn to Him and live. Yet if thou suffer irretrievable ruin, remember thou wilt have only thyself to blame, because thou hast broken the elementary laws of thy nature, and hast set thyself in opposition to the God who loves thee, and would redeem thee, but whom thou hast refused and defied. If only thou wouldest bend thy stubborn neck, and submit to shelter thyself in the person and work of Jesus, God's perfect holiness would bring thee, not hurt, but blessing and help.

II. OUR GOD IS A CONSUMING FIRE; AND THERE IS COMFORT AND BLESSING IN THE THOUGHT.—When we yield to God's love, and open our hearts to Him, He enters into us, and becomes within us a consuming fire, not to ourselves, but to the evil within us. So that, in a very deep and blessed sense, we may be said to dwell with the devouring fire, and to walk amid the eternal burnings.

Fire is warmth.—We talk of ardent desire, warm emotion, enthusiasm's glow and fire; and when we speak of God being within us as fire, we mean that He will produce in us a strong and constant affection to Himself. Do you long for more love? You really need more of God. For God is love, and, when He dwells in the heart, love dwells there in power. And there is no difficulty in loving Him or loving men with the love which has entered in majestic procession in the entrance of God. Live in God, make room for God to live in you, and there will be no lack to the love which shall exemplify in daily action each precept of the holy psalm of love (1 Cor. xiii.).

Fire is light.—We are dark enough in our natural state, but when God comes into the tabernacle of our being, the shekinah begins to glow in the most holy place; and pours its waves of glory throughout the whole being, so that the face is suffused with a holy glow, and there is an evident elasticity and buoyancy of spirits which no world joy can produce or even imitate. The light that shone on the face of Moses was different from that which shone on the face of Jesus. That was flung on it from without; this welled up from within. But the latter rather than the former is the true type of the blessed effect produced on that nature which becomes the temple of the indwelling God.

Fire is purity.—"How long, think you, would it take a workman with hammer and chisel to get the ore from the rocks in which it lies so closely embedded? But if they are flung into the great cylinder, and the fires fanned to torrid heat, and the draught roars through the burning mass, at nightfall the glowing stream of pure and fluid metal, from which all dross and rubbish are parted, flows into the waiting mould." This is a parable of what God will do for us. Nay, more, He will burn up the wood, hay, and stubble, the grit and dross, the selfishness and evil of our nature, so that at last only the gold, and silver, and precious stones shall remain. The bonds that fetter us will be consumed, but not a hair of our heads shall fall to the ground.

"The Lord shall sit as a refiner of silver." He the refiner, and He the fire. Contact with God, being bathed in his Holy Spirit, the perpetual yielding of the nature to Him, will work a marvellous change upon us. At first the face of the melting metal may be dark and lurid—deep orange-red, over which a flickering flame shall pass; but, as the process is pursued, the colour will become lighter, the dark fumes will pass off, and the metal shall bear the appearance of the highly-polished mirror, reflecting the beholder's face. The process may be long, but the result is sure.

But is not fire painful and terrible, though applied by infinite love? It may be so; but He will not ply us with more than we can bear, and He will enable us to endure. And it will be more than a compensation, as we find one after another of the old evils losing its power. We shall never in this life be free from a sinful tendency, which seems part of our human nature. Nor shall we ever, on this side of heaven, be perfect; but we may expect to be growingly transformed into the image of the Son of God.

O God, who art as fire, be Thou a consuming fire to our inbred sins; burn deeply into our inmost hearts, until all that grieves Thee is compelled to yield to the holy intensity of thy grace, and our whole being, made free from sin, begins to serve Thee in holiness and righteousness, through Jesus Christ, who came to kindle thy Sacred Fire on the earth!

MALOGA ABORIGINAL MISSION.—God willing, Mrs. Matthews and I will leave Australia for England on May 3, in P. and O. steamer Victoria We bring with us two aborigines—Paddy Swift and Jenny his wife. They are both converts to the Christian faith, and are earnest followers of Jesus. We shall be late for the May meetings, but will be glad to do anything, as the Lord may direct, to further the cause of missions in these southern colonies. We all address meetings, and sing some of the hymns that have been taught in the mission, so our meetings should be to some extent attractive, especially to the young.

DANIEL MATTHEWS, Superintendent.

THE OLD IS BETTER.—A correspondent, in replying to a recent query respecting a hymn, writes:—"May I recommend to your correspondents and readers generally a closer perusal and study of the hymn-writers who flourished in the latter half of the last and beginning of the present century. So many modern 'rhymes' are sung nowadays, to the exclusion of the Christ-exalting and soul-stirring themes of such writers as Toplady, Watts, Cowper, Newton, Hart, Kent, Charles Wesley, Anne Steele, Doddridge, Swain, and others too numerous to mention. If we except the compositions of Horatius Bonar, Jas. Montgomery, Charlotte Elliott, Ray Palmer, A. L. Waring, F. R. Havergal, and a few lesser lights, we have nothing in modern hymnology that is not immeasurably inferior in every respect to the older hymns."

XI.—COME BY MISTAKE.

I WAS invited to a great house in a northern county, for the purpose of conducting some special services on a Sunday and the following week-days. When I arrived, on Saturday afternoon, I was kindly and hospitably received; but, for all that, I saw at once that the lady of the house was in perplexity for some reason or other. She said at last, "I do not know what to do; my brother-in-law, Lord ——, and his wife, have just arrived here on a week's visit, instead of next week. The fact is they have come by mistake; it is very awkward, for I am sure they will not sympathise with our services."

I said, "God can overrule such a mistake, and perhaps they are drawn here by Him; let us hope so."

"Oh dear no," answered the lady, "I am afraid that is not likely. Her ladyship is intensely worldly, and I fear she might even be rude to you, if you introduced religious conversation at dinner. She will not go to the services, I am sure, and how am I to get there? Oh, it is such a mistake their coming this week; it seems as if Satan must have sent them to hinder the work. If his lordship had come alone, I should not have minded."

I said, "But do not mind now; let us together trust the Lord; it will not be the first time that Satan has made a mistake."

Shortly before dinner her ladyship came into the drawing-room, dressed up from head to foot, no doubt to the satisfaction of her maid, and, one would imagine, to her own satisfaction also. She was very gracious and polite, and his lordship kind and open-hearted.

The dinner "went off very well," as is commonly said, and the evening also passed pleasantly in general and interesting conversation. The family worship in the hall with the household was all that we could wish, and so ended the day. When we were retiring, it was announced that the church service the next day would be at eleven o'clock.

"Eleven o'clock?" involuntarily repeated her ladyship; "but is there not an afternoon service too?"

The lady of the house answered in the affirmative, and so we separated for the night.

In the morning his lordship came down to breakfast, and said, "I do not think that my lady will be down in time for church this morning, as she seldom leaves her room before twelve o'clock."

However, to our surprise, down she came, dressed, and all ready for the walk to church, in good time. The sermon that morning was taken from the text, "Come, for all things are now ready" (Luke xiv. 17). I said, "The Lord spoke this parable to a man who said 'Blessed is he that shall eat bread in the kingdom of God.' This he evidently said in reference to going to heaven, hereafter. Like too many, this man was for deferring his goodness to a dying hour, or hoping somehow to get good after death. The Lord seems to teach in this parable that we are invited to a heaven now. 'Come, for all things are now ready.' You cannot have heaven hereafter, if you do not have it now. Those who make excuses do themselves no good; and, besides this, they make the Master angry. He says of all such, they shall not even taste of my supper."

The lady of the house and her husband were much disturbed all through the sermon, for they thought it was far too plain and pointed, and that their visitors would never stand such preaching!

Imagine our surprise, when her ladyship said, coming out of church, "There, Ned," speaking to her husband, "that is what I call a sermon; I understood every word of it, and could follow it with interest; it was what I call sensible!"

"You are quite right, my dear," said her husband, looking thoughtfully on the ground.

"I am glad you liked it too," said the lady, "for I shall go to church again this afternoon."

Overhearing this conversation, I could not help stepping back to reassure our trembling host and hostess, and bid them fear not, but go on trusting. They were pleased, too, with what they heard from their relatives as they walked home; so at luncheon we were all very cheerful.

Again, in the afternoon, the same party went to church. There was a great crowd of country people and others also present. That being the case, I spoke warmly, and very plainly, about the necessity of salvation, and the folly and peril of neglecting it. I said I had come, not only to tell them about this great salvation, but to bring them to it. "You are to come to Jesus, just as you are, sins and all, and you will find that Christ is ready and willing to pardon and to save you. Will you come this afternoon?" Several persons remained behind after the sermon, and yielded themselves to God. I had to remain with these anxious ones, and having another service in a further direction later on in the evening, I did not return to the house until after the other guests had gone to bed.

I was somewhat tired on my return, but was much cheered and encouraged to hear that her ladyship, who had been the chief object of our fears, had said that she had had a very profitable day. She professed to have been much pleased, and edified also.

I did not quite know what to make of this, or how to take it. When worldly people are pleased with the Gospel, instead of being angry, what is it? His lordship was more satisfactory, to my mind at least, for he was quiet and thoughtful; evidently, he was under conviction, and so was his brother, the head of the house.

In the morning her ladyship came down to breakfast, and was also present at family prayer in the hall. But, alas, when the letter-bag was opened, there was a summons in it, to call the great people to London at once.

Now there was a stir in the house, and it was decided, after somewhat lengthened conversation, that her ladyship should return alone, as her husband particularly wished to remain a few days longer.

Before her departure she shook hands very heartily with me, and said, "You have done me much good; I hope you will not fail to come and see us when you are in London."

The meetings went on day by day, with more or less blessing, until one evening, when his lordship and his brother remained for the after-meeting.

Country people require very plain and direct speaking to, particularly those who have had many invitations, and are still wavering. Therefore I urged them, with all the solemnity I could, to decide for Christ. I said, "Suppose there is a wall, and that damnation is one side of it, and salvation the other, and you are brought to the threshold line of the door which leads to salvation; what have you to do, but take that one step? To be so near salvation, and yet to lose it, would indeed be most dreadful. Who is willing to cross the line, and accept salvation to-night?"

"I will," said a voice; "I will," said another; "So will I," said his lordship. His brother followed with "I will"; and a few others besides.

I continued, "God cannot fix our choice until we make it; and when we have made it, how can we expect Him to do otherwise than welcome all who come." We then sang together—

'Tis done, the great transaction's done,
I am my Lord's, and He is mine;
He drew me, and I followed on,
Charmed to confess the voice Divine.

We returned home that night with hearts filled with rejoicing, and sat up till a late hour, talking happily together of the things of God.

I said to the lady, "What do you think now about your visitors who 'came by mistake'?"

"Well," said his lordship, "the mistake arose by my writing 21st instead of 14th. We intended and planned to come, as we did, on the 14th." He added, "It was a very happy mistake, however it came about."

It turned out really that the mistake was, after all, on the part of the lady who had invited us, she having written me to come the same date as her other visitors.

"Very well," said the lady. "I am quite willing to take the blame, and I rejoice in it too."

Some months afterwards I called to see his lordship in London, and found him in great sorrow. "Thank God," he said, "I know now where to go with my troubles, or what should I do in this hour of trial?"

A little later on I was sent for to see him again. This time his lordship was upon his death-bed. He said, "I cannot help thinking what would become of me at this time if I could not trust the Lord." He added, "I am so happy, and my dear wife also can trust the Lord in her present trouble."

For the Young.

LESSONS FROM LIGHTHOUSES.

"Oh, teacher, where have you been these three Sundays?" "At the seaside."

"What did you see? Tell us something, teacher." For these young people have got used to "teacher" gleaning something for them from everything she sees and hears, besides the regular class lesson.

"Well, the sea itself, to begin with, sometimes calm, sometimes stormy; and the shore, with its pools full of anemones and wonderful sea creatures, and an island opposite. We used to look every evening for the setting sun, and the lighthouses lighting up.

"I had read some time back the Admiralty order for the lighthouses.* 'You are to light your lamps at sunset, and keep them shining bright and clear till the sun rises.' I repeated it to my friends, and we all liked to watch and see if the order were observed. The sun went down to the sea between the lighthouses, very bright often, but veiled enough for us to watch him, a great golden-red ball, as it were, go gently down to the level of the waves that he coloured gloriously—down—down—quite gone now. There! the island light has flashed out, and the mainland lighthouse has lit up while we watched the other kindle, punctual and clear. There they will shine all night, and the ships coming home will know how to guide their course, and arrive safely in harbour."

"Are those words you said in the Bible, teacher? 'You are to light your lamps.'"

"No, Bessie; but I think they are the nearest thing to a text, of anything I ever read apart from the Bible. A lighthouse is a beautiful parable."

"I thought parables were all in the Bible," says Ellen.

"There are plenty outside the Bible, Ellen, for people who will see them."

"There is something like it in the Bible, teacher. 'Let your light so shine'; and the virgins had lamps."

"Yes, all Christians should be light-bearers; all are not lighthouses, though every Christian should have in him the power to do lighthouse duty, if called to it."

"But how is a lighthouse a parable?" asks Mary. Mary likes things explained exactly.

"Well, the first thing we think of is the light it gives. We are most of us more like gaslights in a street than lighthouses. We do our work together, each one helped by the rest. But the lighthouse stands alone. It is like the one Christian in a family or a house of business. It must give its evidence without help from another. Now, some of you are Christians, and you are helped by the Christians round you at home or school here. But if your new life in Christ is real and true, you should be able to stand alone for Christ. You may find yourself the one Christian in the house you are going to. May God's grace keep you."

"Oh, teacher! what shall I do?"

"Light your lamp at sunset—directly, that is; not at 2 o'clock in the morning. Quietly if you will—neither of the lighthouses fired a gun to tell everybody they were alight—but from the beginning be the Christian you are; and then there is the rest of the order, keep on 'bright and clear till the sun rises.'

"I read of a soldier who embarked with his regiment for India. He found himself alone in serving Christ, and he could not bear it. So he set to work, and worked so wisely, so earnestly, so lovingly, that he had a great reward. When the voyage was over, God had given him a hundred of his companions. He was not alone then.

"And the lighthouse must have its own stores, or the lamps will go out. All the knowledge you get is like the rubbing up of an empty lamp, till God's love fills your heart, and God's Holy Spirit touches it into life and radiance."

Jane is very grave. Indeed, she has a real trial before her. The others know it, and are full of sympathy, or the teacher could not have spoken to her so directly. "Take courage, dear child; remember how the fire was secretly kept alight in Bunyan's story. Think more of Christ's love than of your own effort to be good."

"I do feel so dark often, teacher." And Jane slips away under cover of some little errand to the book-shelves.

"Jane does not half know how good she is," says Bessie, warmly. "I should never have come here at all but for her," adds Mary.

And the teacher reminds them, "Moses wist not that his face shone." "Now find me lighthouse Christians in the Bible for next Sunday."

* "Teacher" quotes from memory.

DOES MY LIGHT SHINE?

"Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in Heaven."

Is mine a life of shining? This I ask
While busy at my common daily task;
Those words of Holy Writ pass through my mind,
And this the solemn question hangs behind:
Does my light shine? and do I really try
In all my actions God to glorify?
By such a simple, unimportant one
As I on God's wide earth can this be done?
It surely can; my Father would not say,
"Do it," except He first had made the way:
And, though my light be but a tiny spark,
'Twill leave one little spot of earth less dark.
Then, let me turn to thine example bright,
Jesus my Lord, of all the life and light;
And, in the shadow of thy radiant sun,
Still let my little lamp burn brightly on.
And in my life though no great deeds appear,
Or anything to mark its record here,
Thy searching eye within my heart shall see,
The light of holy love and sympathy;
And I will keep thy blessed golden rule,
One of the happy scholars in thy school,
Who with the glad ones can be very glad,
Yet fully share the sorrows of the sad.
For, though this chequered life of shine and shade
Seems oft of unimportant trifles made,
Small causes may produce a large effect,
A frown, an unkind word, a slight neglect
May often cause a noble heart to ache;
Then, keep me, Lord, from such a great mistake,
And help me to pursue the other course,
Thy "new commandment" let my life endorse.
A loving hand-clasp and a gentle word
Can heal a heart by sorrow deeply stirred,
A whispered message lift a spirit up,
And help to bravely drink a bitter cup.
Lord, let this lowly ministry be mine,
And in this way my little light shall shine.

CHILDREN IN HIGHGATE.

At the invitation of a committee of all denominations in the neighbourhood, Mr. Josiah Spiers held from May 10—24 a mission for children and young people, in the Presbyterian Church, Highgate-hill. The attendance every night averaged from 700 to 800, and the interest evidently deepened as the work progressed. The time of reaping (which Mr. Spiers led the workers to expect) was truly experienced; beginning with the very little ones, it afterwards extended to those who were much older.

A marked feature of the work was the number of distinct answers to the prayers of parents and teachers in the conversion of many in their own families and classes. Again and again the children came, saying, often with tears, "I want to love Jesus," and before long their beaming faces plainly showed that they had seen their Saviour.

"LEAGUE OF KINDNESS."—A "League of Kindness" has been started for the benefit of poor children in the South of London, and to get children to work for their brothers and sisters poorer than themselves. Further information may be had of the hon. sec., Miss F. F. Young, Petersfield Lodge, Cambridge.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—The following are the portions for the ensuing week:—Sun., June 2, Ps. cxvi. 1—19; Mon., June 3, 1 Cor. viii. 1—13; Tues., June 4, 1 Cor. ix. 1—14; Wed., June 5, 1 Cor. ix. 15—27; Thurs., June 6, 1 Cor. x. 1—17; Fri., June 7, 1 Cor. x. 18—33; Sat., June 8, 1 Cor. xi. 17—34.

MR. T. LEWES SAYER, of the Children's Special Service Mission, has had some very happy meetings for young people at the village of Haveringatte-Bower, in Essex. The village children were greatly interested in Mr. Sayer's object-lessons, especially in his large diagram of "The Two Hearts." The services were all well attended; children came from Romford and even more distant places to be present. The solemnity and impressiveness of the services were very marked, and a good and encouraging work was done.

CHILDREN'S SPECIAL SERVICE MISSION.

Mr. H. Hutchinson, St. Leonards-on-Sea, to June 2. Messrs. H. Hutchinson, Clifford H. Nash, and Alfred Armitage, Skating Rink, Croydon, June 15—24. Mr. Josiah Spiers, St. Cuthbert's Schools, Fordwych-road, West Hampstead, to June 7; South Creake, near Fakenham, Norfolk, June 14—24. Mr. W. R. Moore and Dr. Carless, West Croydon Congregational Church, to June 3. Mr. T. Lewes Sayer, Finsbury Park Hall, June 1 and 2; Doveridge, near Derby, June 9—11.

BRITISH HONDURAS.

Rev. J. Bryan, of the Jamaica Baptist Missionary Society, desires to express his thanks through our columns to the friend who has been sending him The Christian weekly to Belize. His residence is now changed to First Hill, Clark Town, Jamaica, to which address he would like the paper sent in future. Writing of his work, he says:—

My poor efforts in Honduras have been richly blessed and owned by the Master. Many souls are now rejoicing in the salvation found in Jesus. Many are the services we held in which the Holy Spirit applied the word of God mightily to the hearts of sinners. Very frequent have been the baptismal services in which converted sinners symbolically sealed their covenant with Christ; and never shall I forget the happy moments spent around the Lord's Table, as we met there so often to welcome the new believers to the Lord's Supper, and receive them into full fellowship with the church.

PADDINGTON HALL, N., is the centre of earnest effort superintended by Mr. John Davidge. The report for the year ended March 31 gives some account of preaching in Hyde-park, the instruction of children in Christian truth, work among fallen women, dust-sifters, and others who stand in need of kindly aid in life's path. The effort is unpretending, but no less needful on that account. It has some good friends, but could do with more. Mr. Davidge's address is 90, Church-street, Paddington-green, W.

Dr. Barnardo's Homes.

ANNUAL MEETING IN EXETER HALL.

THOROUGH in everything, Dr. Barnardo is remarkably successful as an organiser of demonstrations. The twenty-third annual meeting held in Exeter Hall on Wednesday evening, May 22, was, indeed, a grand exhibition of the character of the rapidly extending work of the Homes and the institutions which cluster around them. If, on the one hand, the fact was pressed home upon the large audience that the East-end Juvenile Mission is a true work for God, it could not but be clear, on the other hand, to Dr. Barnardo and his friends, that the scene presented was very effective in enlarging the hearts and arousing the sympathies of Christian people.

The meeting was one which fully sustained the popularity of the anniversary. Lasting nearly four hours, it was interesting throughout. If the singing of the children was joyous, the statement of the sad need of such work lent pathos to the proceedings. Not the speeches, but the performances of the juveniles in song, and campanology, and drill movements, gave character to the occasion. To anyone but Dr. Barnardo, it must be very difficult to speak to the point and profit on child rescue work, so the friends who were called upon to address the meeting wisely confined themselves to a few earnest and hearty remarks.

Considerably enlarged for the occasion, the spacious orchestra was gaily decorated with bannerets bearing the names of the many institutions for young and old, able-bodied and weak, which are associated with the Homes. Whether castles, schools, mission-halls, brigades, hospitals, homes, or shelters—no fewer than thirty-eight in number—these agencies are all conducted with the vigour which Dr. Barnardo infuses into everything to which he puts his hand. Supervised by trusty helpers, they are one and all conducted with a special view to protecting and saving the young who find their way to East London. The blessed results of their operation cannot be set out in words; therefore Dr. Barnardo cannot report comprehensively upon what has been done. Any report must be but a faint whisper of the truth which the Great Day will reveal.

THE CHILDREN.

There was a choir of eight hundred children, under the direction of Mr. J. Proudman. The girls, attired in light clothes, were ranged behind the speakers on the orchestra, and in the rear were the boys in trim sailor rig. So many happy faces presented a truly gladdening sight. In their appearance there was absolutely nothing of the waif and stray; each child bore evidence of being well cared for. The sight could not but prompt many prayers to the God of grace to bless the training of the Homes to the young ones, so that they may prove good and useful men and women. Quite a number of merry songs are rendered, generally accompanied by some innocent action. In "God protect England," a miniature "Union Jack" was waved by every child. The Band from the Stepney Boys' Home rendered a selection of music, conducted by Mr. James Davis; the little Hand-bell ringers, under Mr. J. C. McNab, played several airs; a company of youngsters went through drill evolutions, under the leadership of Mr. Sully; and the little Pipers, in Highland costume, discoursed sweet music on the bagpipes, under the direction of Mr. Wm. Milne. These performances were spread over the evening, and were highly appreciated; they admirably showed what may be done with destitute children taken from the streets.

PRIZES TO OLD BOYS AND GIRLS.

An important feature in the meeting was the customary distribution of prizes to old boys and girls. Having been trained at the Homes and sent out to situations, they had served with credit, for terms extending from one to nine years, and were now presented with valuable prizes. About forty girls and nearly fifty young men received silver and bronze medals, as well as other recognitions of honourable conduct. The girls looked a quiet company, and the boys smart and capable. All were presented to Lord Polwarth, who occupied the chair. About sixty boys, engaged in the City in daily service, were also marched to the platform to receive prizes. Lord Polwarth seemed greatly to enjoy his part in this ceremony. In some kindly words he expressed a hope that the recipients would not only improve in a worldly sense, but that, with the grace of God in their hearts, they would make progress in spiritual life.

DR. BARNARDO'S STATEMENT.

According to custom, Dr. BARNARDO made a statement as to the work of the institutions. Such a voluminous document as the report could not, of course, be presented, so, reserving the sermon for Night and Day, the Doctor just gave his hearers the text. He had spent the day in a Court of Justice, in connection with a case relating to his action about a child; but he only mentioned this fact to remark that his action had ever been prompted by a sense of the deepest interests of young children. During last year 1768 fresh cases of destitution among boys and girls were admitted to the Homes. That, he said, is a record not to be equalled by any institution, or set of institutions, of a similar kind. Miserable, orphan, homeless, and friendless, the children were admitted in order to receive training and come under influences which, by the blessing of God, will affect their entire future life. They were, however, only the most needy out of 7298 who applied for the help offered by the Homes. Only such as are destitute and desperate can be taken in, and such are never refused shelter and care.

Proceeding, the Doctor gladly observed that for what has been obtained there is reason for much gratitude to God. Society is waking up to the fact that the possession of any gift, whether in means or talent, carries with it grave responsibility, and it is becoming clearer than ever that, as Christians, we are not to lead lives of personal enjoyment, but lives instinct with duty, with true compassion for those who are miserable and out of the way, needing such help as we can render. Passing on, the Doctor said: Think of the condition in which thousands of people in London are living! There are 163,000 families dwelling in single rooms—aged and young of both sexes. The probability of children emerging from such places impressed with a sense of decency and virtue is extremely remote. Moreover, thousands live in common lodging-houses, and sleep out at night just where they can. It having seemed imperative that something should be done to deliver little girls from the perils and contaminations of such surroundings, he opened two lodging-houses recently, and was glad to say that the scheme had been successful, many little ones having been committed to their care by poor mothers who had found out that they could safely trust their children to the Homes. Speaking of the dangers to which children are exposed when brought up in evil surroundings, the Doctor related a conversation he had with a little boy who wished to enter one of the Homes. Having ascertained that the child had been a thief, the Doctor asked him how long he had lived by stealing? The answer was: "I never did anything else; I have always been at it." Altogether, nearly 13,000 children have been received into the Homes, and rescued from lives of misery, and worse.

AN EXHIBITION.

Some remarks on the extent of the work of the Homes were illustrated in a realistic manner, the platform being made to present quite a panorama of rescue scenes. First there came four nurses with babies in arms, and four other little ones clinging to their aprons. A party of lads from the Labour House followed, about forty in number. They were a lively lot, and a good specimen of the material out of which Canadian emigrants are made. The next scene was a company of about fifty big lads, representing a party soon to leave for the Dominion. They were dressed in the strong, serviceable clothes which they will require when at work on the Manitoba farm. Singling out two boys, Dr. Barnardo instanced them as typical of the unspoken histories of the rest. Both tramped up to London, and soon found themselves without homes and friendless. The parish Workhouse and the Labour House in Commercial-road were the only alternatives. Being received into the latter institution, they give fair promise of future usefulness. Some idea was also conveyed of the way the young children thrive under the healthful conditions of the Home, and, as illustrating the extremes of distress to which the institutions render aid, parties of little cripples came forward, the misfortune of using crutches being much discounted by their rosy cheeks and general happy appearance. The deaf, dumb, and blind are also received, permanent affliction accentuating the claim of the destitute, rather than constituting a bar to Christian succour. It could not but be felt that the things seen strongly emphasised all that was said about the good work of the Homes, the doors of which are never closed against little ones ready to perish.

THE SPEECHES.

Lord POLWARTH's remarks were few but hearty. If, he said, it had been found possible to cope with the prevailing iniquity and misery, and to stop the ravages of strong drink, such institutions would not have been required. As things have gone, however, it would have been a very serious thing if the institutions had not grown with the increasing need for them. If the thirteen thousand boys and girls that have been rescued had not been taken in hand, what an awful power for evil they would have been, and what a flood of iniquity would have been swelling over the land! Adverting to Dr. Barnardo's occasional troubles, his lordship said that they have grounded the institutions more than they otherwise could have been in the affections of a generous public.

Rev. JOHN MCNEILL declared himself full of sympathy with the work in which Dr. Barnardo is engaged. Alluding to the fact that the general fund of the institutions was at the moment overdrawn at the bank, he asked, "How does the Doctor bear up?" Replying, he said: "It is because his faith is in God, so that not only is he not reckless, but he really risks nothing. So far from there being recklessness, it lies upon the Christian heart of London to say that Dr. Barnardo has not gone far enough, and that, by God's help, he shall this year be enabled to excel anything that he has yet done." Mentioning the Doctor as a true minister of Jesus Christ, Mr. McNeill expressed a hope that, claiming the promises of God, he would be of good cheer in his great work.

Canon WILBERFORCE gave utterance to a few hearty words. The evening's exhibition had touched his heart as it touched others; he rightly styled it a beautiful series of object-lessons. Alluding to the many evils which cause children to find themselves destitute, the Canon said that the great licensed liquor traffic is constantly pouring out upon society a multitude of homeless children. In conclusion, he earnestly appealed for hearty support to the institutions. Mr. W. FOWLER, treasurer, Mr. S. PLIMSOLL, and Mr. S. GURNEY SHEPPARD also spoke a few words.

The great kindness of many friends of the Homes was over and over again acknowledged. It being considered desirable that the institutional year should terminate in December rather than in March, as hitherto, the accounts were made up for the nine months, ending December last. During that period the donations for all purposes amounted to £84,768, the highest amount ever reached in the like space of time.

While the children were singing, and in other ways entertaining the audience, cheques and promises of help were sent up, and read out by Dr. Barnardo. In this way the funds were replenished by some £1700, which, however, will not go far with such vast undertakings. The audience included not a few who had come from a distance to attend the meeting.

MAJOR WHITTLE IN SCOTLAND.

Besides Edinburgh, Dundee, and Aberdeen, Major Whittle has held missions in Stirling and Inverness. He is now in the latter city. In Stirling the work was greatly owned of God, and, in spite of frequent wet nights, the meetings were large and fruitful. The afternoon Bible-readings drew such large attendances that (as in Edinburgh) the place of meeting had to be changed to the large New Public Hall, where the evening meetings were held. The Lord's people got much blessing on those occasions, and the evangelist spoke in the power of the Spirit. The mission altogether was a most enjoyable and fruitful one. Almost all the ministers in the town joined in it heartily, and many came from surrounding districts. The friends connected with Drummond's Tract Depôt gave every assistance, as did also the Y.M.C.A. Mr. R. B. Stewart, and Mr. Baker, and very specially Rev. Mr. Goldie, were mainstays in the work.

On the Sunday afternoon there was a meeting for children, which was crowded to the door, and the Major gave them his "Poison Sermon," with chemical illustrations. The young people, and the adults as well, who filled the galleries, were deeply interested, and we believe many saving impressions were made. In the evening the large Town Hall was so crowded that an overflow meeting was held by Dr. Moxey and Mr. Charles E. Whittle, in an adjoining church. In both of the meetings there were many decisions for Christ.

In Inverness, the mission commenced on a Sabbath, and in the evening the Music Hall was filled to overflowing. The word was with power, and a deep and solemn impression was produced. Afternoon Bible-readings and evening evangelistic meetings have been supplemented by large open-air gatherings, which have been addressed by Major Whittle and his son, by Dr. Moxey, and by Revs. Dr. Black and Messrs. Mactavish and Camburn.

On Sunday week, the meetings, which have been nightly increasing in interest and power, culminated in a day of rich blessing. The morning meeting for Chistian workers had nearly double the attendance of the previous one, and a stimulating message and warning were given against "earth diggers" who hide their talent instead of using it for the Master. This was followed by the morning service in the Free High Church (Rev. Dr. Black's). The church was filled in every corner, and Dr. Moxey preached from the text, "Take ye away the stone" (John xi. 39). God, we believe, added his blessing. In the afternoon the Music Hall was filled to the doors with children, their teachers and parents. Major Whittle gave an address, illustrated by the Wordless Book; and, although no after-meeting was held, as an open-air meeting followed at four o'clock, and there were to be four subsequent gatherings of young people, yet we feel sure that many young hearts were surrendered to the Saviour.

The open-air meeting will doubtless remain a "memory" in the town. Some friend said it was as large as Mr. Moody's in 1874. Thousands thronged the banks of the Castle Hill, and under the canopy of heaven, on a lovely spring afternoon, the singing of the "Old Hundred" and "There is a Fountain filled with Blood" will not soon be forgotten. Old memories were doubtless stirred, and when Major Whittle announced his text, "Prepare to meet thy God," every eye and ear seemed attent. The Major's magnificent voice was surely never heard to greater advantage. A girl standing in a garden a quarter of a mile off heard every word of his last prayer. Doubtless the message reached some ears that never intended to hear it, and, let us hope, with saving results. The address was a singularly powerful one, and the immense audience stood spell-bound.

In the evening the Music Hall was again crowded, and many anxious ones were dealt with afterwards. During the meeting three young men had attracted attention by the levity of their behaviour. Mr. Charles Whittle got hold of one as he was leaving the hall, and another (the worst of the three, and a well-known ringleader in youthful frivolity) was stopped by an earnest Christian worker, and handed over to the Major. At first, he appeared indifferent, but soon he became anxious, and finally professed to give his heart to Jesus. Major Whittle told him to go and confess Christ to the friend who had detained him. He did so at once, and was now directed to go to his companion, with whom Mr. Charles Whittle was still dealing. Mr. Whittle asked him to kneel down and pray for his companion. At once he did so most earnestly, and soon the companion decided. They then shook hands with each other as brothers in Christ. While Mr. Whittle had been engaged with his case, the third young man kept standing close by intently listening to every word. Mr. Whittle took him for a converted friend waiting for his young man, and when the other two had shaken hands, he asked this third companion when he had become a Christian? "To-night," was the answer. "When?" "While you were talking to my friend." The three went away rejoicing. Thus closed a memorable Sabbath. Several of the surrounding towns are begging the Major to pay them a visit. He will endeavour to do so.

MEDICAL WORK AMONG THE POOR.

An institution of great practical benevolence has been at work during more than three years at Clapham-road, London, S.W., silently and unostentatiously dispensing blessings upon the humbler classes of the community. A maternity school has existed there under the management of medical women, which is giving practical instruction to students of the London School of Medicine for Women in one of the most important departments of their profession. In training properly educated midwives, the school has attended more than a thousand patients in their own homes without having had to record a single death. To this has been joined a dispensary, medical attendance at which is given by qualified women only. The appreciation in which their services are held in the locality is evidenced by sixty to eighty persons coming to them for advice and medicine on each of three days in the week.

Another departure has also been taken which ought to be made known to the public. In January last it was resolved to open a hospital for the reception of mothers who could not be treated so satisfactorily in their own homes. A suitable house was rented at 74, Jeffrey's-road, Clapham, where a lady house-surgeon is in residence. Ten patients can be accommodated, and several poor women have already been received. Could nct this, or something similar, be accomplished in other districts, and in other centres of population? The institution at Clapham and Jeffrey's-road lies near a district where there are many poor dwellings, distant from any of the larger hospitals, and a visit from ladies desiring to assist in this good work, or to commence something of the kind elsewhere, would be found truly interesting.

A VISIT TO THE HUGUENOTS.

When staying at Strathpeffer (Ross-shire) last July, we heard, at the daily prayer-meeting, from Pasteur Martin (of the Eglise Libre of France) an account of the wonderful revival in the churches in the South and West of that land. He afterwards visited us at Deeside, Aberdeenshire, and other friends heard him tell what the Lord had done in saving souls, and joined with us in helping the work.

Our desire, then, was to see this work of God; we realised this when ordered abroad with our family in March. We started for France; our friend Mr. Martin secured us a house at Vabre (Tarn), where he is Pasteur. His people had helped him to furnish it, so that by their practical kindness we found ouselves in a comfortable home when we arrived here on March 19.

The next day, Sunday, found us in the homely chapelle at 10.15 for the "culte mutuel," surrounded by the Huguenots, who received us most warmly. Besides many services on the Sunday, there are meetings nearly every night in the districts, some of them three hours' walk each way. We have had the privilege of being present and taking part in many of these. The numbers who come are generally greater than the capacity of the large barns or kitchens, but they will crowd in and stand for hours to hear the Gospel. The presence of the Lord has been very manifest, and the love among the Christians is in the true Apostolic spirit.

On April 16 we had our two salons full for a meeting commemorative of the revival, which began that day five years ago in a barn three miles off. For two years this revival continued, and many hundreds were saved, the work of grace spreading all over the south of France. To this, of course, there was a great opposition, and stones were freely thrown at the workers.

We have seen what the Lord has done in these various districts and churches, Caussonnel, Cruzy, Mouline, Viane, Espérausse. In Mazamet, St. Aman's, Ste. Foy la Grande, Clairac, &c., the revival has been wonderful. Here the work is still going on, and several souls have professed conversion since we came. The anniversary meeting was a joyful one, many testimonies to Christ's saving and keeping power being given.

We have frequent Bible-readings in our home, for the people do not wish to lose an opportunity for study of the Word and work for souls. The spirit in which they hunger for the Word and for souls is most healthful. Most of these people are poor, and this is no exception in the other congregations of the Eglise Libre de France.

Mr. Martin goes to Great Britain as the accredited agent of these churches, to tell the needs of this great country, and to solicit aid for the carrying on of the Lord's work. We trust your readers may like to send some help to these brethren in the Lord, as we can assure them it will be devoted to real soul-saving work.

Pasteur Martin's address in England will be care of Mrs. Malan, 42, Stanhope-gardens, London, S.W.

THE BIBLE FLOWER MISSION.—Workers visit patients in hospitals and infirmaries, presenting them with bouquets of flowers, to which are attached texts of Scripture. During last year the work met with much encouragement, and with the co-operation of Scripture-readers, Bible-women, and others, many sick and poor were reached in their own homes. Tea-meetings and religious services for special classes of people were likewise attended, and altogether there were 448,539 distributions, being a large increase on the previous year. Christians who can supply flowers, fruit, lavender bags, grasses, berries, cards, or other articles used by the Mission are cordially invited to help. Particulars of this very interesting work may be obtained from the hon. superintendent, Miss Anne Dove, 110, Cannon-street, E.C.

"THE PENTECOSTAL MISSION."

THE town of Devonport has been recently favoured with a visit from two prominent workers in the above Mission, Mrs. Lowther and Mr. A. H. Aspland. Coming at a time when many Christian hearts were sighing for showers of blessing, they received a hearty welcome, and were accepted as messengers of the Lord. The first series of meetings was conducted in Zoar Mission-hall, and, in addition to earnest members of the Church there, Christians of all denominations were brought together to hear the plain, Scriptural, and convincing teaching which was imparted as the privilege of this dispensation—to be filled with the Holy Ghost. Deep searchings of heart, earnest prayer, and patient waiting for the realisation of the power from on high followed, and in due time the answer came. In the case of several, effects similar to those related by Finney were manifest. They were prostrated before the Lord, and had overwhelming views of his majesty and claims. By others the blessing was received like the gentle dew from heaven, their whole spiritual nature being pervaded by a sense of peace, and purity, and power, and holy joy indescribable, and surpassing all they had ever experienced in the past. But all were alike in this respect, that the baptism they had received made it perfectly easy and spontaneous to them to witness for God in their homes, amongst their neighbours, before their workmates, in the Government yard, and elsewhere, or before large congregations. Timid, shrinking disciples waxed bold and uncompromising in their testimony, and, blessed be God, fruit followed in the conversion of souls.

From Zoar Hall the services passed to the Bible Christian Chapel, in Haddington-road, where was found a people well prepared. The Rev. A. Hancock, the resident minister, entered heartily into the mission, and so indeed did all the officers of the church. In large numbers the members came together to tarry in prayer and supplication, and they were not disappointed. The blessing rolled in like mighty waves of the sea. Night after night the building was filled with Christians seeking for the holy anointing; and with all the definiteness of Pentecost came the power.

The next Sunday in Sunday-school and congregation a harvest of souls began, and, during the weeks which have followed, nearly 150 have decided for the Lord, most of them young men and women. Over 100 have been received into the church, and such stimulus has been given to evangelistic work that missions have been held at Torpoint and Saltash with blessed results.

The third place visited was Belmont Wesleyan Chapel, Stoke, where the same gracious unction attended the word spoken, and the conviction of a lack of power penetrated many softened hearts. Toward the close of the week's mission, scores came forward to be prayed with, and the power which fell has rendered the lives of not a few one long hymn of praise, and has unloosed the lips of those who hitherto had been unable to speak for God. The work has also been attended by remarkable instances of physical healing, the evidences of which are beyond question, and the sole glory of which must be given to God. Enriched personally through the mission, I speak for myself and many, many more, when I commend the workers to the sympathy and co-operation of Christians throughout the country, and bid them God-speed in their much-needed and God-honoured testimony to the Pentecostal power of the Holy Ghost, still the portion of all believers.

COREA.—Only the other day, says Dr. Griffith John, Corea was hermetically closed to the missionary and his message; to-day there are in that little kingdom several missionaries living and working for Christ, and a goodly number of converts have been gathered in.

NORTH AFRICA MISSION.

DEAR SIR,—During the past Mission year, which concluded on April 30, fifteen new labourers have gone out in connection with this Mission, ten to Northern Morocco, one to Algeria, three to Tunis, and one to Tripoli; so that, notwithstanding our sad loss through the death of the late Miss Caley, and the return through failing health of our brother Mr. Pryor, there are thirteen more workers in the Field than a year ago. We have had several cases of conversion at some of the stations, but at others our beloved brethren have toiled on in faith and patience without seeing any brought to Christ, though not without encouragement at the growing interest manifested.

During the last few weeks, there has been a special awakening apparent in Tunis and in Tangier, though in the face of not a little opposition. A small Bible-shop, which a recent convert looked after in Tunis, was broken into a few nights ago, a small harmonium stolen, an attempt made to burn some of the Bibles, and a letter left for the convert in Arabic, to tell him that his grave was dug, and that if he continued to associate with these Christian missionaries, he would very soon be put in it. This, of course, has rather frightened the poor fellow and some of his companions. There are many who are inquiring after the truth, some of them staying at the missionaries' houses until after midnight. The fear of man is one of the great obstacles in their way.

In Tangier a few days ago, two soldiers came to apprehend a Moor who was baptized last November, but they found that he had left the town, having gone with Dr. Churcher, Mr. Summers, and Mr. and Mrs. Hamilton to Fez.

A few days afterwards, two soldiers came to apprehend another Moorish convert, but he having become a French subject some time ago, was not amenable to Moorish law. A good work is also being done amongst the Spaniards. A Spanish Christian returning from America to Tangier had the sorrow of losing his wife and three children by drowning. This caused him to give way to drink, but he has been restored, and is now working earnestly for the Lord. On a recent Sunday, another Spaniard, who knew something of English, got up during the meeting to ask for prayer that he might be saved, and has since received Christ. He kept a drinking-shop, but has determined to give it up. Another Spaniard, present at the same meeting, who also kept a drinking-shop, has determined to do the same, besides which there are other anxious souls.

A Jewish convert, baptized some little time ago, is helping in the work in his spare time, and is growing in boldness. Thus the Lord is giving souls both amongst Moors, Spaniards, and Jews, but these are but drops of blessing, we are looking for the showers.

I would again earnestly beg your readers to remember that, notwithstanding all our efforts, we can reach but very few of the fourteen millions of North Africa. What are the forty-four workers of the North Africa Mission, and the thirty or forty other workers amongst such a population! From almost all our Mission stations we get requests for more helpers in the work, and we hope, if God supplies the means, to send out a few more about the beginning of October; hundreds are needed, but they must be of the right sort, soul-winners, and able to trust joyfully and calmly in God, amid the many trials and perplexities of the mission field, and when their brethren at home may seem to have forgotten them and their needs. Arabs, Berbers, French, Spaniards, Italians, and others in North Africa are crying to us by their deep spiritual needs, "Come over and help us."—Yours faithfully in Christ.

A NEW CHINA MISSION.

THE American Baptist Missionary Union is about opening a new mission, in one of the western provinces of China, some sixteen hundred miles from the mouth of the Yangtse river. The province has a population of over thirty millions. One of the two men who go out to this vast field is Mr. Wm. M. Upcraft, who went some years ago from the East London Institute in the service of the British and Foreign Bible Society to this very region, where he was treated like Paul at Lystra, being stoned and left for dead. He was obliged to return home to recover from his injuries. Afterward, he came to the United States, and became a pastor in Minnesota. He now feels impelled to return to the scene of his former labours and sufferings. He takes with him a young layman, Mr. George Walker, a well-known evangelistic worker.

These two young men go out with no definite salary pledged, depending for the supply of actual needs upon the young men in the Baptist churches in Minnesota, who have undertaken to provide for their support. Their work is to be one of direct evangelisation, aiming constantly at the regions beyond, leaving converts, when gathered into churches under the care of native teachers and pastors, to self-growth and self-propagation.

Much interest will be felt in this Mission, and it is to be hoped that the faith and zeal of the brethren will provoke "very many." There is a growing conviction among many of the friends of missions in America that there is needed a more vital connection between the mission fields and the home churches, and that the present crisis in missions demands a greater variety of workers, and less cumbersome and more directly evangelistic methods.

UNION HALL MISSION.—We have three large Gospel tents, which we hope to have in use this summer, as in former years. At present we are not able to use them, for lack of means. It will be a great pity if this very important part of our Mission, which God has signally blessed in the salvation of many in past years, should now be hindered. ROBERT BILKE.

PALERMO SAILORS' REST.—A good work has been going on here. On a recent Sunday, during the stay of H.M.S. Cruiser, several seamen declared for Christ, and promised, by God's help, to live the life of faith. The workers, a band of converted sailors, were greatly cheered. A man on board the Cruiser writes: "We ask for prayer that all the brethren on the ship may be used as mighty instruments in the Lord's hand."

CORNISH COAST MISSION.—This work has been greatly prospered during the past three years, and, in order to extend its usefulness, we have recently acquired and fitted up a mission smack, with accommodation for services on board. The vessel, freighted with an earnest missionary, Bibles, books, and a medicine chest, has gone forth on its errand of mercy to the "toilers on the deep" around this coast. Cornish friends have supplied the needed funds with the exception of about £60. I will gladly receive any help your readers may be pleased to send.

STOCKWELL ORPHANAGE.—In a halfpenny booklet, entitled NOTES ON VOTES, Mr. Spurgeon gives some account of his Orphan Homes and the principles on which they are conducted. The institution provides for 250 fatherless boys and 250 fatherless girls, upwards of £10,000 per annum being required for its support. Candidates are not elected by the votes of subscribers, but are selected by a committee in such a way as to secure the benefits of the institution to the most needy, helpless, and deserving. In founding the Orphanage, Mr. Spurgeon was greatly indebted to the late Mrs. Hillyard, of Bath, on whose last words, "my boys, my boys," a touching poem, by Marianne Farningham, is given at the end of the booklet, which is published by Messrs. Passmore & Alabaster.

Revival among Soldiers in Ceylon.

WHEN the 91st Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders, amongst whom we had worked, had left Ceylon, we hoped to find Christians amongst the Gordon Highlanders. Before they arrived we had the assurance, from reading a paragraph in THE CHRISTIAN, in which he asked for tracts and books, that there was one earnest worker, at least. As soon as they landed, we discovered four "out-and-out" disciples who were willing to work with us; but, as one of these was to be stationed in Kandy, there were only three. These did not rest until they commenced a week's mission in the barrack schoolroom, which was so successful that the week ultimately contained ten days instead of seven. The meetings were conducted by any Christian who felt led to do so. God was with us, and many souls were truly saved, and several backsliders restored. Some are still holding out, but we are praying to God to convert the whole regiment.

One or two of the more remarkable cases of conversion will be of interest. Many had a severe struggle with Satan before they seemed able to accept Christ. Outside the schoolroom is a passage which leads to the canteen. One evening, a soldier stood there, money in hand, wondering whether he should go to the canteen or to the meeting. After some minutes thought he put the money into his pocket and came in. He held out until the end of the meetings, and then he told me we must give him five days more, as there was something he must do before he decided for Christ. (This "something," he afterwards confessed, was desertion from the army.) It was vain to remind him that the five days might not be given him; he said he would risk it! The fifth day was Sunday, and in the evening he attended our service at the church. He stayed to the usual prayer-meeting afterwards, and then tried to escape, but he was immediately brought back. Seeing himself surrounded by Christians, he said, "I see there is no way of escape." He went into the vestry with my father and sister; there he found Christ, and he has been shining for Jesus ever since, working for Him in the barracks and in the hospital with two other comrades who are equally zealous for their Master.

Another remarkable case was that of a Roman Catholic who came in from the canteen to have some fun and a laugh, as he said; but he came in to be converted instead. No one said a word to him about his doctrines; Christ alone was preached to him, and when he accepted Christ all his false doctrines disappeared at once.

When the ten days' mission was ended, the converts formed themselves into a Christian band, which was called "The Bydand Praying Band." Bydand is the motto of the regiment, and means "Stand fast." Some seventeen names were enrolled then, and since about thirteen have been added (including three or four artillerymen), besides several civilians who have also joined the band. The Colonel showed his sympathy with the work by giving them the use of the infant schoolroom, a small building some distance from the main block of barracks. Here the Bydand brothers meet for Bible study and prayer every day. The Colonel not only gave them the use of the cottage, but surprised them by sending down some chairs and benches, &c. It was then decided to hold meetings every week regularly. These have been blessed of God to the conversion of many.

At one of these meetings one conversion took place which made us very glad. A lance-corporal of the 91st had remained behind, owing to illness, I believe. He was a very wild man, but a great favourite and a splendid reciter. He was sitting with some comrades in the canteen, drinking, when he heard the singing. Something irresistibly drew him, and he left the canteen and took his seat in the meeting. Before very long he got up, walked to the gentleman who was conducting the meeting, and asked him and the other Christians present to pray for him. This they gladly did, and then he prayed himself. God answered all these prayers for he rose from his knees a consciously saved man. He has been married since, and left Ceylon to join the police department in Singapore. Before leaving, he recited his favourite piece, "How I won the Victoria Cross." Before he began he told the soldiers that the V.C. was the highest honour a soldier could expect to obtain on earth, but that he had got something far better than that—even the heavenly crown.

Many more would come out on the Lord's side, but fear of persecution keeps them back; several have backslidden, not being able to stand the jeers of their unconverted comrades.

Every month a company is sent down for rifle drill to Mount Lavinia, seven miles out of Colombo, on the sea coast. About six weeks ago three of our Christians went to take their turn. They did as others had done before them, and went out to read their Bibles together quietly under some cocoanut trees, not far from the barracks. Presently a sergeant and corporal, with several other soldiers, came towards them. They supposed they were going to have a nice meeting, but were surprised to hear the sergeant order them to the guard-room. They thought he was joking; but, when he assured them that they were really to go for "breaking loose from barracks," they all rose and went as cheerfully as possible.

The following is an extract from a letter written by one of these men at the time:—"I have been in the guard-room three times before, but I never was so happy as this time. We had our books, and we sang and read several lessons from John and Acts, we prayed for the corporal who put us there, and I believe the prayer was answered, for he came to me, looking very sad, and told me he was very sorry for what he had done; that he did not mean to put us in—it was only to give the company a laugh. I told him I had forgiven him, and explained that it was God he had to deal with, and not me." The sentence fortunately was a light one, and they were "seven days confined to barracks."

This is only an outline of the work done, but I think these few incidents will interest those whose work is amongst soldiers, and, I hope, many others besides. There is a box kept in the schoolroom which is supposed to be full of tracts and Bibles. I believe that box, at present, is nearly empty, so if any kind friends feel inclined to help these Christian soldiers in their work amongst their comrades, by sending tracts suitable for soldiers, it would be a very good investment. I can answer for their heartfelt gratitude for help of any sort. Any such packets may be addressed to me.

HOLIDAYS FOR FACTORY GIRLS.—During July, August, and September, 1888, thirty-nine young women and girls over fifteen years of age were sent into the country from the neighbourhood of Saffron-hill and Leather-lane, for change and rest; also thirty-three girls, members of this branch of the "Young Women's Help Society," under fifteen, several of them factory hands, were sent, with the help of the "Children's Fresh Air Mission," for nearly all of whom clothing and boots had to be provided. The girls were sent to Minster-in-Sheppy, West Brighton, Hitchin, and Long Melford. They were boarded out with cottagers, and in most cases a lady living in the neighbourhood undertook to have them met at and taken to the station, to make all payments, to find the homes, and to take an interest in them during their stay. It is hoped that this first attempt at Saffron-hill will lead to a general movement to aid these poor girls to obtain from time to time the change of air and rest which they so much need and so greatly enjoy. Further information can be obtained from the Hon. Secretary, St. Peter's Rectory, Saffron-hill, E.C.

MESSRS. HYDE AND STEVENSON.

THESE evangelists have been labouring with much success in Carlow, Ireland. The Society of Friends kindly lent their meeting-house, and the Presbyterian and Methodist ministers gave their hearty sympathy and co-operation. The addresses of Mr. Hyde put the way of salvation very plainly, and the Gospel preached in song by Mr. Stevenson touched many a heart.

Messrs. Hyde and Stevenson also held meetings in the neighbouring town of Tullow, and for a week the Methodist Chapel there was crowded to overflowing each night. Much blessing has been the result, with some very interesting cases of decision for God. Efforts were made to induce the brethren to remain in Carlow for another week, but as they had made arrangements for meetings in the South of Ireland, they are obliged to leave. They go with the heartfelt prayers of God's people, and their visit to Carlow will be long remembered with gratitude.

SCUTARI MEDICAL MISSION.

IN a communication with respect to the work of this important Mission, superintended by Dr. and Mrs. Alexandrian, Miss M. B. Gerds writes:—

"Having known these workers for many years, I can testify to their simple trust in God, their unselfish devotion to his work, and their complete fitness for the same. I will most gladly send a copy of their last report, post free, to any who desire it. The Scutari Medical Mission and Orphans' Home, Constantinople, is thus commended by Dr. H. Grattan Guinness:—'The Mission is full of vitality and promise, and is one that ought to be in every way encouraged. Their needs are great. How delightful if, through the liberality of English friends, they are not only enabled to maintain the Medical Mission and Orphan Home, but to provide adequate premises, rendered necessary by their rapidly growing organisation.'

"In Dr. Alexandrian's last letter, he says:—'We have received, after ten months' struggle, an Imperial approbation and sanction for our Orphanage, which affords the secular backbone of existence as an Institution.' They need £900 for the purpose of building the Orphanage, towards which one lady has given £100. I shall be most happy to send a box of beautiful Turkish embroideries, of which I have just received a large consignment direct from Constantinople, to any lady who may desire, by the purchase of the same, to help in this work for God, leaving the choice of selection to me. There are tablecovers, blotters, antis, bags, screens, cushions, bannerets, tidies, paper racks, mats, varying in price from 2s. 6d. to £3 10s. As they are of exquisite workmanship, and would fetch at an English sale or bazaar much more than their present price, ladies may be induced to send to me for a parcel for that purpose. I shall be pleased to receive orders for embroidery, or contributions for the work, addressed to me at Chertsey House, Red Hill, Surrey."

"THE CHRISTIAN" FOR SOLDIERS.—Mr. M. Charles Laurence, 3422, B Troop, 5th Royal Lancers, Mhow, India, writes:—There being a large number of kind friends who send your valuable weekly to the troops in this country, I feel confident many of them are not aware that the postage is frequently insufficient. Numbers of these copies are regularly refused and returned to the Post Office on account of charges being made on delivery.

EVANGELICAL SOCIETY OF GENEVA.—The good work which this Society does in France is known to many British Christians. By colportage and evangelisation, a specially interesting effort has for some time been prosecuted in Le Diois, Department of Drôme, much help and encouragement having been rendered by two devoted English ladies. In one of the villages there seems to be an awakening, and a great many Roman Catholics have been attracted to the hall in which the Gospel is preached. The bigotry of enemies has already been lived down in some places, and greater blessing is now being looked forward to than has so far been experienced. Rev. G. Laing, 17, Buckingham-terrace, Edinburgh, is a correspondent of the work.

COUNT ANDREW BERNSTORFF,

Of the Office of Public Worship and Instruction, Germany.

FOREMOST amongst those who, in Germany, by their influence and energy help on the development of various forms of Christian life is Count ANDREW BERNSTORFF. His example carries the lesson that, even amidst the busy scenes of a diplomatic career, a man may grow rich in the grace of God, and exhibit the power of a living faith.

Count Andrew Bernstorff was born in 1844. His father, the late German Ambassador to Great Britain, will be remembered in this country, where he died after a stay of nineteen years. As Count and Countess Bernstorff sought connection with all the best elements of English life, their eldest son had the privilege of visiting as a boy of fourteen, in the house of the late Sir Culling Eardley, one of the founders of the Evangelical Alliance. It was in contact with this man that the power of Christian life first impressed him, and he received influences which helped to shape his life for God. Abbot's "Young Christian" fell into his hands at this time, and the practical truths it contained were very helpful; but it was a tract by Bishop Ryle, "Do not be Afraid," handed to him in the streets of London in July, 1858, which made him definitively decide for Christ. During the following year he gave himself to the earnest study of the Bible, searching out leading texts on the more important doctrines, an exercise which proved of great value to him in after life.

The young convert, true to his name, Andrew (John i. 40, 42), soon tried to bring others to Jesus; and in the year 1859 he wrote a few tracts in English. The first of these, "Salvation by Faith," was especially written for a poor Roman Catholic woman, to whom he desired to make clear the simplicity of the Gospel.

From 1861 to 1869 he pursued his law studies at the Berlin University. So intent was he to give his life to the service of God that he long entertained the thought of entering the Church. He only abandoned this idea because he became impressed by the fact that his country had many good pastors, but few laymen who took a decided stand as Christian workers. Since then the question of lay work has been a burning one for him; incessantly he has laboured to advocate the principle that every man, in whatever position he may be, is called to help on the advancement of the Lord's kingdom. At that time he was the only layman in Germany who gave religious addresses, a state of things which is now much changed, thank God.

Another subject laid especially on his heart was the sanctification of the Lord's Day. He felt deeply how much the religious life of Germany had lost through the absence of a day set apart for rest, worship, and Christian service. He therefore entered heart and soul into the Sunday-school movement, which was originated in Germany in 1864 by the visit of Mr. A. Woodroff from Brooklyn. He helped in the foundation of several Sunday-schools. After the death of Pastor Procknow last autumn he was elected President of the German Sunday-school Committee. He is a teacher and superintendent of a school established in his own house.

(From Photograph by J. C. Schaarwachter, Berlin.)

Having, in the year 1869, passed his last State examination, he undertook a journey to Spain to inquire into the new Protestant movement there, and report to the Berlin Committee in what way the work could best be aided by Germany. He has since kept up a lively interest in Gospel work in Spain, which he visited a second time in 1887.

In March, 1870, he received a call to enter the diplomatic service. Great was his anxiety lest the new position might hinder him in Christian work; but, as the call came unsought, he accepted it. He spent several years in the public service in Dresden, London, Vienna, and Washington. Wherever placed, he used his position for the advancement of the Gospel. In Dresden he was able to overcome the difficulties that existed in connection with the establishment of Sunday-schools. At Vienna he was one of a small circle of friends who engaged, though very quietly, in religious work. At Washington his open advocacy of the sanctification of the Lord's Day caused him to be violently attacked by the bad German press of the United States.

Whenever he was in London he delighted in intercourse with men who are the standard-bearers of Christian truth in this country. He often speaks with warm gratitude of all the good he received from the friendship of Lord Radstock, from the teaching of the late Rev. Capel Molyneux, and of Rev. H. W. Webb-Peploe. The noble life of the late Earl of Shaftesbury always stirred him to a high ideal.

In March, 1873, he was called from Washington to the death-bed of his father, and soon after that undertook the office of Landrath in the Duchy of Lauenburg, where his family estate is situated. Several times he was proposed as a member of the German Parliament and the Prussian House of Deputies, but his religious views were always strongly used against him. He felt that this was God's hand restraining him from political life so that he might be used for greater things in the Master's cause.

In June, 1880, he was called into the Ministry of Public Worship and Instruction, where he still occupies a post. This brought him back to Berlin and to the very centre of German Christian life and work. No one acquainted with the many new movements which have been springing up in the last few years, and which have given a new impulse to religious life in Germany, can fail to recognise that God brought Count Bernstorff in the right time to the right place, to be a valuable instrument in his hands. The work of evangelising the masses, introduced into Germany by men like Von Schluembach, Pastor Schrenk, Dr. Ziemann, and Professor Christlieb, found in Count Bernstorff a warm supporter, and many doors were opened through his influence. He and his two friends, Count Pückler and Baron Rothkirch are verily "in season and out of season" busily engaged in bringing those whom the Church has not reached under the sound of the Gospel. The Berlin Y.M.C.A., of which Count Bernstorff is the president, is a most flourishing institution.

In 1885 the Count succeeded in realising a longfelt wish—that of starting a noon-day prayer-meeting in Berlin. He always stood on the principles of evangelical catholicity as they are represented by the Evangelical Alliance, but this does not prevent him from being a staunch member of his own church. He thinks that the National Church of Prussia has the pure doctrine of the Reformation. He is president of the German branch of the Evangelical Alliance. He often travels considerable distances to attend Christian conferences, and is actively interested in a great number of good works. He constantly aims at creating union amongst Christians.

In 1881 he married Mademoiselle de Hottingen, of Switzerland, a devoted Christian, who shines brightly for her Master. Those who have had the privilege of enjoying hospitality in the house of Count and Countess Bernstorff must have been struck with the charming simplicity of their life and manner, and impressed with the fact that both are wholly given to the Lord.

A NOTE OF THANKS.

Dear Sir,—I desire to testify to you with what uniform acceptance The Christian has been received by us weekly, since our arrival in China; also the high appreciation in which the paper is held by those to whom it is our privilege and pleasure to pass it on.

We look upon it as our weekly letter from our brethren and sisters in the World's Mission Field, and join with them in hearty praise for advances made in the Master's kingdom. We affectionately sympathise in the trials and difficulties they have to encounter as they prosecute their arduous work. Further, we are, through the records given, enabled intelligently to pray for them, in the various branches of missionary labour in which they are engaged.

May the Lord largely increase the growing usefulness of your invaluable paper, is the prayer of yours heartily in service for the Lord,

James Dalziel.

HOME FOR MOTHERLESS LITTLE GIRLS, Hurst-road, Eastbourne. The report for last year tells of continued encouragement in the management of this excellent institution. Three girls have left for domestic service, but some distressing cases have been received, filling the Home. In addition to a plain education, the inmates receive careful religious instruction, and outfits on entering the situations which are found for them. It is pleasing to note that the Home continues to occupy a large place in the hearts of a goodly number of Christian people. Communications should be addressed to Miss Lee at the Home.

GOULD MEMORIAL HOME AND INDUSTRIAL SCHOOLS, ROME.—In England and America this excellent institution has many firm friends; but, as early supporters are called to their rest, new acquaintances are very welcome. The report for last year states that for heavenly mercies the period was only a repetition of previous experiences. The industrial department is in a flourishing condition, being highly appreciated both by Italians and foreign residents. It is pleasing to learn that good reports are from time to time received of girls who have left the Home for the battle of life. The hon. superintendent is Mrs. Edgecumbe Edwardes, 18, Trinità dei Monti, Rome.

BUNHILL ADULT SCHOOL.

The new hall of the Bunhill Adult Schools was crowded last Saturday evening by an audience which consisted largely of scholars, teachers, and their friends. It was the annual meeting, and everybody seemed jubilant over the record of a year's useful work. John T. Dorland (of Canada), was in the chair, and prophesied a bright future for the work of the Adult School movement. There is a general impression that the London working man is an atheist and a loud-mouthed, blaspheming individual, but this is not really so. This work offers an eloquent protest against the theory that secular influences alone will lift him up. The School touches him religiously and socially. At Bunhill he finds a library, education, provident society, religious instruction, and amusement of a legitimate character.

George White and Alex. Harrington gave interesting reminiscences of Adult School work in Birmingham and Norwich. Then the chairman called for brief testimonies, and a healthy rivalry was exhibited by the men and women, as in turn they declared that their class "was the best." Between twenty and thirty earnest testimonies were given. One happy-looking workman, dressed neatly, said he "couldn't help laughing, he had got so much good at Bunhill." Another said he lived at Stratford, and had to get up between five and six every Sunday morning to attend class. A young man said he "did not know what brought him to the School; but something drew him on, and he felt he must come." Another said that he came from the country to London, and for three months he strolled about the streets, until one Sunday a member of the School took him by the hand, and invited him to the class.

A lengthy report was presented to the meeting. There are women's and men's sections in the School, and connected with them are the following agencies, all in a flourishing condition: Total Abstinence Society, Peace Society, Foreign Mission Association, Tract Society, Sick Benefit Society, Library, and Provident Society. The total attendances in the classes for the year were 35,890, an increase of 7,338 over that of the previous year.

MR. G. F. COOK has brought to a close a seventeen days' Gospel Temperance Mission, in the Great Assembly Hall, Mile End-road. On the closing night he gave his lecture, "The Story of My Life." Alderman Gilpin, of Nottingham, presided. Mr. Cook told out from his own experience a most wonderful life-story. At the close many pledges were taken, and not a few joined the Crusaders. Over 300 pledges have been taken during the mission.

THE GOSPEL IN THEATRES, &c.

Dear Sir,—It is now nearly thirty years ago since these services were started, and the Committee, for which, during that long period, I have acted as secretary, have the satisfaction of knowing that in almost every large town of the kingdom similar services for the non-churchgoing classes have been instituted.

A generation has, however, necessarily made sad inroads in the list of the subscribers to this work, and every year now removes some of its earliest supporters. God, however, mercifully raises up others to carry on this effort to preach the Gospel of his love to the many poor in our great and ever-increasing city. The testimonies of our managers (city missionaries) at the several buildings still are that numbers attend these services who never can be persuaded to enter a church or chapel, and it has become a matter of anxious concern that so many, at their termination for the winter, in April or May, still hesitate to cross the threshold of our ordinary places of public worship. If larger funds were only forthcoming, the services might at least with advantage be prolonged a few months.

During the current course the Committee, in addition to the holding of services in the larger buildings, have made grants in aid of the opening of the following City Mission rooms:—Regency-street, Westminster; Tufton-street, Westminster; Blue Anchor-lane, Bermondsey; Edward-streets, Camberwell; Lower Edmonton; Lucas-street, Shadwell; Tent-street, Bethnal Green; Great Dover-street; Latimer-road; Edge-street. Other pressing applications are now before the Committee.

The third Shaftesbury Memorial Hall in Union-street, Borough, was also opened in December last, but a debt of £100 still remains on the building.

The Committee of the London City Mission, in referring to these mission-rooms in the annual report about to be issued, say that "mission-rooms have proved, as usual, the fitting complement of 'house-to-house' visitation. Many who never attend a regular place of worship, and who resent the direct personal appeal in the private home, may be induced to listen to plain, earnest addresses in a humble mission-room, and often, as of old, 'faith cometh by hearing.' The Committee never provide such rooms for the missionaries, the funds of the Society being devoted entirely to the support of the living agent; but where, as in many cases, local friends, recognising the need, step in and erect a small mission-hall, or rent a convenient room in some necessitous district, the Committee are deeply grateful for such a valuable auxiliary to the 'house-to-house' visitation." In the mission-rooms, assisted by grants from the funds of this Committee, local friends are indeed hard to find, and hence it is the wish of the Committee to construct a golden bridge of sympathy between the rich suburbs and the central poor districts, between the strong and the weak.

Believe me, yours faithfully,

Chas. M. Sawell, Secretary.

THE GUARDS' MISSION.—Sergeant George Pullinger, late Grenadier Guards, has for some years been doing good Gospel work among his former friends in Her Majesty's service. The need is beyond question, as there are about 6000 men in the Guards, and comparatively little is done for their spiritual welfare. In the report, just issued, Sergeant Pullinger says that the Lord has given him much encouragement in his labour of love. The Mission House is 58, Hugh-street, Ebury Bridge, S.W.

LEAFLETS IN HINDI.—Colonel M. Millett, 9, Harley Gardens, S.W., will be glad if any Hindi scholar will join him in preparing a series of controversial leaflets in Hindi, for use by missionaries in India. The "Bad ni baran" (objections refuted) would be taken as a guide. Of this work the "Nakhzan i Masihi" (Christian Treasury), published at Allahabad, writes thus:—"We place it among the best tracts for orthodox Hindus. It gives a pointed answer to nearly every objection urged by conservative Hindus. It should be studied by every vernacular preacher." Few natives of India will sit down to read a long treatise, but many will accept a short one-page leaflet, and will read it.

MAY MEETINGS.

Spanish and Portuguese Church Aid Society.

THE annual meeting was held on Thursday in Willis's Rooms, Lord Plunket, Archbishop of Dublin, in the chair. In the absence of Rev. L. S. Tugwell through indisposition, an abstract of the report was presented by Rev. H. E. Noyes. It was stated that Señor Vila, who last year had been condemned to imprisonment and a heavy fine for defending the faith of the Reformed Church had been set at liberty. Señor Diaz, however, had been threatened with prosecution for publishing a book "What is the Mass?"

The ARCHBISHOP said the work had been brought more into the light of public discussion during last year than heretofore. For his part he was very glad of this, because neither the reformers nor their friends have anything which they wish to conceal. Rev. F. A. C. LILLINGSTON regarded the sixteen churches to which reference had been made as so many light-ships guiding voyagers towards the harbour of safety. Rev. Canon MONEY expressed his fear that this work of reformation in Spain was not being noticed by the people of this country as it deserved to be. Rev. J. R. SIMPSON said English sympathy should certainly be extended to the men in Spain who are making such a brave stand in this matter. The meeting was further addressed by the Dean of Achonry and Mr. Lloyd.

Exeter Hall Y.M.C.A.

THE large assembly which filled Exeter Hall on Friday evening last could not but have been delighted with the report then rendered of the progress of the Y.M.C.A. movement throughout the world. It was the forty-fifth annual meeting, and the occasion was made specially interesting by the presence of Mr. C. H. Spurgeon, though he was evidently far from well. Mr. E. J. KENNEDY, secretary, after a statement of the objects and operations of the Association, spoke of the good work done at Exeter Hall during the year. Young men have been helped in a variety of ways, conducive to their material, mental, moral, and spiritual welfare. The members and associates number 1422; the gatherings for the purposes of devotion, Bible study, and evangelisation, numbered 1639; attendances at religious services, 126,612; educational classes, 67 weekly, in 42 subjects. These and other figures by no means indicate fully the range and extent of the Association's influence as a mission agency, and a centre of religious activity for old and young alike. Though the receipts have fully met the expenditure, the work is embarrassed by a mortgage debt of several thousand pounds.

Mr. GEORGE WILLIAMS, who occupied the chair, delivered a hearty address, dwelling upon the signs of continued usefulness and progress. He rejoiced at the increasingly large number of members who are to-day finding their sphere in active Christian work at home and abroad. Mr. J. HERBERT TRITTON, in some remarks, summed up the aim of the Association in the expression, "Christ for young men, and young men for Christ, all round the world." Mr. T. A. DENNY, who addressed the Chairman as "Universal father of young men," also spoke highly of the Association and its sister, the Y.W.C.A.

Mr. SPURGEON, who was heartily received, delivered a speech full of sound advice to young men. First addressing such as were not Christians, he said: Endeavour to make the best of yourself. Be bold and brave, and if you have convictions—and you ought to have some—carry them out. Don't creep about and ask leave to live somewhere, but bravely hold your own against all comers, remembering, however, that there is nothing braver than to be bravely good. Keep well at work. I hear a lot about keeping the Sabbath, and cannot hear too much of it; but the precept says, "Six days shalt thou labour." There are certain lazy fellows who appear to be Sabbatarians seven days a week. They are the sort who apply to Mr. Kennedy to help them to get situations, and they apply again, and again, and again, until Mr. Kennedy is tired of them. Young men should be honest, whether Christians or not; be true and trustworthy. Again, be pure; take heed of the strange woman in such a city as this, lest thou "destroy thyself before thy time." Beware of gambling; it is everywhere. I am ashamed to acknowledge that it is even in the Church of God—that there should be something very nearly like gambling in many attempts to raise money to build houses of prayer. "Thou shalt not covet." How can a man gamble without breaking that? Get what you get in an honest way, but do not attempt to get another man's earnings in the turning of the dice. If you would be pure, shun many of the books which come out nowadays. I say it with a sorrowful knowledge that books which have a tendency to defile the imagination are read not only by young men, but by young women; and not merely by worldlings, but also by members of Christian families. Be temperate. I should recommend the Blue Ribbon. That man will never become a drunkard who never drinks at all. Moreover, do not be intemperate in your expenditure. Many young men purchase what they cannot afford, and although it does not look like a great crime, yet it often leads to crime. "Pay as you go," said the father to the son. "But," answered the son, "what if I cannot pay?" The father rejoined,

"THEN DON'T GO, MY SON."

Having urged young men to be generous and cautious, Mr. Spurgeon asked them whether, endeavouring to make the best of themselves, and to do their duty to their neighbours, they will leave out of account their duty to God. On this he made some pointed pleadings, urging decision for Christ.

Passing on to speak to Christian young men, Mr. Spurgeon illustrated at the outset the difference between such and their fellows who are not servants of the great Master. A professor confounded a poor woman on many points of Biblical criticism. Having humbly listened, the poor woman asked for an explanation of the words of the Lord to Nicodemus, "Ye must be born again." The professor said that he had not experienced the thing, but from the testimony of some friends he judged that the phenomenon must undoubtedly exist: there must be something in it. The woman rejoined: "How dare you attempt to teach me spiritual things, while all the time you confess to knowing nothing about the matter. Now, though I am a poor woman, I know what it is to be born again; and, if I have but one eye, I am not going to be taught by a blind man." So young men who have been born again "are not of the world, even as Christ is not of the world." Quoting James i. 27, the speaker urged young Christians to keep themselves "unspotted from the world." There are in the world lepers who must be shunned as deadly vipers. Having spoken of the dangers of riches and poverty, and the need for being on guard against the favour, flattery, and praise of the world, Mr. Spurgeon said: Do you touch politics? I do not blame you, but keep yourselves unspotted. I scarcely know the man who succeeds in this. It seems to me very much thus: "Which set of maggots shall eat the cheese?" The vanities, amusements, and tendencies of the world were instanced in notes of warning. Going on to direct attention to Heb. x. 35, "Cast not away therefore your confidence," Mr. Spurgeon gave some sound and timely counsel.

Rev. W. HAY CHAPMAN followed with a few kindly words, cautioning the young men against sceptical opinions now so rife. There was some good singing in the course of the evening by the West London Choral Association and the Exeter Hall Evangelistic Choir, under Mr. Holmes. The anniversary falling on the Queen's birthday, a message of congratulation was sent to Her Majesty, and graciously acknowledged by her private secretary.

Field-lane Refuges and Ragged Schools.

THE forty-seventh annual meeting of the Field-lane Refuges and Ragged Schools was held in the large hall of the Institution on Thursday evening last. The secretary, Mr. PEREGRINE PLATT, read an abstract of the report, from which it appeared that, during the year ending March 31, 697 men and women were received into the Refuges, 193 boys and girls were maintained in the Industrial Homes, and 368 persons were placed in situations or assisted in obtaining employment. In the Servants' Homes 37 girls were trained, 17 of them being afterwards placed out in situations. At the Crèche 1753 children were received; 580 families were assisted, and meals were given to large numbers of young and old. The financial statement was on the whole encouraging.

Earl COMPTON, who presided, moved a resolution, agreeing with the committee as to the importance of continuing the Bible ragged schools and certified industrial schools, in which clear and definite Scripture truth is taught, and in which the children receive a practical technical education. He rejoiced to learn that so many boys and girls had, by means of these agencies, been rescued from influences of evil, degradation, and vice. The motion was seconded by Rev. Edward Smith. Revs. Burman Cassin and George Hawker also spoke.

British Women and Temperance.

THE British Women's Temperance Association is doing valuable service "for God and home and native land," in promoting total abstinence amongst the women of our country. At its annual meeting held in the Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street, on Wednesday last week, Miss J. A. Fowler, hon. secretary, reported that a vast amount of varied work has been done during the past twelve months, and there has been much cause for encouragement in the success which has attended the earnest efforts of the workers. The Association has 337 affiliated branches in active working order, with about 30,000 members.

Lady HENRY SOMERSET presided over the gathering (at which delegates and friends from all parts of the country were present), and delivered an eloquent address, in which she spoke in thankful terms of the gratifying progress being made by the temperance movement. To the efforts of the British Women, she said, is greatly due the advance being made by the cause generally; but we must not forget the fact that the great power behind it all is God. The temperance question should always be looked at as directly related to vital Christianity, and every Christian man and woman should take an active part in carrying on the warfare with the drink demon. Referring to Sunday closing, Lady Somerset urged them to go on in the fight, turning a deaf ear to all the arguments against it, and with a strong determination to obtain this blessing for our land, so that Sunday shall be a day that is honouring to the name of God.

Mrs. CAMPBELL asked any who still "take a very little" to give it up for the sake of Christ, and especially appealed to mothers to train up their children so that they should learn to loathe strong drink.

Mrs. J. K. BARNEY, of Providence, Rhode Island, gave some account of prison, jail, police, and almshouse work in America, and related several telling incidents, showing the good which is being wrought through this useful branch of the W.C.T.U.

Lady SEBRIGHT followed with a live speech. She compared the drink traffic to the African slave trade, speaking of it as "the open sore of England," and urgently appealed to the ladies present to be enthusiastic in their endeavours to help people to throw off the fetters of the slave-master—alcohol.

After a few words from Miss de Broen, Mrs. J. R. Nichols, who has been appointed to the charge of the American W.C.T.U.'s stall in the Paris Exhibition, gave an address, drawing attention to her special work, which consists mainly in the distribution of temperance literature.

The speeches were interspersed with sacred songs admirably rendered by Miss Clara Myers.

The Lord's Day Observance Society.

At the fifty-eighth anniversary of the Lord's Day Observance Society, which was celebrated a few days ago in St. James's Hall, a good account was given of effort in behalf of this truly important movement. Speaking at the breakfast, Lord Kinnaird remarked that he knew twenty or thirty people who are now suffering in mind and body simply from breaking God's law respecting the observance of the Day of Rest. The secretary, Rev. Dr. Gritton, reported with joy of the testimony for the Sabbath which is being borne at the Paris Exhibition by nearly all the English and American exhibitors.

Bishop Alford presided over the public meeting, and in a hearty address, suggested that the Society should arrange for an annual "Lord's Day Observance Society Sunday," on which Christian ministers throughout the country might specially bring the subject before their congregations. Mr. Mark J. Stewart, M.P., maintained that the obligation must rest not on utilitarian principles but on the Word of God. Holding that military cycling and naval manœuvres on the Lord's Day deserve the strongest possible censure, the speaker said he hoped soon to have an opportunity of making his protest in Parliament against such infringements of Sabbath observance.

Archdeacon Richardson having spoken, Mr. Parker Young urged the importance of men being returned to Parliament who will protect the Lord's Day from national desecration. The other speakers included Mr. G. F. Chambers, Revs. G. S. Sutherland and Arthur Hall, and General Heath. On behalf of the meeting, the Chairman signed a petition to Parliament in support of the Sunday closing of public-houses.

Church of England Scripture-Readers' Association.

The Bishop of Marlborough presided over the forty-fifth annual meeting of this Association, held a few days ago at Willis's Rooms, St. James's. An abstract of the report, read by Mr. T. Martin Tubbs, showed that the grants numbered 128, being an increase of eight during the year. The donations to the general fund were less than during the previous year.

In the course of some pointed remarks, the Chairman maintained that knowledge of the Scriptures is the present great need of the masses of the people, who are not insensible of the comfort and hope of the Gospel of Christ. Addressing the Scripture-readers, the Bishop said: "I cannot conceive anything that God can look down upon with greater pleasure than that work which you are engaged in. To me you are indeed, as it were, water-carriers in some tropical city, or sellers of sweet fruits in some of these cities in the East. I know there are many hearts and many lips thirsting and longing for an increase of labourers of this particular character."

Rev. W. Hay Chapman dwelt upon the hard lot of thousands of working people in the West-end. Scepticism and socialism find many sympathisers both among the men and women. Having spoken of the large proportion of the population which live in single rooms, he said: "I know of a poor man who pays 7s. 6d. a week for a ten-foot room for himself and his family. I do not wonder at that man being a Socialist." Having enlarged upon the hard lot of many of the London poor, the speaker dwelt upon the important work done by the Scripture-readers.

After a few words by Rev. Isaac W. Tupper, addresses were delivered by Mr. Abel Smith, M.P., and Lord Ebury.

The Peace Society.

Sir J. W. Pease, M.P., presided over the annual meeting of the Peace Society, which was held on Tuesday evening, last week, in Finsbury Chapel, Moorfields. There was an influential attendance, and the proceedings were characterised by much earnestness. In the report, read by Mr. W. Evans Darby, secretary, allusion was made to recent encouraging evidences that the churches, and some of their influential members and pastors, are becoming increasingly conscious of a real responsibility to God in relation to the duty of doing their utmost to facilitate the adoption of arbitration as a practicable means of settling international difficulties and disputes. It was shown that the Society had during the year done much to inform the public mind on the subject, not only by setting forth the horrors of war, but also by showing how very serviceable arbitration has on many occasions proved during the past three quarters of a century.

In the course of a capital address, the Chairman referred to the signs that the Church of Christ is awakening to a true sense of duty in the matter of peace preservation. We have, he said, as a nation been setting a bad example to other peoples; if, however, the Christian Church would only take up the peace question with firmness, no Government would be able to resist her demands. Mr. A. Illingworth, M.P., having spoken, Canon Fremantle addressed the meeting. Like others, he referred to the important life testimony of the late Mr. Henry Richard, M.P. The other speakers were Mr. Handel Cossham, M.P., Canon Barker, and Rev. E. Smith. The last-named, remarking that Carlyle styled certain teaching the Gospel of Dirt, said that teaching that has anything to do with war might fittingly be called the Gospel of Brute. He urged the desirability of children being taught something better than "playing soldiers." The young must be instructed in peace as well as temperance principles.

The Country Towns Mission.

There was an encouraging attendance at the annual meeting of the Country Towns Mission, held at Exeter Hall a few days ago. The continued need for the operations of the Mission was made abundantly clear; while the warmth of the proceedings augured well for the sustained earnestness of the friends and supporters of the work.

After a few hearty words from Mr. H. C. Nesbit, who occupied the chair, four missionaries delivered brief addresses. Mr. J. Peacefer., of Twyford, told how, in order to put in a word for Christ, he wheeled a truck of coals two miles for a poor woman, who, with a heart full of gratitude, was willing to give ear to a Gospel appeal. More than that, she accepted the glad message, and is now a disciple of Christ. Messrs. G. Shaw (Tunbridge Wells), C. Payne (Stapenhill), and A. H. B. Bennett (Cheltenham), were the other three workers who spoke, and their words were listened to with rapt attention.

The fifty-second annual report, of which an abstract was presented by the secretary, showed an increase of seven in the number of the missionaries, thirty-nine being now at work, besides twenty who are engaged at stations in connection with the Mission. The year's receipts amounted to not quite £3000. The work of the Mission, as Mr. Nesbit pointed out, is wider in its influence than is at first sight apparent. The agents do not establish a mission in some district, and then settle down there; rather, having put the work in order, they leave it as soon as it becomes self-supporting. Local aid is sought wherever possible. Thus, if a nobleman anxious for his tenants, a manager of works thoughtful for his employés, or some overworked clergyman hard pressed for help, seeks the aid of the Society, he will, in all probability, pay part of the agent's salary.

A helpful address was delivered by Rev. H. E. Brooke, who maintained that, with agents working as "men of God," the Society deserves the generous support of Christians who have wealth to bestow.

Gospel Temperance Movement.

The annual meeting of the Gospel Temperance movement was held this year at the head-quarters, Hoxton Hall. The General Committee was anxious that friends interested in the work should see how it was carried on in the centre where the temperance revival of eleven years back was generated. Mr. William I. Palmer, of Reading, presided. The meeting was quite original in its character, and a report of work was presented which indicated a variety of agencies in connection with the general work of the committee. Each official rose, and told the story of the year in connection with his special department of work. Nine large missions were held last year, and 794 honorary deputations were sent out from a list of fifty speakers. The Personal Effort Pledge Book, which has run through five editions, has been the means of securing 60,000 pledges. The secretary and staff have been in correspondence with friends all over the world, which shows that the influence of Hoxton Hall is widespread. Hoxton Hall is really used as a general information office. The agencies include Sunday-school, Band of Hope, Youths' Union, Help Myself Society, Bible-classes, Girls' Guild of Good Life, and Help-one-Another Society: all these are reported as being in a flourishing condition, and as showing a large accession of members during the past year.

There were no "star" speakers at this unique anniversary. There were, instead, testimonies from a number of men and women who had experienced blessing in Hoxton Hall. They told out in simple language of their escape from a bad life. Some of these recitals were touching indeed.

At the close, Mr. Palmer made a sympathetic reference to the absence of Mr. William Noble, who had originated the work, but who is at present compelled, through illness, to abstain from all active service.

Evangelical Continental Society.

The annual meeting of the Evangelical Continental Society was held a few days ago, at Union Chapel, Islington, Rev. Dr. Allon presiding. The secretary, Rev. R. S. Ashton, read extracts from the report, which showed that during the year the Continental workers whose missions are helped by the Society have been permitted to see cheering results of their labours. The income having shown a tendency to decline, nearly all the grants to the committees with which the Society co-operates have had to be reduced.

Rev. Dr. Wright, of the British and Foreign Bible Society, having spoken of the high purposes of the Society, Pasteur E. Barnaud, of Mazamet, France, testified to the great value of the assistance rendered by English Christians to workers in France. Pasteur Appia, of Belgium, addressed the meeting to a like effect, He dwelt upon the sad backwardness of the population. Young women work in the coal pits, and ignorance prevails. Still there are signs of spiritual awakening in some quarters.

The concluding address was by Rev. R. F. Horton, who maintained that the Society is deserving of heartier support than it has received. The great importance of Christian testimony in Catholic countries, led him to a consideration of Romish influence in England. Having been brought up Protestants, we are inclined to think that, though the Vatican has placed England upon her list as the first object of proselytising influence, it is very improble that the country will be won to Rome. ersonally, he believed the result to be pro- ble, because we are so apathetic. Having oken of the strides which the Romish system making in our land, Mr. Horton said: If ngland were wholly awake, one would have doubt about the issue. But for a nation at is only half awake, the Church of Rome ems to be a God-send. I cannot but look on the possibility of a Romanish revival in ngland with great apprehension. If the oman Catholic Church is not likely to win the y, it is probable that the Catholic Church in ngland will win, and except for the supre- acy of the Pope, the latter is not distinguish- le from the former. Having spoken of omanism as heathenism with a little tincture the religion of Christ, Mr. Horton referred to e accommodating methods of the priests, ying: The Catholic minister, the Jesuit, has arnt the art of accepting the necessities of e heathen religion, and saying, "Now, look u, this is Catholicism. We change the name; e thing remains the same." Coming back England, the system uses the same method. finds that we have a strong prejudice in vour of freedom of thought and expression. at we have a strong conviction of truth, and says to Protestant England, "Look you, these e just our theories, our principles. We change e name; you have Catholicism ready made." conclusion, the speaker expressed a hope at Continental pastors would come and tell in England what they know of the system hich blights their own countries.

Salvation Army Rescue Work.

ENERAL BOOTH presided over a large meeting eld on Monday evening in Exeter Hall, by ay of celebrating the anniversary of the escue Work of the Salvation Army. It is but ve years since active efforts were made in this portant direction, but Mrs. Bramwell Booth, ho has charge of the department, was able to eport substantial results. Of 2283 girls re- ived into the Homes, 1789 have turned out tisfactory; no fewer than 1092 of them aving gone into domestic service. Some of hese poor women have led lives as chequered experience as truly miserable in character, ternating between sinful freedom and prison scipline. While, however, a goodly number ave been restored to their parents, and have ntered upon respectable courses of life, many ave learned to love and serve Him who is the nner's friend and Saviour. The expenditure the work was at the rate of less than £7 for very case received. The industries of the omes brought in a considerable sum of money, hile the officers, seventy-seven in number, ave services as much above money estimation they were right heartily rendered.

In the course of a long address, the GENERAL oke of the wide-spread evil of impurity, with s sad physical, moral, and spiritual results. otwithstanding recent legislation, Mrs. Bram- ell Booth has had under her care as many as fty-six poor girls under sixteen years of age. hough not proud of the results thus far chieved, the General expressed himself con- nced that the foundations of a great enter- rise have been laid. Alluding to the drinking abits of the abandoned and outcast classes, e said that but for strong liquor three-fourths f them would find it impossible to lead on heir shameful lives. In connection with the escue work there is an inquiry agency, by eans of which children have been restored parents, and lost friends discovered from l parts of the world. Some of the cases have een remarkably interesting, God's blessing pon the operations of the agency being pecially manifest. In conclusion, Mr. Booth oke of the good work done in the night elters in Whitechapel and elsewhere. We uld not but feel that in these useful endea- urs the Salvation Army has well filled a here largely its own.

Mrs. BRAMWELL BOOTH, in a brief speech, gretted that, owing to insufficient accom- modation, many applicants for admission to the Homes have had to be turned away. She related some touching cases of wanderers from God returning to the paths of virtue. The officers have, on the whole, been much encouraged. She called upon others to join them. The General appealed for funds to carry on and extend the work, and a number of sums were promised.

Christian Blind Relief Society.

THE annual meeting of this Society was held on Monday, at Sion College, Thames Embankment. Mr. JAMES RANKIN, M.P., presided. The report of the Committee stated that there are 203 blind persons residing in twenty different counties in England, besides Scotland and Wales, receiving at the present time pensions of either 2s. 6d. per week or 5s. per month. Many applications are constantly being received, which can only be dealt with by a greatly increased income.

The CHAIRMAN said the Society, by the expenditure of a comparatively small sum of money, is affording an enormous amount of relief, to perhaps the most deserving class of persons in the community. Rev. G. A. M. How said the most valuable feature of the Society's work, in his opinion, was that they administered to the suffering blind at their homes. When it was remembered that there were upwards of 30,000 blind persons in England and Wales, it must be seen how great were the demands upon the Society, and also that it was a Society worthy of the support of all Christians. Rev. E. E. Jenkins, Rev. Gordon Calthrop, Mr. Halley Stewart, and others, advocated the objects of the Society.

The Christian Community.

THIS ancient Metropolitan evangelising agency held its 117th annual meeting in the Lower Exeter Hall on Monday evening, Mr. GEORGE WILLIAMS, its president, occupying the chair. The report presented by Mr. J. Atkinson was a deeply interesting one, and gave details of a great amount of voluntary work, mainly in East London, done by the Society's 400 members, telling of an extension of its operations during the year, and testifying that the blessing of God has been richly realised.

The CHAIRMAN referred to various features of the work, and rejoiced that to so many of the poor the Gospel is preached by the Community's workers. Rev. T. MCCULLAGH, an ex-president of the Wesleyan Conference, recalled some of his pleasant experiences with members of the Community over thirty years ago. He admired them because they preach Christ, by going in and out amongst the people in their homes, and visiting them in the workhouses and common lodging-houses, not forgetting the slums. Rev. Dr. TYLER, a very old friend of the Community, also had some interesting reminiscences to relate of his early experiences in the East-end. Mr. F. A. BEVAN said they should endeavour to interest the West-enders, who owe a deep debt of gratitude to these Christian agencies, more in such a grand work.

Rev. R. CULLEY moved a resolution urging that greater exertions should be made to evangelise the masses of London, and spoke in very cordial terms of the labours of the Community in the low lodging-houses, the wards of workhouses, and in the open air. Mr. GAWIN KIRKHAM put emphasis upon the fact that it is not more agencies that are wanted, but greater exertion on the part of those already at work. Rev. GORDON J. H. LLEWELLYN, chaplain of St. George's Workhouse, also spoke a few hearty words, testifying to the devotion of the Community's workers.

PROFESSOR STOKES, M.P.—It will be gratifying to many to observe that among the honours which marked the Queen's birthday a baronetcy was conferred on Dr. Stokes, who is not only President of the Royal Society, but, as a Christian philosopher, President of the Victoria Institute. He was born in Ireland in 1819.

MRS. HILTON'S CRECHE.

THE usual biennial sale of work in aid of the funds of this excellent institution was formally opened at Cannon-street Hotel on Monday afternoon by the Countess of Aberdeen. There was an excellent display of fancy work and other saleable articles, contributed by many friends. Most attractive of all were the babies from the Crèche, reposing peacefully in their cots, and the contingent of elder children from the Home, who looked their prettiest and sang their sweetest.

Mr. Hilton, on behalf of his wife, read an address setting forth the objects and progress of the institution. The Countess in reply said that all hearts must be drawn out towards such a work and those under its care. She then declared the sale open. The weather was somewhat unfavourable on the opening day, but we trust that during the three days of the sale a goodly sum was realised wherewith to replenish the coffers of one of the most useful works in the East of London.

MR. WILLIAM NOBLE, who returned to London some short time since, has experienced another relapse. He will leave London again, and remain in the country for six months. The doctors have every hope that he will be fully restored to health at the end of that period, and quite prepared for work. The constant strain attending the Blue Ribbon Revival of past years has told heavily upon him, but we trust it is only a question of time and absolute rest.

GOSPEL PURITY ASSOCIATION.—On Monday week an address on the subject of Social Purity was delivered to Christian workers and parents of both sexes in the Bethel Mission, Henley-street, Battersea Park-road, by Wallace J. Gladwin, who is on a visit to this country from India en route for America. Several purity pledges were taken at the close of the meeting, and arrangements made for the formation of a branch of the Gospel Purity Association in this district.

ANTI-SUNDAY-TRAVELLING UNION.—The annual meeting was held on Thursday week at Exeter Hall. Since the formation of the Union, fifty-eight local secretaries have been registered from different localities. Addresses on behalf of the objects of the Union were delivered by Mr. G. F. Chambers. Rev. W. J. Watkins, Mr. W. L. Tweedie, and others. Particulars of the Union can be had on application to the secretaries, 18, Christchurch-road, Brondesbury, London, N.W.

MEMORIAL HALL, DARTFORD.—A committee has been formed with the object of providing a suitable building where the work in connection with the Dartford Young Men's Bible-class (as also other Protestant and evangelical work) can be carried on. It was mainly through the instrumentality of these young men that the Kent Martyrs' Memorial was restored, and evangelical Protestants are now asked to aid in this work. The treasurer is Mr. Edwin Sharp, West Hill Lodge, Dartford, Kent.

Y.M.C.A. MAY BREAKFAST.—The annual May Breakfast of the Aldersgate-street Association was held on Thursday week, at six o'clock, under the presidency of Mr. George Williams, who was accompanied by his wife. Over 100 young men and friends were assembled. The Chairman, in referring to the work of the Association, said they had to report victory all along the line. Rev. B. W. Chancellor, incumbent of Christ Church, Sidcup, spoke to the young men on the words, "Be strong in the Lord," asking them to regard them as a command, a warning, and an encouragement. Rev. T. Eynon Davies, of Finsbury-park, advised the young men not only to have a healthy mind in a healthy body, but to have a healthy heart and a healthy soul. Speaking on amusements, he urged them not to go to any that would deprive them of their sleep or lead them to neglect their duties, or to go to any place where they would not be willing to have their sainted mother on one side and their pure-minded sister on the other. He besought them to stand by the faith, and to have a faith to stand by. Addresses were also delivered by Dr. Browning, of Edinburgh, a former member, who is going abroad in connection with the Medical Mission; Messrs. Russell and Henson, secretaries of the Tower Hamlets and Finsbury-park Associations; Mr. Kennedy, from Scotland; Rev. T. Perry, East Dulwich; and Messrs. J. Pearce, Hind-Smith, and J. H. Putterill.

A MISSIONARY VALEDICTORY.

Farewell meetings to commend to God several out-going missionaries from the East London Institute were held at Harley House last week. A correspondent writes:—

We had a very pleasant time. After the afternoon meeting and tea we had nearly an hour and a half in the open-air on the lawn, with admirable testimony from Mr. Mowl, who has been five years in Jamaica. He was followed by one of the brethren just going to that island. A Moravian, Mr. Kirchner, also gave a word; he is on his way to a German university in America. In the evening three of the brethren who are going out spoke, each of them admirably, and an exhortation was given by Dr. Bennett, of Worthing. Mr. T. A. Denny took the chair both afternoon and evening, and we concluded by having the Lord's Supper.

The chief features of the afternoon gathering were addresses from Mr. Dressler, who has been working among the Jews of North Africa, and a word from one of the brethren who is joining him in that effort; then an address from Pastor Frank White, whose loving words are always appreciated. Dr. Grattan Guinness gave a short outline of the various centres to which the brethren are going, including South Africa, and Mr. Spencer Walton's new Cape Mission, which is being joined by an earnest young evangelist, Mr. Walklett, from Harley House.

Evangelistic Notes.

Mr. George King has been holding evangelistic services at Wimbledon, Peckham, and in Lady Ashburton's Hall at Croydon, with gratifying results.

Mr. Herbert R. Francis has returned to England from America where he has been evangelising for fifteen months with much blessing. His address for a time will be 15, Chisholm-road, Richmond, Surrey.

Mr. and Mrs. J. S. Harrison, from Australia, have held an eight days' mission at Kidderminster, in the Baptist Chapel. The Christians have been greatly refreshed, and many souls have professed to receive Christ Jesus the Lord.

Hadleigh, Suffolk.—In connection with the Congregational Chapel a most successful seven days' mission has just been conducted by Rev. Robert Balgarnie, late of Scarborough. During and since the mission over a hundred have found their way into the inquiry-rooms and have made a public profession of faith in Christ as their Saviour. Mr. Balgarnie's influence over the children is an especial feature of his work.

Malmesbury, Wilts.—During the past three weeks Mr. John Elliott has been conducting tent services in this town. All classes of people have attended. This is the third mission the evangelist has conducted here during the past thirteen months at the invitation of the Y.M.C.A., but at no previous mission has such large congregations been drawn together. The Gospel message was accompanied with power, and many will thank God for the evangelist's visits to Malmesbury.

Coupar Angus, N.B.—Some time since we published a short paragraph sent by a correspondent stating that the results of a mission carried on by Mr. Canning in this place had not been satisfactory. Rev. J. Masson, F.C. minister, in the hall of whose church the meetings were held, writes to say that the statements in the paragraph were incorrect. He says: "I can assure you it has been most fruitful of blessing to God's people and to the unsaved. In spite of very wet and stormy weather which continued nearly the whole time, the attendance steadily increased until the hall where the meetings were held was quite full." We are very glad to be able to make this contradiction.

Church Parochial Mission Society.—The following missions have been arranged for the month of June. It is hoped they will be made a subject of prayer by our readers:—Revs. W. Hay Aitken and Jas. Stephens: June 15 to 30, St. Mary's, Low Harrogate. Canon Atherton: June 4 to 7, Stoodleigh, Devon. Rev. J. P. Cushing: June, Mission Hall, Paris Exhibition. Rev. R. Catterall: May 27 to June 4, St. James', Birch, Manchester. Rev. Dr. Morris: June 22 to July 5, St. Paul's, Newport, Mon.

MORAVIANS AMONG THE LEPERS.

Dear Sir,—The public mind has been deeply stirred by the touching story of Father Damien, and one can only hope that the tide of sympathy evoked may be caused to flow in generous support of the work he has begun at Molokai with such self-sacrificing devotion.

But in view of the proposed conference on leprosy, and of the wide-spread interest awakened in the subject, I would venture to remind your readers that this self-denying labour of love amongst lepers is being and has been carried on by the Moravians (English and German) for more than half a century. In 1818, long before the brave Father was thought of, a Moravian missionary and his English wife entered upon their perilous duties at the Leper Hospital for Hottentots in South Africa; and Robben Island, with its hundreds of pitiable sufferers, is a standing witness to many years of devoted and successful effort.

In 1867 a similar work of mercy was begun amongst the numerous lepers in Jerusalem. The original asylum, once enlarged to meet the growing demand for admission, has now been superseded by a capacious building, and at this moment no fewer than four devoted Moravians—God's heroes, indeed!—are consecrating their lives to this service. If only to quicken interest in a work so dear to the Master's heart, Father Damien will not have lived or died in vain.

Yours truly, W. Wetton Cox,
Clerical Secretary London Association in aid of Moravian Missions.

HOMES FOR LITTLE BOYS.—On Saturday afternoon the Lord Mayor of London, with the Lady Mayoress, paid a visit to the Homes for Orphan Boys at Swanley, Kent. The Homes are arranged on the village plan similar to those at Farningham. At Swanley about 200 orphan boys dwell in family groups presided over by an adoptive father and mother, receive an efficient schooling, and at a later age are put under efficient technical instruction to fit them for the battle of life. The Lord Mayor and Lady Mayoress inspected the various class-rooms and workshops where the lads were at work, and expressed their gratification at what they saw of the institutions.

YOUNG WOMEN IN PARIS.—The Paris Exhibition Home, in connection with the Y.W.C.A, is now open, and is very much appreciated. It started with eleven boarders. On Wednesday, May 22, the work of the Home was inaugurated by a prayer-meeting, conducted by Rev. Howard Gill. The house can accommodate eighteen young women, and can also, if necessary, provide meals for those who are employed in the Exhibition, but who do not live in the Home. Those who have lived in Paris know how great are the temptations to which English girls are subjected. Here they will find Christian friends ready to give them loving counsel and help. The young women are most thankful, while those who cannot live in the Home, such as the girls employed by Spiers and Pond, frequent and use the rooms. Help for this much-needed work may be sent to Miss Manning, hon. secretary, 316, Regent-street, W.

WORKING LADS IN WHITECHAPEL.—The eleventh annual exhibition and sale of members' work in connection with the Whitechapel Institute, took place on Friday and Saturday. The exhibition comprised a large number of exhibits of work done by the boys in their spare hours. The distribution of prizes to successful competitors took place on Saturday evening, and there was a large attendance. The prizes were distributed by Lady Stevenson, who said she could not think of anything that could be more useful to boys in that locality. The institution was one which encouraged habits of thrift and industry, and taught the boys to educate themselves instead of spending their time, as she was afraid many boys did in that district, in idleness. The work they learned to do there would not only be useful to them, and be for their own good, but it might also enable them to do good for others when they had it in their power. Such an establishment as this was needed in every large town of the kingdom.

Letter to the Editor.

THE BALOLO PEOPLE.

Dear Sir,—In your issue of February 15 las under the article entitled "Lost—a Heathen Hors Shoe," a statement is made, in speaking of th Balolo people and Mission, which is very mis leading. I would be glad if you would kindl correct it.

In the report of Mr. Graham Wilmot Brooke address it is stated that "the Church of Christ, a a result of that particular Mission, is to-day 25 strong, and from that station alone two of the bes preachers—natives—have been sent into the interio to preach Christ."

Now, the Equator Station, where I have bee working for the past eighteen months, is the onl mission station among the Balolo people at presen and no incident of the kind referred to ever too place there. The only station on the Congo wher such a thing happened was Banza Manteke, station of the A.B.M. Union, about 400 mile from the Balolo people, and no preachers have eve been sent into the interior from there; although i is true that native converts have gone evangelisin about fifty miles from Banza Manteke.

I should only be too glad if the report wer correct, but up to the present date none of th Balolo people have been received into the Churc of Christ.—Yours truly, Chas. B. Banks.
Equator Station, A.B.M.U., Congo.

THE SELF-HELP EMIGRATION SOCIETY, a outgrowth of the London Congregational Union' philanthropic work, has during the present seaso sent out 600 emigrants, principally to Canada, an proposes to make up the number to 1000. A part of 70 left London last week.

BLACKGANG MISSION, ISLE OE WIGHT.— For fifteen years the Lord has greatly blessed thi agency. Not only have the farm labourers of th district and their families had means of grace pu within their reach through the Mission, but hun dreds of visitors have learned the way of the Lord while seeking health and recreation in the island A recent convert, Mr. E. E. Waterfield, has bee doing good work in neighbouring places, and i France. The Sunday-school is a great blessing The responsibility of the work lies upon Mrs Reade, of Stonehenge, Blackgang, I.W., who i greatly aided by Miss Reade and other friends.

WESTGATE-ON-SEA.—Sir,—During recen visits to Westgate-on-Sea, we have become acquain ted with an unpretending, but interesting Christia work in connection with the Y.W.C.A., carried o by a young friend there. I commend this littl association to any friends who are likely to visi this quiet but healthful spot. Margate air without any of Margate's drawbacks is Westgate's attrac tion. From local circumstances it has been found very difficult to raise sufficient means for the necessary expenses. Friends may communicate with Miss Edith Allen, Mountfield, Westgate-on-Sea.— I am, &c., W. Meynell Whittemore.

PASTOR JACOB, OROOMIAH.—I would endorse and emphasise the appeal respecting Pastor Jacob contained in a recent issue. The pastor and his wife are true and earnest Christian labourers, and are pursuing a quiet work among their Mohammedan neighbours—a work which has been greatly owned of God. The good man was too trustful, but the fact remains that he has been victimised to the extent of £200, and that, unless relief be forthcoming, he will be utterly ruined. For the two or three donations which have been received we are truly thankful, but further help is much needed.
T. W. Brown, D.D.,

THE DONEGAL INDUSTRIAL FUND, which has its headquarters at Donegal House, 43, Wigmore-street, W., has given employment both to distressed ladies and others in Ireland, and has taught them new modes of gaining a livelihood. They have proved themselves very apt pupils, and some of the work recently exhibited at Donegal House, where a number of Irish girls have been trained by Miss Una Taylor in art and ecclesiastical embroidery, is exquisite. Donegal House is well worthy of a visit from all who care to see how much can be done by personal interest and wise help. Besides, visitors will be able to show their practical sympathy by becoming customers of an establishment where they can buy many useful and beautiful things at remarkably moderate prices.—The Hospital.

The Book World.

HE latest "Friendly Letter," written by Miss M. Skinner, of Bath, and published by Messrs. rrold & Sons, is addressed to dustmen and cross-g sweepers. It is interesting in form and practical teaching.

Once again the readers of "Cassell's National brary" (3d.) are presented with a volume of rse by a living poet. No. 175 of the series is THE EGENDS OF ST. PATRICK, by Aubrey de Vère, L.D. Students of early Irish history will find in is book much to interest them. It is certainly a ry attractive presentation of stories which are in me cases charming in a high degree.

CHRISTIAN COMPULSION; or, The Seven Musts Christ. By Rev. G. C. Williamson. 1s. J. J. orwood. Under this appropriate title, the writer llects seven simple but suggestive and vigorous scourses on sayings of our Lord. The "must" suffering, of friendship, of restriction, and of mpletion are specially worth reading, quotations d illustrations being well worked in. These dresses are good specimens of "topical" treat-ent of Scripture, and will aid young preachers d busy workers.

Dr. Donald Fraser has published, in a small lume entitled SEVEN PROMISES EXPOUNDED s. Nisbet & Co.), seven discourses on the Epistles the Asiatic Churches in the opening chapters of evelation. The expositions are lucid and most actical in their application to present-day con-ions of church life. A chapter is added on he cognate topic—the victory of saints over the ragon." There is a welcome avoidance of fanci-l interpretation, and the little book will help to umine an important part of the sacred writings.

THE CHRISTIAN TRAVELLER'S CONTINENTAL ANDBOOK. By Rev. R. S. Ashton. This is a urth edition, enlarged, of a very useful compila-n, by the secretary of the Evangelical Continen- Society. The chief aim has been to direct ention to evangelistic and other operations on e Continent, and to facilitate a visit to some of em. In the case of France, several short tours ve been sketched out. Details are given as to aces in which English services are held, and the dresses of Bible and tract depôts are also fur-shed. Temperance work is not overlooked, and together the book will be valued by Christian vellers.

FIRST STEPS TO GOD. By Samuel Pearson. 1s. ligious Tract Society. This second and abridged ition of the author's "Home to God" will, we ust, prove an effectual guide to many beginners the spiritual life. Not a few of the questions ich arise in the minds of earnest inquirers are mirably answered, and the appeal to the reader always plain and pointed. The style is essen-lly practical. While this characteristic will ubtless make the book specially attractive to ose for whom it is intended, it is, we suspect, sponsible for an occasional statement of Scrip-re teaching in terms which many mature Chris-ns must regard as insufficient.

SIR JOHN FRANKLIN: the True Secret of the scovery of his Fate. A "Revelation." By J. Skewes. Bemrose & Sons. This book will, we pe, be read by experts in Arctic research, and her corroborated or repudiated. According to e circumstantial statements of the author, the ht course to the Erebus and Terror was pernaturally revealed to a young child, and only hen that course was implicitly followed did ccess attend McClintock and Sherard Osborn. he brief summary of unsuccessful expeditions is general interest, and the account of the last, ing more detailed, is capable of close criticism. vo maps of the N.-W. region make the letter-ess easier to follow.

THE THRESHOLD OF MANHOOD. By Rev. W. J. wson. 3s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton. We have re fourteen truly admirable sermons to young n—admirable alike in tone, in method, and in tter. Mr. Dawson is not afraid to handle any the burning questions of the time, whether in realm of thought or of action. He brings to discussion of them a well-furnished and gorous intellect, and a heart full of sympathy th the peculiar difficulties of thoughtful young n. As a defender of the Christian faith, and an ex-under of the Christian life in its practical, every-y aspects, he shows himself in these sermons to be once capable, faithful, and wise. Such manly, out-oken counsel to young men is too seldom met th, and we wish for the volume a great congrega-n of readers.

CAPTAIN LOBE, by John Law (3s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton) is the reprint of a serial story that appeared in the columns of The British Weekly. It purports to illustrate Salvation Army work in the East of London. Certainly it gives a very graphic picture of the humbler phases of industrial life in that part of our great city. The author makes his leading character express the opinion that if Christianity had continued to be what it was at first there would be no hungry men or starving women in England to-day. The narrative is extremely readable, and the interest is well sustained.

THAT BLESSED HOPE. By John Ford. 3d. S. W. Partridge & Co. A brief and lucid statement of Scripture teaching concerning the appearing of the Lord in glory.

The last four issues of Horner's "Penny Stories for the People," are: WOPS THE WAIFE, a Story of London Arab Life, by Sydney Watson; DUDLEY CARLTON'S WIFE, by Fannie Eden; DOROTHY, by M. E. L.; and FORGIVEN AT LAST an Australian Story, by Sydney Watson.

The two latest issues of the excellent "Short Biographies for the People" series are devoted to ALEXANDER DUFF, D.D., LL.D., by William Ballantyne, M.A.; and BASIL OF CÆSAREA, by Dr. S. G. Green. Both contain a large amount of information, concerning men whose lives teach many and important lessons.

PREACHING "THE KINGDOM OF GOD" is the title of a penny pamphlet, to be had post free from Mr. J. Van Sommer, Cuffnells, Wimbledon-common, perusal of its pages will help many to a better understanding of the Scriptures; therefore, we hope that many of our readers will procure it, and well digest its contents.

FRIENDLY COUNSELS ON JOINING THE CHURCH. By W. Summers. 4d. E. Stock. Written chiefly for circulation in the author's own church at Epsom, this booklet is calculated to interest and instruct a wide circle of readers. The duties and privileges of church members are set forth with simplicity, and in terms of affectionate solicitude.

A LIBERAL OFFER TO SUNDAY-SCHOOL TEACHERS.—A gentleman has offered to bear the loss of supplying a limited number of copies of the annual volume of The Teacher at Work, to Sunday-school teachers, at half price, viz., at One Shilling each. Those wishing to receive the volume post free should send fourpence extra, in stamps, to Mr. Elliot Stock, 62, Paternoster-row, London, E.C.

IN MEMORIAM: THOMAS IRVING WHITE. A sermon preached in Clifton-road Church, Brighton, on April 28, by Rev. Wm. Crosbie. 2d. Brighton: D. B. Friend, 77, Western-road. A thoughtful and gracious discourse, suggested by the death of a true servant of God. Mr. White was in his ninetieth year, having for sixty or seventy years been an active worker in the cause of religion, temperance, education, and social reform.

PRAYER AND ITS ANSWER in connection with Mission Effort and Success is a valuable little brochure from the pen of Rev. Charles Bullock, reprinted from The Day of Days. (1d. "Home Words" Office, 7, Paternoster-square, E.C.) It is designed to show how inseparably all mission work, home or foreign, should be associated with prayer, and is especially appropriate at this season of "May Meetings," when such work is absorbing so much attention.

TWELVE YEARS' TRIAL OF THE VIVISECTION ACT. By M.R.C.S. 3d. Swan Sonnenschein & Co. This pamphlet shows that the Act, 39 and 40 Vic., cap. 77, which was designed to prevent cruelty to dumb creatures by scientific experimenters, has quite failed of its noble purpose. A sad account is given of proceedings which will certainly one day be declared to exhibit wanton inhumanity. Actions which are morally wrong cannot be shown to be scientifically right.

THE MARTYR ISLANDS OF THE NEW HEBRIDES AND ADJACENT GROUPS. By Robert Young. Edinburgh: Macniven & Wallace. A sketch of absorbing interest. Though in many respects saddening, the story is essentially hopeful, for it shows that superstitious murderers have, under Gospel discipline, become tamed, and found in Christ their heart's great need and desire. Issued in behalf of the New Hebrides Mission, this pamphlet will, we hope, enlist new friends for that important Christian enterprise.

Messrs. Weldon & Co., 7, Southampton-street, Strand, W.C., publish a series of monthlies which will be found very useful by dressmakers, mothers of families, and others who ply the needle. THE ILLUSTRATED DRESSMAKER and BAZAAR OF CHILDREN'S FASHIONS are published at 1d. a number; PRACTICAL CROCHET at 2d.; LADIES' JOURNAL at 3d.; and JOURNAL OF COSTUMES at 6d. Illustrations are numerous, also patterns and coloured plates. Utility does not seem, as a rule, to be sacrificed to the latest novelty in fashion.

GREAT ASSEMBLY HALL, MILE END.—On three evenings last week, Mr. James Dupe, of Nottingham, addressed goodly gatherings in this hall. He told the story of his conversion from a rough, wandering life, and described some of his experiences as a colporteur and open-air evangelist. With the narrative were intermingled stirring evangelistic appeals, which seemed to make considerable impression on the people. We hope soon to give a portrait and sketch of the life of Mr. Dupe.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

HOME.

The Catholic Temperance Society, the League of the Cross, is making great progress.

There are Liverpool breweries, it is stated, wherein a free tap is kept for the "guardians of the peace."

The Glasgow police are looking vigorously after shebeens. When liquor is found at such places it is destroyed.

At Newport, Mon., a temperance hall has been erected at a cost of £7000, in memory of the life-long labours of Mr. Henry Phillips, J.P.

The Carrubbers'-close Mission temperance meetings, notwithstanding lengthening days, continue largely attended and successful.

The Chief Constable of Forfarshire reports that the Early Closing Act, in operation in the county for twelve months, has greatly promoted sobriety.

A memorial signed by 1100 magistrates in Ireland says that the excessive number of public-houses in that country are the cause of most of its crime and poverty.

Father Ignatius, we regret to learn (says The Temperance Record), spoke against temperance reform and Sunday closing during a service in the Westminster Town Hall.

The United Presbyterian Ministers' Society has had a fairly prosperous year. Twenty ministers and one missionary joined during the year. The total membership is now 349.

The Nursing Record gives an interesting account of the establishment for female inebrietes, conducted by Mrs. Theobald, at Tower House, Leicester, to which extensive additions have recently been made.

Rev. Thomas Evans, so widely known as the pioneer of temperance work in India, says he hopes, and has reason to believe, the outstill system is doomed to a speedy and perpetual death. The query is, After the outstill, what?

Rev. G. W. McCree, in a lecture at Reigate, stated that he had often visited the common lodging-houses in St. Giles', and preached the Gospel in them, and that some of the worst people he found there were highly educated persons, but drink had debased them beyond measure.

The London County Council, by its spirited action says The Temperance Record, has taken an encouraging first step in a direction which redounds to the credit of its members. "The Beaufort Arms" public-house was acquired, and has been demolished in connection with the construction of Battersea-bridge. The Council, by a vote of sixty-eight to seventeen decided that it was undesirable to preserve the licence.

FOREIGN.

In New Caledonia the sale of intoxicants is illegal.

A Native Women's Christian Temperance Association has been formed in South Africa.

Under the new high licence law, the liquor saloons in Boston, U.S.A., have been reduced from 3000 to 780.

A temperance society 1000 strong now exists at Honolulu. A revival of religion came first; the temperance wave followed.

Through the French Temperance Society, with Government sanction, rewards for sobriety are to be given to soldiers in the French army.

The Maharajah of the State of Baroda and his entire court are earnest total abstainers, but the British Government by its licensing system thwarts their efforts.

A scientific congress for the study of questions concerning alcoholism will, under the presidency of M. Léon Say, the economist and State Minister, be held at 84, Grenelle-street, Paris, on July 29, 30, and 31.

The Massachusetts clergy have been questioned on the matter of prohibition. Of 1039, 937 were in favour of the policy. The 259 replies from Methodist Episcopal ministers were all favourable; of 202 Baptists only one said no.

Teetotalers are to be well cared for at the Paris Exhibition. A teetotal public-house, under the auspices of the Société Philanthropique and patronage of Prince D'Arenburg, has been established at the end of the Esplanade des Invalides.

Mr. Matthew Burnett speaks of coming to England from Australia. He was well known in Yorkshire at one time as an able and earnest evangelist. He has, by persistent effort, secured more sterling pledges than any other man in the Southern Colonies; thousands owe him a debt of gratitude.

A correspondent of The New York Observer, writing of the results of Prohibition in Kansas, says:—"As I walked up and down the streets of the cities and towns I noted the absence of ragged and woebegone women and children, slatternly houses with old hats for window-panes, and all those other signs of extreme poverty which are always found in close juxtaposition to the dram-shops. I saw no beggars on the streets, nor anyone, young or old, who appeared to be suffering for the want of proper food or clothing. I could hardly say this of any day I pass in my own village in the East, where there are over fifty saloons. Pauperism in Kansas has never been large in amount, but it is becoming smaller and smaller every year as the result of the law which closes up the pauper factories, otherwise known as dram-shops."

PASTEUR MASSIS, formerly of Brighton, has been appointed to the charge of the French Protestant Church in London, in succession to the late Pasteur D'Augars. The church temporarily meets in the Athenæum Hall, 73, Tottenham-court-road, the old church opposite St. Martin's-le-Grand having been pulled down to make way for an extension of Post-office buildings.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

Rev. H. W. Webb-Peploe is progressing favourably, and no ill-effects are anticipated from the operation which he recently underwent.

The Bishop of Moosonee left England last week on his return to resume his work in his immense diocese in the far North-West of Canada.

Rev. Herbert Muir, curate of Holy Trinity, Wallington, Surrey, has been appointed secretary of the Church Parochial Mission Society, in succession to Rev. H. Armstrong Hall.

Rev. J. S. Flynn, Missions to Seamen chaplain at Falmouth, has been appointed rector of St. Mewan, St. Austell. Mr. Flynn will be much missed at Falmouth, where he has been a great support to evangelical truth.

The election by household suffrage of a clergyman for the parish of St. John, Deritend, took place at Birmingham on Saturday. The chief competitors were Rev. W. O. West, an Evangelical, and Rev. C. J. Sneath, a High Broad Churchman. Mr. West was returned by 6,072 votes, Mr. Sneath polling 5,038.

Rev. Canon R. B. Girdlestone, who has been Principal of Wycliffe Hall, Oxford, since its foundation in 1877 has resigned the post, feeling that the work ought to be put into younger hands. Canon Girdlestone has accepted the charge of St. John's, Hampstead, vacated by Rev. Gilbert Karney's transference to Melton Mowbray, and it is understood that he will be succeeded at Wycliffe Hall by Rev. F. J. Chavasse, vicar of St. Peter le-Bailey, Oxford.

Rev. Canon Christopher is making an appeal for funds to erect a new church in his parish of St. Aldate's, Oxford. It is impossible to over-estimate the importance of having another evangelical church in the city of Oxford, the centre of sacerdotalism. The effects of work done in an Oxford parish are felt all over England. Canon Christopher's work in St. Aldate's is a remarkable proof of this. In every county in England there are to be found clergymen who have reason to thank God for the meetings at St. Aldate's rectory which they attended in their undergraduate days.

BAPTIST.

The jubilee of the Baptist College at Haverfordwest is shortly to be celebrated. Nearly two hundred former students of this college are engaged in active work as Baptist pastors and missionaries.

Rev. T. J. Hazzard has lately been recognised as pastor of the church at Blackthorn-street, Bow, E. Mr. Hazzard writes:—"Will you ask your readers to pray for great spiritual power for me in this difficult sphere? The majority of the people go to no place of worship, and the chapel, right in the centre of the population, is sadly neglected. Will your readers pray that we may fill the chapel and bring many souls to Jesus. Also thank God for several gracious answers to prayer in the shape of conversions which have already taken place."

In connection with the North-West Kent Baptist Association, a special Conference on "Power for Service" was held at Queen-street Chapel, Woolwich, a few days since. Rev. F. B. Meyer and others took part in the afternoon conference. At a public meeting in the evening, Rev. J. E. Martin, of Erith, read a paper on "The Church's Need of Power," and Rev. F. B. Meyer spoke on "How this Power may be obtained." Collections were taken during the day to establish a loan fund to help the church to erect mission-rooms in the villages.

CONGREGATIONAL.

Rev. W. C. Willoughby, who was for some time a missionary in Central Africa, has commenced his duties as pastor of Union-street Chapel, Brighton.

A series of lectures on Mohammedanism is about to be delivered at Cheshunt Congregational College by Rev. E. Sell, B.D., of the Church Missionary Society.

A Congregational church is to be erected at the village of Chingford, by Epping Forest. The late Mr. James Spicer being buried there, his family have become the chief contributors to it, in memory of their father.

Rev. Dr. Parker, of the City Temple, addressed the Junior Clergy Society, at Sion College, on Tuesday afternoon, on "Preaching," about fifty clergymen being present. He said they must have in the pulpit a ministry that was strong, sympathetic, and not afraid of the immediate questions of the time.

News has been received of the death, at Cape Town, South Africa, of Rev. William Thompson, father of Rev. R. Wardlaw Thompson, foreign secretary of the London Missionary Society. For thirteen years the late Mr. Thompson was an agent of the London Missionary Society in South India; but in 1849, having accepted the pastorate of Union Chapel, Cape Town, his connection as a missionary of the Society ceased, though for many years he acted as general treasurer for the South African Missions.

The University of St. Andrews, Scotland, has conferred the honorary degree of LL.D. upon Rev. W. Wyatt Gill, of Sydney. Dr. Gill laboured upwards of thirty-three years as a missionary in the Hervey Group, South Pacific, in connection with the London Missionary Society, and was one of the founders of the New Guinea Mission. He is the author of "Life in the Southern Isles," and "Jottings from the Pacific," and joint author with Rev. James Chalmers of "Work and Adventure in New Guinea." Dr. Gill has lately carried through the press for the Bible Society an edition of the Rarotongan Bible, upon the revision of which he has been engaged for several years.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Rev. George Steen, Presbyterian minister from Ireland, has been taking part in meetings at Dr. Barnardo's Home, Regent's Park Chapel (Rev. F. B. Meyer's), and other places, with much acceptance.

Rev. W. Thow, of Formosa, and Rev. W. Duffus, of Swatow, have just arrived in England on furlough. Dr. and Mrs. Riddel, of the Hak-ka Mission, Dr. and Mrs. MacLeish, and Mrs. Ede, are on their way home.

At the invitation of its minister, the congregation of the English Presbyterian Church at Cardiff set apart a day during the week before last for consecration and prayer. A prayer-meeting was held at eight in the morning, a Bible-reading in the afternoon, and a mission service in the evening. All the meetings were well attended, and it is proposed to hold these "consecration days" once a month.

METHODIST.

Rev. Charles Garrett has opened a Home for friendless and destitute lads in connection with the Soho Mission, Liverpool.

The London Mission Band Union have decided to send a strong detachment to the Epsom races, and throughout next week they will hold services on the heath.

A new chapel and school have been opened at Lincoln Fields, Leeds. The sermon was preached by Rev. Peter Thompson, of the East London Wesleyan Mission, who spoke at the evening meeting on salient features of his work.

A new departure in Methodism has been made in connection with Woodhouse Moor Church, Leeds, by the opening in Hyde-park-road, in that town, of what is to be known as the Wesley House Association, the object of which is to provide for the mental and moral improvement of its members, to furnish rational recreation, and to promote various forms of Christian work.

At the recent annual missionary meeting of the Wesleyan Church in Paris, friends from several of the different English-speaking churches were present, and on the platform, besides the French Wesleyan pastor, and the English Wesleyan ministers, were the English Church clergyman, Rev. T. Howard Gill; the pastor of the American Church, Rev. Dr. Thurber; and Mr. J. M. Weylland.

The Committee appointed to consider the future working of the City-road Wesleyan Circuit, after careful consideration, has decided to recommend Conference to adopt the special preachers scheme suggested last year. By this scheme one resident minister will be appointed as superintendent of the circuit, and the City-road Chapel will be made a sort of Methodist "cathedral," the pulpit being supplied on various Sundays throughout the year by some of the best ministers in Wesleyan Methodism, specially selected for the purpose.

A meeting was lately held in Grafton-road Primitive Methodist Chapel, Kentish Town, to take leave of Rev. W. N. Barleycorn, a native African missionary, who sailed last week for his home in Western Africa. For the last two years Mr. Barleycorn has been residing in Europe, partly to attend a series of great missionary conventions, and partly to pass through a university course in Spain, so as to be fully qualified to take charge of the educational work connected with the missionary operations in Fernando Po. During his stay in England, he has been extensively employed in preaching and speaking on missionary matters.

NOTES FROM SCOTLAND.

The General Assemblies of the Established and Free Churches of Scotland are in full session this week.

The Chair of Church History in Aberdeen University is vacant by the death of Professor Christie, on Friday last.

After the evening services in the churches an open-air evangelistic meeting is to be held at the Cross, Bell's-hill, through the summer season.

Open-air preaching is being vigorously carried on in Cambuslang by the Baptists, the Christian Brethren, and the Evangelistic Association.

A most interesting meeting was held on Friday last, in Cowcaddens Free Church, Glasgow, to declare the extinction of the heavy debt of £3300, which has rested on the church during the five and a half years' pastorate of Rev. Wm. Ross.

The three young people who have been accepted as missionaries to Morocco, representing the Ayrshire Christian Union, viz., Miss Reid, Catrine; Mr. Bowie, Kilbarchan; and Mr. David Muir, of Dalry, intend leaving for Morocco in the latter end of June.

Rev. R. Lawson, parish minister of Maybole, is utilising the fruit of his sojourn in India in his new series of annual open-air services. The great religions of the world, as studied by him during his tour in the East, will be the theme of these popular addresses.

Peter Laing, the Elgin patriarch, now in his 105th year, was among the communicants at the South Free Church, Elgin, who on a recent Sunday sat down for the first time as members of the church. During his long term of life Peter has been a rough quarry carter, and has seldom or never entered a place of worship. At the eleventh hour, however, he has acknowledged his allegiance to Christ and his entrance into a new life.

The annual returns of the Free Church as to membership and finance have been published. So far as the returns bear on membership they go to show that at March 31 the total number of "members and adherents" was 332,834, a decrease of 284 as compared with 1888, but an increase of 1592 as compared with 1887. As to finances, the total sum raised for the various objects of the Church during the year was £638,939, an increase of £46,083 as compared with 1888. All the leading funds of the Church share in this increase.

NOTES FROM IRELAND.

Pastor Charles Merle D'Aubigné has been in Dublin, preaching and delivering addresses on the subject of missionary work in Belgium.

Gospel services, in which much good is believed to have been done, have been held by Rev. James Kirkwood, in the Methodist Church, Mallow, co. Cork.

The Church Army is doing a valuable work in the North of Ireland. The reports, which were submitted to the annual meeting just held at Belfast, were generally of a hopeful and encouraging character.

Amongst other visitors to Belfast during the past week were Rev. James Morison, D.D., of Glasgow, the eminent commentator and founder of the Evangelical Union, and Dr. Thain Davidson, of London, who lectured on "The Perils of the Great City."

A successful series of annual meetings, on behalf of the Church Missionary Society, has been held at Belfast. In each case interesting addresses were delivered by Archdeacon Phair, of Ruperts Land, North-West America, and Rev. B. Baring Gould, travelling secretary of the Society.

A Dublin branch of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children is being formed. An influential meeting was lately held at the Shelbourne Hotel, when the Registrar-General, the City Coroner, and various medical men, gave sad evidence as to the need of such a Society. Rev. B. Waugh has promised to attend a meeting on June 12, and inaugurate the movement in Ireland.

The Countess of Aberdeen still maintains her kind interest in the welfare of Ireland; last week she travelled to Dublin specially to take part in the annual meeting of the Irish Home Industries Association, an Association largely founded by her own exertions. The Association endeavours to be a link between the public and the many scattered cottage industries in remote districts of Ireland. Orders for needlework, plain or fancy, would be gratefully received at the depôt, 57, Dawson-street, Dublin.

FALLEN ASLEEP.

Elizabeth, second daughter of the late Mr. Thomas Coryndon Stert, of Yeolmbridge, Devon, aged 85. For 74 years she was a patient sufferer.—Rev. Bryant Burgess, for nearly forty years curate and vicar of Latimer, Bucks.—Rev. John S. Parkes, of Bishop's Stortford, for 31 years in the Wesleyan ministry.—Mr. T. W. Marshall, of Loughborough, a well-known public man, and an office-bearer in the Baptist Church.—Rev. George Breffit, who was for some time curate of St. Cuthbert's, Carlisle.—Rev. James Clapham, of Bilston, for forty years a minister of the Wesleyan Connexion.

CONTINENTAL & FOREIGN NOTES.

TAHITI.—The French Evangelical Church of Tahiti has resolved to establish a training school for a native ministry, under the direction of M. Brun.

PRESBYTERIANS IN AMERICA.—The Southern and Northern Presbyterian Churches, sitting respectively at Chattanooga and New York, have both voted a resolution in favour of the co-operation of the two Churches.

THE JEWS.—The Sou Israélite, of Geneva, states that there are forty-seven organisations engaged in the evangelisation of the Jews, with 377 workers in 195 stations. At least 150 of the missionaries are themselves converted Jews. It is estimated that during the first seventy-five years of the present century 100,000 Jews were formally received into the Christian Church.

A TOTAL ABSTINENCE SOCIETY has been started in the province of Antsihanaka, Madagascar, in connection with the L.M.S. Rum-drinking is pre-eminently the curse of the region; the strong liquor is taken entirely undiluted, and with the definite object of producing intoxication. Hitherto but few of the people have abstained, but pledges are now being signed in encouraging numbers.

PROTESTANTISM IN FRANCE.—Speaking a few days ago on the diffusion of Protestant principles in France, M. Léon Say said: "I see Protestants on every degree of the social scale. Personally I have been President of the Senate, and my successor was equally of the Protestant faith. I see Protestants occupying the highest places in the arts and industries; indeed, we find them everywhere."

BASEL.—Again this year Easter Sunday was "improved" by a resurrection festival being celebrated in the cemeteries of Basel. By prayer, discourse, and song, God's name is, on these occasions, praised for the glorious hope given to mankind by the resurrection of our Saviour. It is seventeen years since this festival was first celebrated in the cemeteries of Basel, and it has, says the Journal Religieux, become popular in the best sense of the word. It is estimated that ten thousand persons this year took part in the services.

MADAGASCAR.—The Antananarivo Annual and Madagascar Magazine, for 1889 (printed at the press of the London Missionary Society), opens with a most interesting review of a quarter century of change and progress, by the editor, Rev. James Sibree, jun. Among the hopeful signs mentioned is that a spirit of earnestness, liberality, and zeal is gradually growing up among the Christian people of the island. It is deplored that a sad leaven of impurity of conduct as yet defiles the churches of every denomination, but the view taken is on the whole very hopeful.—British Weekly.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, JUNE 2.—Numbers XX.

BETWEEN the last verse of the preceding and the first verse of this chapter there is a long and undescribed interval of thirty-eight years. This was the second time they had come to Kadesh (chap. xiii. 26). How much time we lose out of our lives through disobedience. We have to come back to the place where we dropped the thread of obedience, and all the interval counts for nothing.

Miriam was associated with Moses' earliest years (Exod. ii. 7); with his greatest triumph (Exod. xv. 20); and it must have been a sorrow to the brothers to lose her. Fellow-pilgrims must part company, but God hath pledged Himself to be with us to the end (Heb. xiii. 5, 6).

The murmurings of the people broke out again. The wilderness of Zin (1) is always spoken of as great and terrible (Deut. viii. 15—19). It was very sad to see this fresh ebullition of the untamed spirit of the people, who threw the blame entirely on Moses for bringing them into that sterile and arid region. The leaders fled to the Tabernacle, as an asylum of refuge, and for the purpose of seeking Divine direction. This is the place where we should always come with our burdens.

Moses' sin consisted in disobedience. He failed in meekness and obedience, which had always been his strongest points. He struck the rock, but the smiting of the true Rock cannot be repeated (Rom. vi. 9, 10). A word would have sufficed, though he could hardly believe and realise it (12). His address to the people was hasty and passionate, and cost him Canaan.

The refusal of Edom was very churlish.—Israel's proposal was right and generous (Deut. ii. 1—7). Those whom God blesses can afford to be generous. In after years the penalty for this refusal was heavily exacted, though now Moses quietly turned away (1 Sam. xiv. 47; 2 Sam. viii. 14; Obad. 12).

Aaron's death was lovingly arranged to do him honour, with one last view of the camp, and a glimpse of the Promised Land (chap. xxxiii. 38, 39). This death is a striking evidence of the imperfection of the Aaronic priesthood, and a contrast to the unchangeableness of the priesthood of Christ (Heb. vii. 23, &c.)

MONDAY, JUNE 3.—Numbers XXI.

Arad was an ancient town, situated in the south of Palestine. Its king came out to fight. The first failure came to teach them to expect the conquest of the land solely from the favour and help of God.

The fiery serpents still infest that part of the desert, but this was a miraculous judgment. How significant the lesson! When we yield to murmuring, we put ourselves in the mercy of the serpent. It was by the serpent affixed to the pole that the serpent bite was healed. Like cures like. So the look of faith to the Lord Jesus, crucified for us, saves (John iii. 14, 15). Compare Gen. iii. 14 and Gal. iii. 13. This brazen serpent became a kind of fetish (2 Kings xviii. 4). Then Hezekiah broke it in pieces, and called it Nehushtan—a piece of brass.

Oboth is of interest, because we do not read of the children of Israel murmuring after this halting-place.

A fragment (14) is here quoted from some historical document, which has long ago been destroyed. What a volume must that be which is being written through the ages of the wars of the Lord!

A beautiful little song is given next (17). The princes were able to use their official rods in putting aside the brushwood which hid the well, and its discovery was greeted by songs. How often does God open springs for us which we do not acknowledge. Let us be more prone to give thanks.

Sihon challenged the people to battle (23). They had done nothing to provoke his attack. He himself had been an invader; and as a proof of this a passage is quoted (27—30) from a poet of that country, describing the invasion of the land, the burning of the Moabite cities of Heshbon and Ar, the erection of new Amorite cities in their place. This was recapitulated by Jephthah (Jud. xi. 13—27). Chemosh was the idol-god (Jer. xlviii. 45, 46).

TUESDAY, JULY 4.—Numbers XXII.

This and the two following chapters present a marvellous contrast between the covetous prophet and his sublime prophecies (2 Peter ii. 14—16). And it is evidently possible still for us to speak God's truth, and yet to have neither part nor lot in the matter (Jude 11).

The plains of Moab had been wrested from Moab by Sihon, but still bore the name of their original owner; they had been just possessed by Israel, and lay between the Jordan and the frontier-hills of Moab. Balak, as had been predicted, was sore afraid (3; Exod. xv. 15; Deut. ii. 25). The elders of Midian were his neighbours and allies. How little did Israel know what was on foot. But God was on their side, against those who hated and plotted against them (Rom. viii. 31).

Balaam came from Aram (xxiii. 7), i.e. Mesopotamia. He was acquainted with God, who was known in those regions from before the time of Abraham. And it was in the name of God that he uttered those incantations, which were supposed to carry with them blessing or bane. In the Burmese war magicians were employed to curse the British troops. But no such power can injure those who are under the care of God (Deut. xxiii. 5; Josh. xxiv. 10; Neh. xiii. 2; Micah vi. 5).

His refusal (13) was good, but it hinted that he would come if he could; and the very fact of asking again (19), when the first answer had been so plain, proves how bent he was on following his own will. Thus the permission accorded by Divine Providence was in accordance with an invariable rule (John xiii. 27; Rom. i. 24). How mercifully God stands in the pathway of sinners, rebuking them, and staying their progress, and raising up unexpected voices. We have new Testament authority for the ass speaking (2 Peter ii. 16).

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 5.—Numbers XXIII.

It was a strange medley to build altars to God on the high places of Baal. And there was no need to erect seven. The false prophet, in ordering so many, designed to mislead and delude the king. And yet we learn that God met him; and we infer that God will meet and speak to those who desire to harm his people, frustrating their designs, and compelling them to work out his plan (Acts iv. 28). It is an awful fact that men may be the spokesmen of Divine truth, of which they personally know nothing, just as water may flow through the lips of a marble figure, itself unblest.

Separation is the keynote of the first prediction (9). And this has been remarkably fulfilled in the history of the chosen people. Found in all lands, but at home in none. Dwelling amid all peoples, but absorbed with none. Such should God's children be always (2 Cor. vi. 17; Titus ii. 14).

Balaam's pious wish was not fulfilled (10; xxxi. 8). Like many more, he wished for the blessedness of God's people in death and hereafter, but was not prepared to lead a corresponding life.

Balak was surprised and disappointed, and thought that he could reverse the adverse words, by limiting the seer's vision, and so took him to a point of view where the entire view of the camp was intercepted by intervening heights. It is not possible to reverse God's decisions.

The positive beauty and strength of Israel are the subject of the next burst of prophecy (19, &c.). They are regarded, not as they were in themselves, but as they were in the thought and purpose of God. Oh, children of God, deeply ponder ver. 21, in spite of our sinfulness; ver. 23, in spite of our enemies; ver. 24, in spite of our evident weakness and helplessness. Such are we in Christ.

THURSDAY, JUNE 6.—Numbers XXIV.

What a remarkable statement of openness to receive Divine communications is given us here (3, 4). The Divine afflatus was so strong as to fill his whole soul with the overpowering light of its revelations. May we not pray for moments of insight into truth, if not of vision into the [illegible], the eyes of the heart being opened (Eph. i. 17, 18). And let us yield to the Divine teaching, and speak out what we see.

The sight of Israel must have been very beautiful, and if the second line of the parallelism (5) refers to the settled habitations of Canaan, then there must indeed have been enough to stir the prophet's soul. Why should not we too be as watered gardens, and as planted trees (Isa. lviii. 11; Ps. civ. 16).

The kingdom of Israel (7) attained its predicted eminence in the reigns of David and Solomon, and still more in the exalted kingdom of the Messiah.

This time-serving effort to please two masters ended in failure to please either (11; Matt. vi. 24). Oh for the single eye and the devoted heart! (1 Sam. ii. 30; John xii. 26). Balaam at least gave the monarch one good piece of advice. When the terror-stricken king asked whether Jehovah would be propitiated by hecatombs of victims and the immolation of his eldest son, the prophet answered truly (Micah vi. 6—8).

Israel's future supremacy was next described. Stars would be symbols of dignity and power: the sceptre of a victorious king. This was fulfilled in David (2 Sam. viii. 2—14), and also in the supremacy of Christ over the nations of the world. Amalek's fate had been previously predicted and was awfully fulfilled (Exod. xvii. 16; 1 Sam. xv.). The mention of Assyria here is most remarkable, and the transportation of the Kenites is related in the inscriptions (22). The ships of Chittim refer, undoubtedly, to the troops of Greece and Rome, which were brought across the sea, and which destroyed not only Assyria, but the other gigantic despotisms of the East (covered by the phrase "Eber," which signifies "those across the river").

Balaam started towards his home, but he did not reach it, but turned aside into the plains of Midian. He is a terrible warning of one who allowed noble talents and great light to be obscured by a desire to obtain the rewards of the world, without losing his spiritual position or favour in God's sight. A divided heart leads to ruin, equally with the heart that chooses evil.

FRIDAY, JUNE 7.—Numbers XXV.

This wickedness was the result of a deeply laid plot. Unable to curse Israel directly, Balaam suggested to Balak that he should draw the people away from their allegiance to Jehovah by the fascinations of the daughters of Moab (Rev. ii. 14), as the surest way of bringing down on them the judgment of their God. The Midianites, among whom the prophet had retired, were also active participators in this guilty plot (6, 14, 17; xxxi. 23).

The women of the country invited the men of Israel to visit at their houses at some festal season; and after partaking of meats, some portion of which had been offered in sacrifice to idols, they were the more ready to join in the sensual revelry and rites which characterised the worship of the heathen.

All the people did not fall into this sin (Deut. iv. 3, 4; 1 Cor. x. 8). But it brought severe punishment on the wrong-doers. And it was indeed sorrowful that after all their opportunities they should so suddenly and dreadfully fall. God is a very jealous God, and He must chastise his disobedient children (Col. iii. 6); 23,000 perished by the plague (1 Cor. x. 8), and another 1000 beneath the hand of the judges. Like the amputation of a diseased limb, it was needful to cut out these licentious idolaters.

Phinehas attained a notable distinction, and his posterity was to hold the priestly office as long as Israel existed (Mal. iii. 1). Determined acts like this in dealing with sin are strong, but necessary, and are manifestations of character which are precious in God's regard.

SATURDAY, JUNE 8.—Numbers XXVI.

The terrible visitation of the preceding chapter swept away the remainder of the old generation (Ps. xcv. 11). This new census was very important; first, as showing the immense numbers to which Israel had grown, notwithstanding the severe judgments they had suffered, and as being an arrangement of the people in their families and clans preparatory to their entrance into the land.

It is interesting to read these catalogues through, because of the real historical interest attaching to some of the names. Remark especially ver. 11: Korah's descendants became great musicians, having their names affixed to fourteen Psalms. Reuben and Simeon had become greatly diminished.

The division of the land by lot would make the Divine appointment indisputable (Prov. xvi. 33). It is said that provision was thus made for upwards of 600,000 yeomanry, with from ten to twenty acres of land each.

The census of the Levites was taken separately, and conducted on different principles. There was an increase of 1000 from the last numbering of this tribe (iii. 39). Its slow increase may be accounted for by the fact of its having been deeply implicated in Korah's rebellion.

On comparing chap. i. and chap. xxvi., it appears that decrease had taken place in Reuben, Simeon, Gad, Ephraim, and Naphtali, to the total amount of 61,020. All the rest had increased to the total amount of 59,200. Thus, as a judgment on their sins, there was a total decrease of 1820. Let us see that we, too, be not excluded from God's rest (Heb. iv.).

NEW FRENCH MISSIONARIES.—MM. Alfred and Georges Casalis, the latter a medical missionary, are about to leave for Lessonto, South Africa, and M. E. Girard for Tahiti, under the auspices of the Paris Society of Evangelical Missions.

JESUS BEFORE PILATE: MARK XV. 1—20.

GOLDEN TEXT: JOHN xix. 6.

To give to the crucifixion of Jesus even the appearance of legality, it was necessary that the sentence already passed upon Him at the informal and illegal meeting of the Council should be confirmed by another meeting held after the dawn of day. To this more legal assembly ver. 1 refers. It was also necessary that the Roman procurator should ratify the sentence, and that the Roman power should carry it out (John xviii. 31). Hence our Lord's appearance before Pilate. Judea had become part of the province of Syria, and Pontius Pilate was the fifth deputy or procurator by whom it was governed. Usually he resided at Cæsarea; but during the Passover Feast his presence was necessary in Jerusalem to preserve order. The character of the man appears in the incident now to be studied.

Verses 1—5.—Fuller details of this interview are given in Matt. xxvii., Luke xxiii., and John xviii. The fetters with which Jesus had been bound when before Annas seem to have been removed during his appearance before Caiaphas (John xviii. 12, 24), but before being taken to Pilate He is again "bound" (1). The charge laid against Jesus was not that of blasphemy, for which the Sanhedrim had condemned Him, but was threefold—perverting the nation; forbidding to give tribute to Cæsar; and making Himself a King (Luke xxiii. 2). The third most impresses Pilate. He is amazed—perhaps amused—at such a claim, and with a mingling of wonder and of scorn, asks, "Art thou the King of the Jews?" with a special emphasis on the "thou" (2). The answer of Jesus, "Thou sayest it" is not an evasion, but a bold and fearless confession (1 Tim. vi. 13). In John xviii. 33—37, this answer is given more fully. Was it not an attempt to bring even Pilate into the kingdom? Against the "many things" of which the chief priests accused Him (3, 4), Jesus "answered nothing" (3, 5). "Pilate marvelled" at this. He had never had such a prisoner before him on any previous occasion. No doubt he had heard of Jesus, but probably had never met Him until now. And he is already impressed with his innocence, and with the hatred and envy which prompt the chief priests to seek his death. See Luke xxiii. 4 and John xviii. 38. He utters the word of acquittal, and for Pilate there is now only one righteous course open. And that course he tries to take, yet without displeasing the people. His weak and vacillating spirit appears in his sending Jesus to Herod (Luke xxiii. 7); in placing Him side by side with Barabbas; in the hand-washing before the multitude (Matt. xxvii. 24); and in his presenting Jesus before the people (John xix. 5). Pilate is a pitiable spectacle. Knowing the right, he has not the courage to do it. His desire to retain the friendship of men makes him his own bitterest foe.

Verses 6—15.—The custom of releasing a prisoner at the feast gives Pilate one chance of getting rid of his difficulty. He makes his appeal to the multitude: "Will ye that I release the King of the Jews?"(9). They were not filled with envy against Him as were the chief priests (10). But as soon as he has made the appeal, the message from his wife reaches him (Matt. xxvii. 19), giving him an additional warning; but the delay is the chief priests' opportunity. The chief priests "moved the people" (11), and whatever course might have been taken, if left to themselves, the people also chose, not Jesus, but Barabbas. Of this man ver. 7 tells us that he had taken part in an insurrection, in which he had committed murder. Matt. xxvii. 16 calls him "a notable prisoner." John xviii. 40 describes him as "a robber." For him the people demand release; and what for Jesus? (12). "Crucify Him" (13). Against Pilate's challenge, "What evil hath He done?" they have no reply, but a more vehement demand for his crucifixion. The spirit of the chief priests now possessed the people, and Pilate, in order to "content the people," yields. Barabbas is released, and Jesus is "scourged"(15). "The Roman scourging which preceded crucifixion was of the most cruel description. The body was bared and bound, in a stooping posture, to a low block, so that the skin of the back was stretched tight, and fully exposed to the fearful lashes. The whips were either rods or thongs, to the ends of which lead or bones were attached, to render the blows more fearful. The punishment was so severe that prisoners frequently fainted, and sometimes died under it. The soldiers would not inflict the punishment mildly, for their feeling towards Jesus may be judged by their mockery afterwards."—Lange.

Verses 16—20.—In the hall or court of the procurator's house, Jesus now becomes the sport of the brutal soldiers. "The whole band" are gathered, so that all may share the sport. The robe and the thorn crown and the salute (16, 17) were their mockery of his claim to be King. "The thorns were most likely twigs of the commonest thorn bush in Palestine. The branches are long, slender, and very thorny."—Malan. "They smote Him," &c. (19, 20).—Pain to Him was sport to them. They continued to insult Him until they had satisfied themselves, then "led Him out to crucify Him." The lesson:—

(1) Gives us a deeper impression of the awful sufferings of Jesus.—It is possible to make too much of his physical torture, but it must not be ignored. To Him it was very real, and was foretold by Himself (Matt. xx. 19), and by the prophet (Isa l. 6; liii. 5). They were atoning sufferings—hence were for us; and how meekly and patiently endured! What love He had for us!

(2) Warns us against rejecting Jesus.—We may do it as the priests, who felt that they had something to lose by the popularity of Jesus. They could not consent "to decrease that He might increase" (John iii. 30). Or as the people, thoughtless themselves, but ready to follow as others led. Or as Pilate, knowing what he ought to do, desiring to do it, yet doing wrong to please others. He is the most pitiable of all. Alas! that any should be like Him to-day.

LAURA BRIDGMAN died at the South Boston (U.S.) Asylum, on May 24, aged sixty. She was deaf, dumb, and blind from her second year, these afflictions having been caused by illness. She had only the sense of touch, and was taught through this. Her case, which was closely studied by scientists and philanthropists, had great influence in developing the methods of teaching the deaf, dumb, and blind.

THE POLICE INSTITUTE, just opened, commands a splendid view across the river Thames from the Strand. From an office on the ground floor On and Off Duty, the organ of the Christian Police Association, will be published; on the second floor are the library and reading-rooms; above are sleeping apartments for policemen only. It is hoped that the Institute will prove very useful, not only to the Metropolitan and City police forces, but also to members of provincial forces while in London on leave or on business. Open daily from 8 a.m. to 10 p.m., it will be a convenient rallying-point for policemen. Bible-classes and other religious meetings have been organised. On the occasion of the opening, recently, Dr. Anderson, assistant commissioner of Metropolitan police, expressed deep sympathy with the work to be carried on in the building, and congratulated the force upon the acquirement of such beautiful and healthful premises. The address of the Institute is 1A, Adelphi-terrace, Adam-street, Strand, W.C. Articles of furniture and books for the library are wanted; they may be addressed to Miss C. Gurney, hon. sec. of the Association.

MR. FRANCIS MURPHY has been at work in Indiana. A clerical correspondent of The New York Evangelist writes from Logansport:—"In this community the impressions made by his work, which has just closed, appear to be most happy and salutary. Well nigh three thousand have signed the pledge and put on the blue ribbon, while public sentiment against the drink habit has been most thoroughly awakened. Many men who have not crossed the threshold of a church for years have heard the Gospel in directest earnestness, and are now finding their way to the churches. More than this, some of us pastors have found our way to the saloons with a kindly Christlike plea for a better life, and have been received with nothing but courtesy, barring some embarrassment. Mr. Murphy has been at work in different parts of the State all winter. He has two sons who sometimes join him in his meetings. William is holding temperance meetings by himself in the smaller towns of the State. Edward (a business man of Pittsburg) was with his father here for the last night, and made a most eloquent and effective address." The "Francis Murphy Gospel Temperance Union of Indiana" has just been organised, and will hold its first State convention at Indianapolis next September.

A MORNING IN MAY.

CALM breaks the morn in vernal beauty bright,
Tingeing the orient heaven with rosy light,
Soft, from the west, the balmy zephyrs play
In fragrant dalliance with the flow'rs of May.
The trees, new-rob'd in Spring's enchanting hues,
'Mid verdant glades their nascent tints diffuse,
And, freed from thrall of Winter's darken'd sky,
In plumy softness greet the ravish'd eye.
See how, from branch to branch, from spray to spray,
Wooed by the glance of Sol's enamour'd ray,
Each tiny leaf its winter-sheath forsakes,
And into life and light exultant wakes,
Till, one by one, each pendent frondal gem,
Sparkles in beauty on the parent stem;
In bright detail fulfilling the design,
The finish'd triumph, of the Hand Divine!
The cuckoo's note, to every heart how dear,
That welcome herald of the opening year,
Echoes distinct from yonder emerald wood,
In sweet accord with morning's solitude.
On daisied bosom of the springing mead,
The flocks and herds in joyous freedom feed.
The warbling birds, the sunny groves among,
With Nature's music blend their choral song;
While every charm that teeming Nature yields,
In waving groves or flow'r-bespangled fields,
To enchant the ear and captivate the sight,
Speaks to the heart and thrills it with delight.
Mid scenes like these, beneath the matin ray,
And opening bloom of perfume-breathing May,
As the charm'd eye the enchanting view surveys
All forms of beauty crowding on its gaze,
All sounds of melody from Nature's voice,
With it the heart inviting to rejoice,
How springs it forth responsive to the call
Which asks its homage for the God of all,
Who, in the depths of his creative mind,
These types of wisdom infinite designed,
And spake them forth his universe to bless
With countless forms of grace and loveliness,
To charm the taste, to fascinate the sight,
To steep the enamoured senses in delight,
And raise the spirit to that bright abode
Where perfect beauty culminates in God!

FALMOUTH TOWN MISSION SOCIETY.—The thirty-fifth annual report states that the various branches of this important work continue to be vigorously sustained. The Gospel and temperance meetings have been well attended, and the Mission Sunday-school prospers. Deeds of kindness have commended the Gospel; the sick have been visited, and the fallen have been helped to regain their standing in society. Tent services were held during the summer, and tokens of Divine blessing were not wanting. The hon. sec. is Captain Phillips, Pendennis Castle, Cornwall.

FRIENDLESS WOMEN IN ROME.—Within the last few weeks Mr. and Mrs. Ernesto Nathan, having secured the co-operation of Signora Crispi and other leading ladies of Italian, English, and American society in Rome, have held a meeting, at which a committee was elected to manage a Home for Friendless Women in Rome. A large house has been secured in the neighbourhood of St. Peter's, in which women needing casual, temporary, or even long-continued shelter will be received, some gratuitously, some for payment according to their ability. When necessary, work will be found for them in the establishment.

PORTSMOUTH.—The Gospel tent work in connection with the Soldiers' Institute will soon be in progress again, and it is hoped that many excursionists and others as they pass from the railway station to the People's Park during the summer months, will be led to give an ear to words of life, and receive much spiritual blessing as a result. In these days, when clubs, and institutions partaking very much of the nature of clubs, are so numerous, it is specially important that such decidedly evangelical work as Miss Robinson's should receive hearty support. Particularly at the present time do the soldiers need friends in Portsmouth. Sunday has become quite a fête day in the town, the military bands playing after morning service, both on the New Pier and in the Park. The Christian members of the bands consider it very hard that they should be compelled to play for public amusement on the Rest Day, and petitions are now being signed against arrangements which do little more than flood the town with pleasure-seekers on the Sabbath.

WHITE CROSS SOCIETY.

THE ANNUAL MEETING OF MEN WILL BE HELD IN EXETER HALL,
On Monday, June 3, 1889, at 7.30 p.m.

Speakers: The BISHOP OF WAKEFIELD; SAMUEL SMITH, Esq., M.P.; W. A. COOTE, Esq.; Rev. J. W. HORSLEY, and others.

MUSIC HALLS. WHO WILL HELP TO OPPOSE?

THE PROMPT AND HEARTY CO-OPERATION of earnest Christians is much needed by the Committee, to adopt means of concerted action, on the lines as follow:—

That licensed victuallers and vendors of strong drink ought not to be entrusted with music licenses. Music Halls only demoralize young men and women.

A Ladies' Committee will be formed as soon as possible, to co-operate in this movement.

N. E. LONDON GOSPEL MISSION—A SPECIAL APPEAL.

WEARY MOTHERS AND DROOPING CHILDREN.

IT would be difficult to tell the good that is wrought upon the enfeebled minds and bodies of poor London Children, who are privileged to enjoy a real Country Holiday at our excellent "Home," on the hill leading from Lower Sydenham Station to the quiet romantic village of Southend, a sketch of which we are enabled to give. With the fine open country all around us, not to speak of the extensive grounds attached to the property, here they may share the blessings of fresh air and plentiful food under Christian care.

What these things mean to poor children from crowded courts and alleys of East London can better be imagined than described.

Nor would we omit mention of the morning and evening 'family' prayers, the simple Scripture parables read with them: and the hymns which we let them select in turn—these healthy exercises have a most helpful influence upon the heart and life, contrasting as such habits do with what is too frequently a prayerless and sometimes a drunkard's home.

SOUTHEND HOUSE, NEAR LOWER SYDENHAM STATION.

We also take small parties of Mothers, specially seeking to help such as are nursing weakly infants. The change a week or two has made, more especially in the infants, has been remarkable. There are eight beds for mothers, and ample accommodation for about forty children.

The immediate contact our Eight Mission Halls bring us into with the suffering poor, and the fact that there are about 2,000 poor children attending our various Sunday and Free Evening Schools, render the advantages of such a "Home" simply a necessity, if we are to respond to the need presented.

We estimate that 5s. provides one week's board for a child, 10s. for a fortnight, 20s. gives the same to two, £5 to ten, £10 to twenty. Mothers with infants may be reckoned to cost 7s. 6d. per week.

Contributions will be gratefully received by the Editors of "THE CHRISTIAN," 12, Paternoster-buildings, E.C., or by

Notices.

YOUNG MEN ABOUT TO VISIT PARIS, and those interested in their well-being, may be glad to know that Madame Dalencourt (75, Rue Escudier, Boulogne sur Seine) is arranging to board a few, who would thus be protected from many difficulties.

DEAR SIR,—A correspondent makes inquiry with respect to the lines,

So live that, sinking in thy last long sleep,
Calm thou may'st smile while all around thee weep.

They were translated from the Persian by that eminent Oriental scholar, Sir William Jones, who, towards the close of the last century, was one of the judges of the Supreme Court at Calcutta, where he died in 1794.—Yours faithfully, H. HEBER EVANS.

[As it is found that infidels and others send tracts to the persons whose names are inserted here, it is most desirable that all books and papers received should be carefully read before being given away.]

Singapore, Malaysia.—The ladies of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Singapore ask for back numbers of The British Workman, with other temperance papers and tracts, for work among the many European sailors who visit that port and are confronted with vicious temptations of all kinds.—Address Mrs. R. W. MUNSON, Secretary W.C.T.U., Singapore, Straits Settlements, Malaysia.

A small Working Men's Institute, with coffee-bar, reading-room, and recreation-rooms, has been opened lately in the village of The Bourne, in Surrey, in order to meet a long-felt want. The institute is entirely unsectarian. Funds are needed to carry on the work. The neighbourhood is largely invaded by hop-pickers and gipsies, many of whom are never brought under the sound of the Gospel. Donations will be received by Miss J. WILBRAHAM TAYLOR, hon. sec. and treasurer, The Bourne Village Institute, near Farnham, Surrey.

DONATIONS RECEIVED BY MESSRS. MORGAN & SCOTT TO MONDAY, MAY 27, 1889.

 Will donors oblige us by giving explicitly and fully the titles of the missions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Mistakes which sometimes arise will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that our Donation List is made up for the Printer on Monday morning? Any amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number.

 We would respectfully urge all our friends, when remitting to us, to make Cheques, Money Orders, or Postal Orders payable to Morgan & Scott, and to cross them "City Bank;" this will effectually prevent loss of same.

 Donations should be sent by Cheque or P.O. Orders, not by stamps.

London Samaritan Society (Convalescent Homes)—Miss K.R. £2; Mrs. M.S. 5s.

Y.W.C.A.—"A Rubbish Sale" will be held on June 15, in Exeter Hall, in aid of the Continental Division of the Y.W.C.A. Old clothes for men, women, and children. Old furniture, and other household goods; knick-knacks of all kinds; toys, &c., will be gratefully received by Miss K. M. Sheppard, Leggatts, Potters Bar. Carts will be sent round London to collect the things, however few, before the sale.

Rev. Dr. Phillips Brooks, in an address in Trinity Church, Boston, said:—"I have no reproach to bring against the most extravagant of temperance reformers. I may differ from such a reformer as to the means it is for the interest of the State to adopt, but I understand with all my heart the feeling with which it comes to seem to him that there can be no measure too sweeping, too radical, too venturesome for the suppression of that which lies at the basis and root of so much sin and misery that beset our land. There should be awakened broadcast the feeling and its impression that the people live for the State, not for themselves; that no desire of self-indulgence shall stand in the way of any measure by which they would struggle to put down that which is a curse to the country."

NOTICE TO THE READERS OF "THE CHRISTIAN"

Who may be personally or relatively

INTERESTED in THIS MATTER.

Mr. Congreve will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED in this Journal BEFORE, EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

Instead of a Single Case, this week I give Extracts from

THREE INTERESTING LETTERS.

Rev. E. S. Cole, of Maldon, Essex, writes me relative to a case recommended to me by him:—"You will be glad to know that through your treatment B—— has greatly recovered his health and strength, which seemed slipping fast away. There is another case in which the doctor had given up all hope of any restoration, and certainly, but for your timely aid, the grave must long ago have been closed over the remains of another consumptive."

Mr. W. Irving, writing me (Jan. 8 of this year) from 29, Rosemary-street, Bristol, says:—"Four years ago a friend of mine, who is a minister, wrote you on my behalf. I had been given up by the doctor, who said it was impossible for me to get well. I recovered under your treatment, and am happy to say I have enjoyed good health ever since, which I consider to be the result of your famous medicine."

Mr. Wilkins, of Ivy Cottage, Bretford, Rugby, says (in a recent letter):—"We have used your valuable medicine for 19 years, as a family medicine, for nine children and ourselves, and have never known it fail."

NOTE.—Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

GYMNASIUM OF THE STEPNEY HOME,

On TUESDAY AFTERNOON, JUNE 11, 1889, at Three o'clock.

150 TRAINED LADS starting for their new life in CANADA will be presented to God for the prayers of His people.

At 2.15 p.m. precisely the doors of the Homes will be thrown open and all having tickets (TO BE OBTAINED FREE ON APPLICATION) can inspect the various Workshops and Schools, where the industrious Boys can be seen hard at work,

Making and mending boots and shoes,
Manufacturing all sorts of brushes,
Carpentering and joinering,
Box-making,
Wood-chopping,
Tailoring,
Baking huge piles of bread, and perhaps Blacksmithing.

The little Scotch Pipers in full array will march to and fro, playing their thrilling music.

Rev. W. J. MAYERS will give an address on "Some Royal Academy Pictures, their Suggestions and Teachings," and will also sing.

Mr. J. B. WOOKEY will speak of the Lodging-houses, and

Dr. BARNARDO upon Emigration work.

Refreshments will be provided at a very moderate charge in the large school and class-room.

To prevent overcrowding no more tickets will be issued than there is comfortable room for guests.

Intending visitors should write at once, enclosing stamped and addressed envelope (large size), for tickets, without which no one can be admitted, to the Secretary, Mr. JOHN ODLING, who will send the same by return of post free.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give portrait and sketch of Rev. J. Odell, Founder of the Primitive Methodist Training Home for Evangelists, Birmingham.

We rejoice to find that a warning voice has been raised in America against what has in this country been denounced by Rev. Archibald G. Brown as "The Devil's Mission of Amusement." Rev. E. P. Marvin, of Lockport, New York, has published a vigorous pamphlet entitled, "Ecclesiastical Amusements." Having described "Picnic religion" in all its deadness, the author asks:—

> Will the Church, for the sake of God and humanity, own up its folly and forsake it, come out from the world and be separate, take on a higher type of piety, cultivate the genuine grace of giving, and give the old Gospel a fair trial in God's appointed way? Probably if all Christians who are "exercised" in conscience about this matter, had the courage to act out their convictions, this great evil would soon be abated or entirely removed, and we should have a better Church and a better world.

Introductions full of sympathy are written to this pamphlet by Drs. John Hall and Howard Crosby. The former well remarks:

> If it be said that some are drawn to, or held in, the Church only in the ways censured, the reply is, that such bring no spiritual good, and rarely receive any. There are secessions from our congregations at times which strengthen their position before God, and in the judgment of conscientious men.

Mr. Brown's outspoken pamphlet has reached a circulation of one hundred thousand copies. Some foolish letters have been written about it, as though Mr. Brown deprecated all amusement or recreation. This is not the case; but he contends that it is not the office of the Christian Church to provide the people with amusements. His chief purpose is to protest against the extravagant forms in which the passion for entertainment has been pandered to in the name of Christ.

Rev. B. Dinnick has been holding meetings at Oldbury, near Birmingham, on the subject of "The Spirit, and Faith-Healing." In connection with the mission he visited a lady in Aston, who has for long suffered from an affection on the side of the face. After prayer for her had failed to produce healing, she was told that her husband was the hindrance, and was recommended to leave him, which she wisely refused to do. Mr. Dinnick declared that God had told him he was to receive someone that day, and a young lady, whose spiritual life previously seems to have had in it much of the fanciful, was sent for. She professed also to have had an intimation during prayer that morning that she would be wanted for God, and, as she was, without giving any intimation to her parents, she went away, and began to take part in the meetings at Oldbury, where she remains still. Can nothing be done to stay such proceedings as these? The injury done to the cause of Christ is incalculable.

The newspaper reports tell of attempts to terrorise the people by announcing certain and speedy death. This was the method adopted by Mr. Dinnick with the husband of the lady referred to above. On Saturday week he delivered the solemn message that the man had "an hour and six minutes" to live. This was urged as a reason for his immediate decision for Christ. On Monday the prophet renewed his visit; and found the man still living. This failure of the prophecy in no way disconcerted him, but was attributed to the fact that the saved wife had by her intercession secured another chance for her husband; and a similar prophecy was repeated. In view of his approaching death, he was again urged to be a Christian. If he would not yield, then the prophet recommended him to dismiss all his workpeople, and to shut his shop, as he would have no need of either again. The man was living when our correspondent called on Monday week, and, naturally, was profoundly disgusted with all the prophet had said. The thing would be ludicrous in the extreme if it were not done in the name of religion. But it is painful to note how the people are moved thus to mock at sacred things.

The sentence of three months' imprisonment passed on Mr. Vizetelly for persisting in the sale of indecent literature will perhaps do more for the cause of purity than all the fines and protests in the world, though we deem the penalty as in no sense adequate to the enormity of the offence. This sort of traffic is unfortunately very lucrative, and persons in Mr. Vizetelly's position only laugh at the imposition, even of heavy fines, which they look upon as little more than incidental expenses of their venture. They naturally shrink, however, from the personal discomforts of imprisonment, and it is to be hoped that this warning will act as a salutary deterrent in the future, and that Vigilance Societies and others will be encouraged to persevere in their crusade against this crying evil. It only requires a continuation of the efforts which have been made in this direction to complete the cleansing of our streets and homes from the contamination of this pollution, and to remove a dangerous rock of offence from the paths of the young and inexperienced. The action of the National Vigilance Society in this matter cannot be too highly commended, and it ought to have the most unstinted support in this much-needed crusade, which involves great expense.

Mr. Pickersgill, M.P., has called the attention of the House of Commons to the frequent inequality and eccentricity of judicial sentences in criminal cases, and we trust the question will be kept before the public until a reform is brought about. It is interesting to learn, in connection with this matter, that our prison population is now lower than ever it has been since statistics were first taken. This is not so much a question for congratulation as an incentive to renewed efforts to reduce the number of criminals, and, better still, the causes of crime.

Young men who are assailed by the specious objection of antagonism between science and theology, will note with pleasure, that Sir William Thomson, F.R.S., presided over the annual meeting of the Christian Evidence Society. He has been a hard student of science for forty-three years; has filled the chair of the British Association; has been regarded by Europe and America as among the highest living authorities in matters touching the genesis of the world; and has remained a firm Christian, and a daily reader of the Bible the whole time. On this occasion, Sir William said:—

> Speaking of scoffers who say that all things continued as they were from the beginning of the creation, Peter affirmed that "all these things shall be dissolved"; to him it appeared that physical science absolutely demonstrated the truth of the Apostle's words. There was no possibility of things going on as they had done during the last 6000 years.

We must note a painful illustration of the "down-grade" in criticism. More than thirty years ago Rev. John Pulsford brought out a work called "Quiet Hours." Although Dr. John Campbell, of The British Banner, saw in it doubtful teaching, and was held to be a bigot for doing so, the book contained much to edify Christian readers. Subsequently, the same writer sent forth his comments on the Epistle to the Ephesians, which owed what excellence it had to the docility and clearness with which the author accepted Paul as an inspired teacher. Of late years speculation has followed speculation, with an increasing rationalistic tendency, till last week the author of "Quiet Hours" writes in a contemporary of Paul's way of commenting on the "Parable of the Potter" as an unwise way; as less satisfactory than that of a prophet, and as conveying a suggestion which dishonours God. If this species of rationalising is to be accepted, we know not what will remain to us of the inspired oracles of God.

Our present number contains an important letter, entitled, "Missionary Life." It was written forty years ago, by the late Rev. George Bowen, for many years editor of The Bombay Guardian. The question will naturally be asked: Did Mr. Bowen, for the years between his letter and his death, carry out the principles advocated in his letter? The following particulars are from one who knew him for many years in Bombay:—

> Mr. Bowen followed the principles of his letter of 1848 all through his forty years in India. He lived and dressed as a poor European. His room was small, and kept only by him. He had no servant. Almost every day he was asked to dine with some Christian friend, so he had at least one good meal daily. Then he had a light luncheon of bread and plantain at his room, and a light supper. I think he had bread and tea in the morning. He was not ascetic in food, but ate enough to live and labour in India forty years without leaving the country. Why cannot we have hundreds of workers to follow the zeal of the Lord as Mr. Bowen did? I have had conversations with Mr. Bowen upon the subject of mission living. He has emphatically remarked as to simplicity of style: "It is very important."

> WALLACE J. GLADWIN.

Rev. H. Batchelor continues in The Nonconformist and Independent his defence of the orthodox doctrine of the Atonement. He charges its present opponents with using Scriptural words in a non-Scriptural sense, and with assailing Christian doctrines without trying first to understand them. He declares that the half-dozen modern names of writers, who have denied a vicarious sacrifice for sin, are the names of men whose theology is unintelligible; or who were more metaphysicians than Biblical students, and never prosecuted inductive inquiry as to what was in the Scriptures; or whose books, like that of Maurice on "Sacrifice," are as dead as a door nail; and not one of them will ever be mentioned as possessing authority to decide a theological controversy. This language is plain, but justifiable.

In a notable paper in the first number of The New Review, Earl Compton, M.P., calls attention to the cloud of neglect which seems to be barring any practical results from the labours of the Royal Commission upon the Housing of the Poor. We are glad to find that some earnest men and women are determined that this grave question shall not be shelved by any political necessity. Earl Compton's article deserves careful study. That Parliament should not be able to find time to deal with so important and vital a question as that which the late Lord Shaftesbury termed the Christianising of the domicilary conditions of the poor, is far from creditable.

Africa continues to be the happy hunting ground of the great colonising nations of Europe. The latest development of the scramble for the territory of the black man, is a proposal to establish a sort of British protectorate over the region of the Central Zambesi, through the formation of a great South African trading company, with a Royal Charter, entrusting to it the virtual rule of the great central lake districts. We believe that such a project, if carried out and superintended by men of Christian principle, would not only afford to Central Africa the blessings of civilisation, but would pave the way for the general spread of Gospel truth among these benighted peoples. We observe with pleasure that a correspondent of The Times, who is evidently well informed, says the policy of this Association would rigidly exclude alcohol and firearms as far as possible. We should have liked the prospect better, however, without the qualifying clause.

In an article in the current number of Scribner's Magazine, Professor Drummond presents a picture of the African slave trade, setting forth at once the horrible magnitude of the evil, and the growing conviction that steps ought to be taken by civilised nations to compass its speedy overthrow. Rejoicing that sympathy for the slave is increasing in volume and intensity throughout Europe, he advocates an international abolition of the status of slavery, and the establishment of a police administration for the protection of the hunted millions of the interior of Africa. Professor Drummond expresses an earnest hope that America will have a part in any measures that may be adopted in this truly humane cause. He maintains that while soldiers would naturally be regarded as enemies, police patrols, under wise and patient management, might come to be looked upon as guardians of the peace, and do much to emancipate Africa from a reign of terror which is fast depopulating some of her fairest regions. The subject is deserving of the prayerful consideration of all Christian people.

Her Majesty the Queen, through the medium of her private secretary, expressed hearty sympathy with the efforts of the London Anti-Vivisection Society.

Several leading religious bodies in Canada have joined in an agitation against the Jesuits in that country. Meetings have recently been held to assert the supremacy of the Queen, and to protest against and denounce the interference of the Pope, and his agents. There are few countries in which the Jesuits have made themselves more obnoxious than in Canada, or in which they have ventured to permit their handiwork to be so freely seen. It is not surprising that the movement against them should assume imposing dimensions.

A writer in The Methodist Times, referring to Lord Aberdeen's admirable letter to The Publishers' Circular on "Pernicious Literature," says:—

> I was travelling on an English railway, and looked over one of Mr. W. H. Smith's stalls....The book was attractively got up in paper covers, and was sold at one shilling....There was not a clean page in it...It was holiday time. There were tens of thousands travelling, and this particular station was crowded with young people....There was absolutely nothing on the title-page to guard any young girl (or boy) against the peril of the book....Is it not time that parents recognised the existence of this pestilence—I was going to say "that walketh in darkness"—that stalks abroad in the full noontide, and is poisoning the lives of their children? Is Mr. W. H. Smith aware that his railway stalls are thus made great seminaries of public corruption, centres for the wholesale infection of public morals?

This is, indeed, a question of the gravest consequence. The railway bookstalls, which are in the hands of a very few proprietors, are attracting to themselves more and more of the trade in books. The facilities of supply give them an overwhelming advantage over the ordinary bookseller. It is, therefore, of national importance that the monopoly thus created should be used for the elevation and not for the degradation of daily multiplying readers. Railway booksellers have a grand opportunity of directing the taste of readers to pure and wholesome books.

The subjoined resolutions are a result of the recent discussion on Missions in The Methodist Times and Methodist Recorder:—

> The following resolutions, moved by Rev. Dr. Stephenson, and seconded by Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, were passed unanimously at a special meeting of the Wesleyan Missionary Committee:—
> After a lengthened conversation on the educational and evangelistic policy of our Indian missions, the committee expresses its conviction:—
> (1) That the main energy of our missions in India is devoted to directly evangelistic work, and that the higher educational enterprises are but a subordinate branch of the work.
> (2) The committee expresses its judgment that, in the interests of the future development of Indian thought and social life, it is necessary to maintain our existing educational enterprises in India.
> (3) But the committee rejoices in the remarkable successes which have in recent years attended our evangelistic work, especially in the lower caste and non-caste populations; expresses its determination to develop with all the energy possible to it such work in such populations; and earnestly hopes that means will be forthcoming for the large extension of evangelistic work, especially by means of native agency.
> (4) That the members of the financial sub-committee, together with the Revs. Dr. Stephenson, H. P. Hughes, M.A., W. T. Davison, M.A., and Mr. R. W. Perks, be appointed a special sub-committee to prepare a statement of the facts and considerations on which the above resolutions are founded.

It is, perhaps, as well that a kind of compromise, as here indicated, should have been arrived at. But there is no doubt that the missionary problem is only in the initial stages of its solution; and it is to be hoped that all the societies will recognise that God is inaugurating a "forward movement" of the most far-reaching character.

It is true that travellers passing through a country, or "Friends of Missions" with a very brief experience of missionary life, cannot know all the circumstances and situations which have grown up during a century. But they are able to perceive inconsistencies and incongruities to which long habit has blinded those who are immersed in them. The impressions of a Japanese journalist or a Maori king may not take in all the events which have led up to present conditions; but it is instructive to know what these strangers think of us. And it is useful for our dear missionary brethren to see themselves as others see them, who come fresh from the outer world. On the one hand, let them not be too sensitive to kindly criticism; but, on the other, let the critics be kindly, and not censorious, remembering the Master's challenge, "Who art thou that judgest the servant of another?"

The meetings in Edinburgh, of the Established and Free Church General Assemblies, have not been marked by any discussions of unusual importance to the Church at large. There was a good deal of personal interest attaching to the election of a Professor of New Testament Exegesis in the Free Church College, Edinburgh, arising from the circumstance that Dr. Marcus Dods was a leading candidate. Dr. Dods is well known to be a man of independent thought, as well as of evangelical fervour. His address last year at the Pan-Presbyterian Council was felt in some respects to be very unsettling in its view of Scripture inspiration. His election, by a large majority, to the vacant professorship will therefore be regarded with natural solicitude by many fathers and brethren, all the more that he wields a powerful influence over Scottish students. We can but hope that with the grave responsibility upon him of moulding the doctrinal beliefs of many of our future preachers and teachers, he will be so guided as to disappoint the fears of the orthodox.

There was the customary pomp and circumstance attending the opening of the Established Assembly, and the presence of the Royal High Commissioner. We note that a correspondent of a daily paper was struck with the lack of spiritual tone in the proceedings of the older Assembly, as compared with the sister gathering; "moderatism" dies hard. Rev. Jacob Primmer made another effort to arouse his brethren on the subject of the "graven images" in St. Giles's Church, but the Assembly gave short thrift to this doughty, if somewhat indiscreet, champion of the Reformed faith. A very pleasing incident of the Established Assembly was the presence of the venerable Dr. A. N. Somerville, and his cheering words with respect to Christian work among Jews on the Continent.

THE QUESTION OF THE HOUR:—FOREIGN MISSIONS.

By Rev. R. BRUCE, D.D., of the Church Missionary Society, Ispahan, Persia.

IN common with all Christians who seek earnestly to know the mind of the Master, and to do his will, we missionaries owe a great debt of obligation to "A Missionary" for his articles on "The Question of the Hour." Indeed, it may be called the two questions of the hour, not for missionaries alone, but for the whole Church of Christ: (1) "How to preach the Gospel to every creature"; (2) and how to obey our Lord's teaching, "to forsake all that we have," in order "to be his disciples." Such teaching can only come with power from one who (as your honoured correspondent does) himself practises what he preaches.

In an age of worldliness and luxury—not in the world only, but in the Church and her missions also—this latter question is of paramount importance, and it is, therefore, the more to be regretted that "A Missionary's" arguments should be weakened by statements which do not appear to me to be in accordance with facts; and that our Lord's teaching, which was intended for every member of the body, should be limited to one class of the members.

I understand "A Missionary's" position to be, that the exact ritual (as he calls it) laid down by our Lord for the twelve and seventy on the two occasions of his sending them to the Jews of Palestine, is obligatory to the letter on all missionaries in every age and clime; that they should provide neither gold, silver, nor brass in their purses, nor scrip, nor two coats, nor two walking sticks; and that they should depend solely on the hospitality "of the worthy" in every stage of every journey, and in all their sojourn in heathen lands; and that is the only missionary system ordained by God.

As Mr. Baldwin and his companion were obliged, when starting on the one tour of which he gives us an example, to get rid of the remainder of the silver and brass which they had provided for themselves when leaving home, it appears that he does not think this exact ritual extends to a missionary's journey from his home to the sea-port whence he sets sail for heathendom, or to his support on board ship.

Every missionary is plainly, by this rule, bound to leave home on foot, with the exact outfit as limited by the aforesaid ritual; to depend solely on the hospitality of the worthy in every stage of his journey at home, and on board ship; to visit no missionary committee or other Christian friends, either on his journey from home, or during his whole missionary life abroad; or, if he does, not to salute them. His salutations are to be limited to the houses of the "worthy" hosts, whom the great Master has pledged Himself to provide for him at every stage of his life.

But what I particularly object to is the statements (THE CHRISTIAN, March 15, 1889, page 10) that "the unceasing obligation of the law" is proved by "the example of the Apostles and others in primitive times;" and, "It will be seen that it was the rule for Apostolic missionaries to go from place to place dependent only on the bounty of the 'worthy.'"

I have not so read the Acts and Epistles of the Apostles. I am not aware that there is a solitary instance on record in which any Apostolic missionary followed this "exact ritual." The only example given us by "A Missionary" is that of St. Paul; and he informs us that this (viz., depending solely for his support on the hospitality of the "worthy" heathen or Jewish host) was the general practice of the great Apostle of the Gentiles; that on two instances he deviated from this rule, the chief of which was at Corinth. "But lest it should be taken as a precedent he is at great care in 1 Cor. ix. to explain that his course on that occasion was exceptional."

So far is this from being the case that St. Paul distinctly states (1 Cor. ix. 9) that it was his custom and that of Barnabas to support themselves by the labour of their hands. Now, Paul made only one missionary tour in company with Barnabas, and that was his first; and when he wrote his first Epistle to the Corinthians, nearly twelve years (from A.D. 45 to A.D. 57) had elapsed since the first two missionaries to the heathen started from Antioch. And from what he writes, we may fairly draw the following conclusions: (1) That these first and greatest missionaries did not consider themselves bound by the letter of our Lord's command to the twelve to seek for "the worthy" in every place, and depend on his bounty. (2) That under the guidance of the blessed Spirit they voluntarily imposed on themselves the practice of self-support. (3) That they did not think this or any other strict rule was binding on other missionaries. (4) That for a period of twelve years, at least, they both continued to support themselves, as far as they were able, by manual labour. What St. Luke relates of the first missionary journey is quite in accordance with this; for we find the Apostles in Antioch of Pisidia preaching only on the Sabbath days; and most probably they spent the other six days working at their trades.

There is only one instance of any Apostle mentioning his host (Rom. xvi. 23): "Gaius mine host, and of the whole Church;" and this in Corinth, the very city in which "A Missionary" says Paul deviated from his usual practice, and did not depend on the bounty of the "worthy." There is one instance, also, of a hostess, Lydia, in Philippi. But the way in which the four missionaries, after they had spent some time in the city, accepted her hospitality, when "she besought and constrained them to enter into her house," proves that they had not found the "worthy" in that city; or, if they had done so, they transgressed another part of the exact ritual by going from house to house. In both these cases it was not on arrival in a city, nor from among unconverted Jews or heathen, that Paul found a host, but from among his own converts, after a lengthened sojourn in the place.

We conclude, then, that Paul and Barnabas did not follow the rule laid down by our Lord for the twelve in Judea; but that they followed another rule voluntarily imposed on themselves under the guidance of the Divine Spirit. And, moreover, though Paul was careful to impose no burden on anyone, still he thankfully accepted and spent in the relief of his personal wants voluntary contributions from churches in other lands. He did so in Macedonia (Phil. iv. 16): "Even in Thessalonica ye sent once and again unto my needs." He did so in Corinth (2 Cor. xi. 8, 9, R.V.): "I robbed other churches, taking wages of them, that I might minister unto you. And when I was present with you, and was in want, the brethren from Macedonia supplied the measure of my want." He did so in Rome (Phil. iv. 18): "I have all things and abound: having received from Epaphroditus the things that came from you, an odour of a sweet smell, a sacrifice acceptable, well-pleasing to God."

In both cases where we have the most explicit account of how Paul supported himself by manual labour, we are told as explicitly that he failed to earn enough to keep himself from want, and that God supplemented the Apostle's insufficient earnings by voluntary contributions from Christian Churches.

The rule which Paul and Barnabas voluntarily imposed on themselves did not simply involve self-support, but celibacy also (1 Cor. ix. 4—6). And we have seen that even as a celibate Paul was not able to support himself entirely by his labour, but also that he gratefully accepted wages from other churches and the bounty of worthy Christian hosts such as Lydia and Gaius. It is plain, then, that celibacy bore a necessary part of their rule of life; and "for the present distress" it was well it should have been so. All true Christians will highly honour those who in the present day feel called by God to follow the practice of these first and greatest missionaries, in both these particulars, provided they do not impose their rule of life on others, and that they write of other missionaries in the same spirit as Paul did of "the other Apostles, and the brethren of the Lord, and Cephas." "A Missionary's" exact ritual would necessitate celibacy just as much as Paul's, but there is this great difference between the two cases; the former asserts that his practice is the only one ordained by God for all missionaries, the latter is careful to point out that he and Barnabas were exceptions to the general practice of Apostolic missionaries in his day.

There is room to-day also for celibate missionaries who will support themselves by their own hands, or depend on the bounty of the worthy; and there is room for married missionaries and missionary ladies who can do neither one nor the other, but who do work for their bread in the best way by "giving themselves to prayer and the ministry of the word," living either on their own resources, as many do, or on the voluntary contributions of Christians, which are "an odour of a sweet smell, a sacrifice acceptable, well-pleasing to God," fruit abounding to the account of the worthy donors.

All teaching that sets up a higher standard of holiness for any class of Christians than that which is binding on all the members of the Body, is in our opinion unscriptural and false. If our blessed Master's commands to the twelve "to provide neither gold, nor silver, nor brass in their purses" be binding on missionaries, to the letter, how much more are his oft-repeated injunctions on the same subjects binding on all Christians, to the letter, also: "Sell that ye have, and give alms." "Except a man forsake all that he hath, he cannot be my disciple." "Lay not up for yourselves treasure on earth." "Labour not for the meat which perisheth," &c. All those teachings of our Lord are binding on all members of the Body equally, and to the fullest extent and depth of the Spirit's meaning, just as much now as they were 1800 years ago.

It was not to any class of men in the Church that our Lord entrusted the great Commission of being witnesses for Him to the uttermost parts of the earth, but to the whole Church of Christ. And never was there an age in which the trumpet voice of the preacher of the Gospel was more wanted to awaken the Church at home and her missionaries abroad to the absolute obligation which rests upon us all to forsake all things, and to live lives separate from the world, so as to manifest to all men that we are followers of Him who had not where to lay his head—imitators of the Son of God, not only in the beauty of his character, but in the simplicity and unworldliness of his outward life.

THE BLOOD OF CHRIST

IN RELATION TO WALKING IN THE LIGHT.

Under the above heading, there is an interesting article in The Life of Faith for last month from the pen of Rev. Evan H. Hopkins, the drift of which is to express his full concurrence with the view of 1 John i. 7, set forth in Rev. H. C. G. Moule's excellent little book, "The Cleansing Blood." Mr. Hopkins writes:—

For some time past I have felt convinced that the blood of Jesus Christ in the New Testament means invariably the blood as shed—that is, the life sacrificed; that it must, therefore, be understood as equivalent to his death. That puts before us the ideas of sacrifice, atonement, propitiation. In Rev. H. C. G. Moule's little book, "The Cleansing Blood: a Study of 1 John i. 7," this is brought out most clearly and conclusively. I cannot, therefore, agree with those who regard "the blood of Christ" as equivalent to his risen life. Nor do I believe that the teaching of 1 John i. 7 is, that the blood or risen life of Christ, by flowing through our natures, is cleansing us from inward defilement.

It is a cause for thankfulness that a teacher of such widespread influence as Mr. Hopkins should thus publicly protest against so unscriptural a view of "the blood of Christ" as that to which he refers, and which it is to be feared is held by many of the more extreme advocates of "holiness." It is well too that that admirable little compendium of Scripture teaching on the subject, for which we are indebted to Mr. Moule, should be thus publicly commended by one whose commendation will carry no little weight with so many. But it is a matter for regret that, whilst accepting fully Mr. Moule's view of the sacrificial allusion contained in 1 John i. 7, Mr. Hopkins should propose to limit the efficacy of the blood of Christ there spoken of to sins of ignorance. His words are:—

But the difficulty that arises in the mind of anyone who intelligently considers the passage is this: If the cleansing is not that of inward purification, but that which refers to our judicial position, why is it put conditionally "IF we walk in the light." Surely it may reasonably be said, our acceptance judicially does not depend upon our holy walking. Now the answer to this objection seems to me to be this:—

That the cleansing in 1 John i. 7 refers not to known sin but to sins of ignorance seems clear from the fact that it is assumed that we are walking "in the light," that is, with consciences void of offence—"knowing nothing against ourselves" (1 Cor. iv. 4). Now a special privilege is here referred to—a privilege that belongs only to those who are walking in the light—and that privilege is the Divine assurance that, in regard to the sins of which we are not conscious, there is a perpetual and all-prevailing provision in the atoning sacrifice of Christ. "If we walk in the light," and not unless this condition is fulfilled, have we the Divine warrant for believing that our sins of ignorance are being cleansed away, day by day, moment by moment.

But why this limitation of the meaning of so cardinal a passage, when the words themselves suggest no such limitation? Indeed, one may rather say, quite the contrary; for as Mr. Moule well points out, let anyone read the Greek of Leviticus xvi. 30 in the LXX., and the distinct allusion to it will become obvious. Mark there the three expressions used of sins confessed over the scapegoat, "all the iniquities of the children of Israel, and all their transgressions, in all their sins." This surely cannot be limited to sins of ignorance.

How many Christians have found this precious text (1 John i. 7) a very pillow of rest upon a dying bed! How many, too (like Hedley Vicars), have come into the light trusting to this soul-sustaining promise! And are we to limit its meaning to make it square with a theory as to what walking in the light ought to mean? Surely it were better to suspect that any theory must be wrong that requires us to alter the meaning of words which speak for themselves.

The fact is the difficulty which forces Mr. Hopkins into this questionable limitation of the meaning of the words, "all sin," is not in the passage itself, but has been imported into it. It arises from supposing that to walk in the light means "with consciences void of offence—knowing nothing against ourselves" (1 Cor. iv. 4). Where have we any warrant from Scripture for this supposition?

To "walk in the light" must surely be taken in connection with the words immediately preceding. "This then is the message which we have heard of Him, and declare unto you, that God is light, and in Him is no darkness at all." This points to God's manifestation of Himself in the Gospel of his Son. "The light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ" (2 Cor. iv. 6) is the light in which believers should walk. Conversion is described (1 Pet. ii. 9) as being called "out of darkness into his marvellous light." Our Lord says, "I am the light of the world; he that followeth Me shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life," and it is after speaking of Christ as the Life who was manifested, heard, seen, looked upon, handled, that the Apostle goes on to say, "This then is the message...God is light, and in Him is no darkness at all."

This must mean more than that God is a detecter of evil, or that God is perfect holiness, or that God is perfection in the abstract, these being the common but not very satisfactory explanations of "God is light."

It is in the revelation of Himself in the person and work of his beloved Son, the revelation of his character, his ways, his purposes, that we learn best the meaning of this concise but most expressive phrase, "God is light."

May it not be that much misconception of the meaning of 1 John i. 5—7 has arisen from looking in this passage for an advanced stage of Christian experience, whereas it is with the very A B C of Christianity that the Apostle begins? Further on in the epistle we have, no doubt, advanced experience; but in this opening passage it is genuineness rather than advanced progress, on which he insists. "If we say that we have fellowship with Him," is a profession of Christianity. If this profession be accompanied by a walk of an opposite character, it is simply untrue. If it be accompanied by a corresponding walk, not in the light of conscience merely, but in the light of God's revelation of Himself in "the redemption that is in Christ Jesus," then it stands the test, and our mutual fellowship with God is assured; and lest this wondrous privilege of fellowship with Him should seem too great for us, sinners as we are in ourselves, to claim or to maintain, we are assured of God's provision for keeping us clean in his sight. "The blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin."

Do not the following verses, also, show that we cannot limit "sin" here to sins of ignorance? How can "if we confess our sins" be explained of such? But I am more anxious to point out the value of Mr. Hopkins' testimony to the sacrificial view of the blood in this passage, than to express dissent, as I have ventured to do, from his limitation of the word "sin."

HOLIDAYS FOR YOUNG WORKERS.

Since it began, the Y.W.C.A. Convalescent, Sick-aid, and Holiday Department four years ago, we have been enabled to assist 1500 young women through the fund, according to the special requirements of each, when compelled to give up work through illness, or when requiring change in convalescence. Most of those assisted obtained from two to six weeks' rest and fresh air in country Homes and cottages, and returned with restored vigour to renew the often hard struggle for their livelihood.

Our friends may help (1) By sending contributions to the Convalescent, Sick-aid, and Holiday Fund; (2) by providing us with well-selected holiday lodgings for the poorer working girls, rent free, and defraying expenses of board and lodging; (3) by becoming annual subscribers to our Free-bed Fund, to enable us to secure beds in carefully selected convalescent and cottage hospitals, &c., for urgent sick cases; (4) by sending us invitations for "days in the country," for parties of our working girls, on bank holidays and Saturday afternoons in June, July, August, and September; (5) by inviting girls to spend a fortnight in private country houses, to board with the servants, or in lodges, coffee-houses, farmhouses, &c.

The hon. sec. for London and Southern Divisions is Miss F. M. Fraser, 30, Onslow-gardens, London, S.W.; for Northern Division, Miss Edith Wright, 16, Belvidere-road, Liverpool; for Irish Division, Miss Macnaghten, Runkerry, Bushmills, Ireland.

"THE MISERIES OF CIVILISATION."—In the account of his recent journey across Greenland, Dr. Nansen says:—"We left Greenland almost sorry to part with this happy people. These children of nature, who have no experience of the miseries of civilisation, do not know real poverty. Sometimes they are in want, but generally they have plenty of food, and are always happy and content."

THE GOSPEL IN CAMP.—About eight hundred militia-men from various parts of Wales and England will be assembled for the annual training under canvas at Brecon in the course of a week or two. Every year the camp is visited repeatedly, with tracts and other religious papers. Christian periodicals, tracts (illustrated preferred), and Gospel booklets are earnestly solicited by Mr. J. W. Maskell, 61, Struet, Brecon, South Wales.

MISSIONARY LIFE.

IMPORTANT LETTER
OF THE LATE REV. GEORGE BOWEN,
WRITTEN IN BOMBAY, IN 1849.

The following was first issued by Mr. Bowen in tract form, for special circulation, under the title of "What is the True Missionary Life? Discussed in a Letter from a Missionary to his Brethren." He had then been one year in India. He firmly adhered to the principles here set forth during his forty years of noble mission work. This letter has been three times inserted in Mr. Bowen's paper, The Bombay Guardian. It is now issued as a most valuable message to God's people, not only as regards the great missionary discussion, but also as highly instructive upon the personal consecration which should characterise all the true followers of Jesus.

Dear Brethren in the Lord,

MY mind has been much at work of late upon the question: What mode of life should a missionary adopt in order to have the approbation of his Master? Believing that Christ would not willingly have us remain in the dark concerning a question of this kind, I have studied the Word of God in the sure expectation of finding the needed light. The conclusions to which I find myself tending are so different from those which I suppose to be entertained by my brethren in this ministry, that it has seemed best, before definitely making up my mind as to what is duty, to submit to them my views so far as they are formed, and solicit an expression of their opinion concerning them. I have felt considerable pain while revolving this matter, in view of the pain I might possibly give you by adopting a new standard of missionary life; but this is in a measure removed by the reflection that in adopting your present style of life you have acted on principle and conscientiously, as truly as I now am in addressing you; and that it will be no more difficult for you, and less painful, to give the reasons why your style of life is what it is, than for me to state the thoughts which have arisen in my own mind. Light is as much an object to you as to me; by an amicable and earnest discussion light may be evolved, and cannot possibly be extinguished or diminished: and I conclude that you will welcome this discussion, and spare me a portion of your time sufficient to read, digest, and perhaps reply to the following considerations.

Light wanted.

The question more fully stated is this: Shall the missionary live as a rich man or as a poor man? If as a poor man, shall it be according to the European idea of poverty or the Hindoo? Shall his style of living be luxurious, or comfortable, or self-denying? Shall his salary be large, or moderate, or as little as possible? Shall he have any expensive equipage, or a plain one, or none at all? Shall he have many servants, few, or none at all?

Rich or Poor?

Perhaps the opinion of some may be that this question is an unimportant one. The things upon which the Bible lays stress are of another and higher character. The great scope of the Bible is to lead Christians to set their affection upon things above, not on things on the earth; and if they live with their affections detached from these things it is a matter of comparatively little consequence whether they detach these things from their lives or not. Two persons may live together in the same style, and participate in the same comforts; but God, who sees the heart, may know that the one is bound up in these comforts, while the other disregards them, and has his treasure in heaven. There is a wide interval between their spiritual natures; this interval if not represented in their use of worldly goods, is in many more important things; and this suffices to God. I have at times been disposed to entertain this opinion; but recent study of the Scriptures leads me to reject it.

Objection: "No Consequence."

The Bible does not represent the externals of a Christian life as unimportant. When Christ sent forth the twelve (see Luke ix.) He with remarkable conciseness bade them preach the Kingdom of God, and, with equally remarkable amplitude, instructs them as to the mode of life they were to follow, taking up successively the questions of a scrip, a staff, gold, silver, clothes, coats, shoes, food, and lodging. The same thing is observable in his directions to the seventy. Whether these commands related exclusively to the disciples of that day, or otherwise, is a question I do not here agitate. I quote them to show that the question—what sort of life is suited to the missionary—is one considered by the Lord Jesus Christ not unimportant. He has expressly declared it to be important, even in all its particulars and to its minutest details. He has caused these instructions to be recorded no less than four times in the everlasting Gospel. See Matt. x.; Mark vi.; Luke ix. and x. He has taken care to notify us concerning his own mode of life, that he hungered, thirsted, and had not where to lay his head.

Bible speaks plainly.

The mode of life of the Apostles is described with a particularity and a frequency and an emphasis that utterly forbid the supposition that this is a matter of inferior importance. It seems to have been the earnest endeavour of Paul to exhibit himself to the Church as a model minister of Jesus Christ; and it cannot escape the notice of anyone who contemplates his picture as it is portrayed in the Epistles that the details of his manner of living have a prominent part in that picture. In 1 Cor. iv. 11, he writes: "Even unto this present hour we both hunger and thirst, and are naked, and are buffeted, and have no certain dwelling-place, and labour, working with our own hands." And that this was voluntary appears from chap. ix., where he says: "Have we not power to eat and to drink? Have we not power to forbear working? We have not used this power, but suffer all things, lest we should hinder the Gospel of Christ." And to the Thessalonians he writes: "Not because we have not power, but to make ourselves an example unto you to follow us." In 2 Cor. vi. he gives a catalogue of the proofs by which he substantiates himself among men as a true minister of a true God; and among them appear "necessities, distresses," poverty, utter destitution. "As poor, yet making many rich; as having nothing, and yet possessing all things." See also 2 Cor. xi. 27.

Paul's Example.

It is impossible for me, in view of these and many similar passages, to escape the conviction that the question which I have introduced is one of consequence. We are, I think, to believe, upon the testimony of God's Word, that there is a style of life peculiarly adapted to the missionary, and which Christ, for reasons well known to Himself, whether obvious to us or not, greatly desires to see his servants adopt.

What, now, is that style of life? It is that style which is best calculated to convince an ungodly, sensual world, that a Divine power has been at work within us, transforming us, so that we are no longer like them, engrossed by the pleasures of this world, but are possessed of a something that satisfies us independently of what this world can give. Men are carnal, and as carnal God addresses them. He would give them sensible proofs of the Christian religion. The eloquence and logic of an angel would fail to arrest them, for the very reason that he is an angel; but let a servant of God give full proof of deadness to the world, that world to which they are so enslaved, and their attention is arrested. They are amazingly under the power of their appetites and lusts; and the sight of a man having all these in perfect subjection must startle them.

What style of Life?

But this inward victory will never be known to them till its trophies are exhibited to their senses through the medium of the life. The high aims of the Christian can only be known to them by a demonstration parallel to their senses. So long as there is the least supposable foundation for scepticism they will be sceptical about those high aims; and will refuse to believe the minister of Christ indifferent to comforts and luxuries, and the gratifications of sense, and reputation, and distinction, until they see him throwing these all behind his back, and signifying by his treatment of them the disesteem in which he holds them. Until that moment, though the Spirit be really in his heart, though he be truly seeking the glory of God and the good of men, though his affections be truly alienated from the objects of sense, yet the world will not believe in his transformation, or impute to him any principles superior to those that govern themselves. And if it should so happen that the very things they seek after, which they feed their imaginations on when alone, dream about by night, converse about among themselves, labour year after year by fair means or foul to obtain: if these very things should happen to be found in the missionary's life, will they not be fatal to the production of that evidence which the Gospel is aiming to produce? Let a man with one hand offer the Gospel to a crowd of heathen, and at the same time be handling a purse of gold in the other, will they give much heed to his message? No, he must put the gold out of sight if he would have them listen to his words. There is about the gold a fascination to them which binds up all their senses, and baffles all attempts to secure their attention to the Gospel. Money is their god; they worship it and the things which it procures. If, when they come to see us, they find their gods with us, viz., money, authority, luxury, distinction, they will honour us because their gods are with us, and will envy us. But their respect will not be of a kind favourable to religious influence; nor will they be ready to discover the evidence that we are transformed from our original natures, or that Omnipotence dwells in the bosom of the Christian Church.

Heathen and Gold.

It is not sufficient that we do not idolise the things they idolise; we must openly and unequivocally disown those things. It is not enough that we can use those things without being contaminated by them; we are to reject them because they contaminate others, and because others will not reject them while we retain them. Men are carnal; and the evidences which spiritual persons can detect are hid from them. Therefore the style of life which Christ enjoins upon us is that which will tend to flash upon their very vision the evidence that we are born of God, and are looking to things unseen and eternal. This species of proof should come first; in itself insufficient, but indispensable as a preliminary. When they have received this they will be ready to inquire for others; but till then they will be indifferent to others. The glory of the Christian religion is not only in the purity of its law, but in the sanctions of that law; not only in the beauty of its morality, but in its power to engrave that morality in the hearts of its believers. There is much excellent morality to be found in some of the sacred books of the Hindoos; but then their religion is utterly impotent to enforce the observance of that morality. There is but one religion that can really transform; and Christ would have the transformations it effects exhibited to the eyes of men. "Let your light so shine before men that they may see your good works, and glorify," not you, but "your Father which is in heaven." It is not enough that God is the witness of our renewed nature; that the spiritual in heaven and earth behold it; but an ungodly, carnal world must see it. The Apostles could say, "We are made a spectacle unto the world, and to angels, and to men."

"Let your Light so shine."

The style of life which is adapted to give proof in favour of Christianity is also adapted to exhibit it, and make beholders acquainted with the great characteristics of the Gospel. In 2 Thess. iii. 8, Paul says, "We wrought with labour and travail, night and day, not because we have not power, but to make ourselves an example unto you to follow us." Paul was not necessitated to support himself by his own hands there; and, seeing that he was a solitary representative of Christ and a depositary of Christian truth in the midst of that heathen city, seeing that his time as a minister of the Gospel was of unspeakable, incomparable value, it is a thing to be wondered at that he did not avail himself of the means of subsistence furnished him in the providence of God. It would seem that if ever there was a minister of the Gospel called upon by his position to let work alone, and give himself exclusively to the Gospel, it was Paul in Thessalonica. If, then, he could so profusely sacrifice his time, how much importance must he have attached to the end in view, viz., the exhibition of a model life. I do not cite this in favour of the notion that ministers should support themselves by their own hands; but as showing in what great account he held the outward exhibition of those principles which Christ had implanted in him. Though filled with the Holy Ghost, he left off preaching, and went to work; and what for? Why, he aimed at no other thing in working than in preaching. In fact, it was a part of his preaching, and regarded by himself as indispensable. It was, as it were, the interpreter of his oral preaching, without which the latter would not have been understood by the people. And we may preach the Gospel for hundreds of years in India by word of mouth and by the printed page; but until it be incorporated in our life, and that too in a way adapted to the dull apprehensions and sensuous natures of the Hindoos, they will not understand it.

Paul's Means of Support.

Preaching by Life.

The power of the human mind to remain ignorant of Divine truth under the most vigorous and long-continued efforts to enlighten it, is one of the mysteries of human depravity, and one which will continue to meet us and dishearten us till we adopt the Apostolic way of blending the language and the life. Whether we will it or no our manner of life is the great interpreter of our Gospel to the people we dwell among. They hear us say, "Whosoever he be of you that forsaketh not all that he hath, he cannot be my disciple"; and to know the meaning of these words they look to our life. If its true interpretation is not found in this, then its true interpretation will never reach them. If they see there, instead of a vacuum of the things they covet, an abundance of them, the words have at once lost all their life and power. Five times, speaking by the Holy Ghost, Paul enjoins upon us to follow him as he followed Christ. To Timothy he says: "Be thou an example of the believers." To Titus: "In all things showing thyself a pattern of good works." The missionary must be a pattern man; and render his life an irresistible sermon on the words, "Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world."

These considerations lead inevitably to the conclusion that Christ would have us exhibit in our mode of living, to those we preach to, and in a manner comprehensible to them, those principles of the Gospel which are susceptible of being so exhibited. And here one remarkable feature in the position of a missionary to the heathen presents itself to our notice. He may go so far in self-denial as to exhibit this grace to the circle in which he was brought up. He may go farther, even so far as to exhibit it to the Church at home generally. He may go farther, even so far as to exhibit it to his brother missionaries. Yet, after all this, he has not even begun to exhibit it to the heathen. This is owing to the great poverty, plainness of living, and absence of comfort of the heathen, compared with Christian nations. That style of living which would be decidedly moderate at home, is princely in the eyes of the natives of India. One or two hundred pounds a year makes a man almost a nobleman in the estimation of the mass of these natives, and they are utterly without a faculty to discern, in the life of such a one, the exhibition of self-denial. There exists between the Saheblogue and the natives a vast interval; and the former are virtually, in respect to the position they occupy, the nobility of the land. To see them the people must look up. In their hands are the treasures of the land, at their disposal the offices, and in their favour reputation; and those whose aspirations are for these things look to them. They occupy one level and the people another. Now if the missionary of the Gospel be identified with them, he will be clothed with a certain external superiority, altogether in the way of his exerting such an influence as flowed from the life of Paul and his fellow-labourers. When the missionary saheb goes into the bazaar to make known the Gospel, he will be as one standing on a pedestal. The people will look upon him as one who is above them in the worldly scale; and while he and they occupy positions so unequal, they will remain ignorant of the true principles of the Gospel.

What the Natives can see.

It may be that in order to reach a position which seems to them elevated, the missionary has really descended much; it may be that in leaving his native land and the bosom of his loved church, to take up his abode among heathen, he has made a sacrifice greater than they can conceive of; but it is not a sacrifice palpable to their apprehensions; and they will simply view him as occupying a position which they would love to occupy. He must destroy that pedestal from under him, if he would embody to their eyes the doctrine which Christ made so prominent, "Deny thyself and take up thy cross and follow Me." As he has renounced his native land, he must renounce his Sahebship. In the providence of God there is given him this opportunity of showing to the heathen the all-sufficiency of Christ, and the indifference felt by Christians for those things which constitute the elysium of the world. Those steps in his course of self-renunciation, which preceded his arrival among the heathen, are hid from them; but this is one that will meet their eye, and deeply impress their minds.

If it be said that there is something in these adventitious distinctions that gives us an influence over the native mind, and that we have no right to throw away this influence, I would in the first place suggest that no account is made of this sort of influence in the Bible, and in the next place ask whether anything in actual experience shows it to be of value. How long and in what plenitude have we enjoyed it, how ample the experiment made: yet what are the results! Those who have been attracted to us by means of the worldly advantages connected with our position, how insensible have they remained to the religious influences we have sought to exert. How common the remark that those who have served us longest, and derived the largest emoluments, are those who appear least affected by the Gospel. And if from this number, in the course of many years, one, two, or three converts be gathered, the mixture of worldly and religious influence to which they have been subjected manifests itself in a vitiated and obscure piety. Our true weapons are not carnal. If we have worldly ends to accomplish, then this worldly influence is valuable; but if we aim at Gospel ends, it is at the best worthless. It may be favourable to false religions, but is doubtless adverse to the true. We conquer by renouncing such advantages. When we are weak we are strong.

Worldly Influence hurtful.

If it be said that the church at large, even the most pious and devoted portion of it, demands no such thing at our hands, and passes no censure upon our present manner of life, I admit it; and beg in reply to present the following consideration. Missionaries are placed by Christ in the van of the church; and He does not expect that the main body of the church will be keener sighted to discover truth than they; but on the contrary that they, as true pioneers, will be first to see what is yet unseen, and afterwards instruct the church to see it. In the body of the church there exists no power to redeem the church from a low state of piety to a higher. How to effect this is the problem of problems. The tendency in the world is for each man to model his conscience upon that of his neighbour, and this tendency is of overwhelming power and universality. The same tendency exists in the church; and the members of it generally cannot possibly find in the Word of God any higher standard of Christian duty than is reflected in the lives of the more pious of their number.

Popular Church Ideas.

How stupendous the measures adopted by Christ at the beginning of our dispensation, to re-create the conscience of the church. Having become a man, He selected twelve from the lower walks of life, separated them from the mass of believers, and, taking them into closest intimacy with Himself, proceeded to delineate before their eyes in his own life, the true standard. Finally, having by his example and instructions, and by the Holy Spirit, moulded them to his liking, He gave them, and in them to the church, a new and right Christian conscience. How unspeakable the gift! And vast consequences depended on the careful perpetuation of that standard! For when, after a century or two, it was lost, it remained lost. For more than twelve centuries a darkness brooded on the church, which she was impotent to remove. There appear to have existed some few true Christians in the Roman Church, as Thomas à Kempis and others; but these good men, though lovers and students of the Bible, could study it to the end of their lives without ever surmising that Popery with her monstrous errors was not in it, or that it contained doctrines unmitigably hostile to the system of Popery. And let us hearken to Luther. "Learn from me," he says, "how difficult a thing it is to throw off errors confirmed by the example of all the world, and which through long habits have become a second nature to us. Though I had been seven years reading and publicly explaining the Holy Scriptures with great zeal, so that I knew them almost by heart, I yet still clung with obstinacy to Popery.

Apostolic Standard lost.

And what a striking illustration of this have we in the utter and universal disregard shown for fifteen centuries to the last great command of our Saviour. During all that time this ponderous command lay lightly as a feather on the conscience of the church, and good men could live and die without ever once suspecting their obligations to evangelise the heathen. It was by the work of the Holy Ghost upon the conscience of individuals that God effected the Reformation; and it was in the same way that Christ brought again to the understanding of the church his last command. And in all probability this piecemeal resurrection of the Word of God has but begun, and magnificent truths are lying there, as in a mausoleum, undreamt of by us; yes, doubtless there are discoveries of Christian duty, as well as of the riches of Christ's grace, yet to be made, no less startling than those we now rejoice over. Therefore it will by no means do for us to adopt the conscience of the church as the measure of our own, but rather resist it in its poverty and narrowness; and with great ardour seek to vivify and embody in our own lives those principles which are yet uncomprehended in it. All things considered, it were a burning shame for us to be satisfied with that meagre view of our responsibility which the church entertains.

Dawn of Revival.

And if the church makes a disproportionate estimate of the comparative responsibility resting on her and on us, with that mistake we have nothing to do; the great mistake which it concerns us to rectify is in the defective notion entertained of our responsibility compared with that which Christ entertains, and so abundantly displays in his Word. He has written our responsibility in the lives of Paul and Peter and John; has promised us grace as unbounded as they enjoyed; and will expect us to answer for any falsification or reduction of the Apostolic standard brought to pass through our lives. The leaders of the church and the main body of the church are connected by a chain, and by the full length of that chain are separated. She considers it her privilege to be at a certain distance from them; and while so much of her pristine corruption remains she will use that privilege. They, seeing her inferior standard, make war upon it; but in vain. There is but one way in which they can elevate her; it is by going higher themselves. She will rigidly maintain the existing interval and the existing connection; in order to maintain them she must reach a higher consecration. Then will be fulfilled the word of the prophet Isaiah: "For brass I will bring gold, and for iron I will bring silver, and for wood brass, and for stones iron."

A Wingless Eagle.

The Gospel is represented as something swift-moving and powerful. It is compared to fire, to a runner, and the wings of an angel flying in the free heaven are given to it. But what has it been in India? Like an eagle shorn of its wings, a smothered flame, a sword all hacked and rusty. To account for this modern paralysis of our glorious Gospel we have had recourse to the strength of human depravity on the one hand, and on the other to the sovereignty of Him we serve. But the glory of the Gospel is in this very thing, that it is omnipotent in the face of human depravity and of the allied forces marshalled under Satan; that it is omnipotent with respect to the very maturity and utmost perfection of sin. As respects the Divine sovereignty, I acknowledge that it becomes us blind mortals, led in a path we know not, greatly to reverence this attribute of God. But until we have made full proof of the measures indicated in the Gospel, until we have done the things commanded us, we cannot conscientiously account for the apparent decrepitude of the Gospel by referring it to a decree of God. There are decrees of God which relate to our present conduct; and there is good reason to believe that by obeying these we shall fulfil the conditions upon which success is depending.

I do not suppose that by conforming to Apostolic simplicity and self-renunciation we shall necessarily convert souls. We might make all the sacrifices mentioned, and without the descent of the Spirit things would go on as they have hitherto done. But the great argument is this, that we should thereby honour the Word, and Him that gave it, and secure a larger measure of the approbation of our Master than we now enjoy; and would consequently be justified in expecting the answer to our prayers for an outpouring of the Spirit. Our Saviour, though the Lord of all grace, is an absolute Master. In all his dispensations from the foundation of the world to the present time we clearly discern this controlling principle, namely, a withholding of the blessing until the appointed conditions be fulfilled. "Though we believe not He abideth faithful." If we dishonour his Word He will honour it. With all his boundless compassion to a dying world He does not hesitate to stretch a heaven of brass over the whole circumference of a disobedient Christendom, until his servants arise and loose the Bible from its convent chains. He leaves the heathen under the unbroken sway of the prince of this world for fifteen centuries, till individuals present themselves in the church, and re-utter the long lost words: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature."

Blessings wait till we obey.

If then it appears that the standard of self-denial in the primitive church is in any sense a standard given to us, we may well believe that the decree concerning the salvation of the heathen is a decree postponed to that which requires our conformity to that standard; and that this our conformity will be the signal for the outpouring of those treasures which have been hitherto detained so unwillingly upon the throne of grace. The exceeding great and precious promises that stand out upon the front of God's Word, how long have they refused to yield virtue to our touch! They have seemed to say to us: "Jesus we know, and Paul we know, but who are ye?" Our garb and lineaments are strange to them. In vain we protest that Christ is in our hearts. "We know you not," they say, and add, "He that saith he abideth in Him ought himself also so to walk even as He walked." To show that Christ is in us we must put on Christ, as one puts on armour; we must be found in Him; we must bear about in our bodies the dying of the Lord Jesus; we must be conformed to Him in his terrestrial and mortal image, that we may hereafter wear his celestial and incorruptible likeness. As there was a twofold transfiguration of Christ, one downward from glory to deepest abasement, and the other to glory again; so there is to be a twofold transfiguration on our part: first, through the deposition of the world's vain paraphernalia, and afterwards by our glorification in the likeness of the heavenly Christ. If we suffer with Him we shall also reign with Him. Therefore did Paul so passionately desire to experience the fellowship of His sufferings, to fill up that which was behind of his afflictions, and be made conformable to his death. "Let this mind be in you which was also in Christ Jesus; who, being in the form of God, thought it not robbery to be equal with God; but made Himself of no reputation, and took upon Him the form of a servant, and was made in the likeness of men, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross." Let this mind be in us.

Like Christ.

The objection may be made: We are in a hostile climate, and a due regard to the preservation of health demands the observance of the habits we have adopted. But this objection fails, if there is any force in what has been urged. The adoption of the primitive standard has been urged on the ground that it is authoritatively enjoined, that the command, "Go preach the Gospel," cannot possibly be fulfilled without it, that it is essential to the triumphs of the Gospel. We are under obligations to preserve our health as we are to love father and mother and wife and children and brethren and sisters; but in Luke xiv. 26 Christ has subordinated these obligations to a higher. Our great end is to be the glory of Christ; when the preservation of life and health may be a means to that end we are to preserve them; when the sacrifice of them may be a means we are to sacrifice them. Christ is to be "magnified" in our bodies, "whether it be by life or by death." Christ and his glorious characteristics must be manifested; this is necessary, and nothing else is.

Objection: Climate.

Beloved brethren, as we are to stand before the great God and our Saviour in the day of account, let us remember the word of Christ: "The servant is not greater than his Lord." It is to be feared we have made ourselves greater than our Lord. The servant who labours less than his Master, consults ease, comfort, luxury, more than his Master does, moves in a social sphere higher than that in which his Master generally is found, refuses to be partaker of his Master's penury, ignominy and danger, such a servant makes himself greater than his Lord, such a disciple makes himself greater than his Master. The relations are thereby reversed, and everyone would be ready to exclaim at a glance that the Master is the servant, and the servant the master. Is it not enough that the world disdains Christ, desires his abasement and humiliation, and would be content to have Him for its galley slave? is it not enough that the world has a hand to smite Him with? a rod to scourge Him with? a mouth to mock Him with? has thorns for his head, nails for his hands and feet, and a spear for his side? but must we too lord it over Him? must we sit when He stands, ride when He walks, live in fine mansions when He has no place to lay his head, and fare sumptuously when He hungers and thirsts?

Pointed Questions.

Oh, shall we not, my brethren, in the midst of this apostate, Christ-despising world, manifest a generous and true-hearted devotion to our Master? Shall we not take up the language of John, "He must increase, but I must decrease"? "If any man serve Me," said Christ, "let him follow Me: he that hateth his life in this world shall keep it unto life eternal; except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die it abideth alone, but if it die it bringeth forth much fruit." Here is a precious promise of much fruit; but it is at the other side of a certain death to be accomplished, the death of self, of honour, of distinction, of ease. Let us die this death; let us be crucified unto the world and the world unto us. A master commits no injustice when he says to the servant who is come from the field, "Make ready wherewith I may sup, and gird thyself and serve me"; and surely Christ makes no unjust requisition when He says, "The disciple shall be as his Master."

Other arguments, which will present themselves to your mind, I forbear to dwell upon. One, respecting the influence our manner of life will have in determining the tone of piety and consecration in the native church of India, seems to me of incalculable weight.

Personal Appeal.

My dear brethren and fellow-servants, are the views I have stated erroneous? Are they without a proper warrant in Scripture? And am I chargeable with rashness or arrogance in thus making them known to you? I hope I may not incur this censure. I have gone warily and reluctantly about this business, chastised to it, as it seems to me, by the Spirit of God. May that Spirit guide us into the truth and make us mighty in the Scriptures, those Scriptures which were given that the man of God might be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto every good work. And whatever opinion you may form of the views I have expressed, believe that my earnest desire and unceasing prayer shall ever be for your most intimate union to Christ, and your much fruitfulness in Him.

SOMETHING PRACTICAL FOR INDIA.

What is to be the practical outcome of the pleas that are so often made for a great increase of missionaries? It has been shown that the way is open for many to go, upon a simple style of living, and do successful work where it is greatly needed. Any who are desirous of entering such work in India, yet anxious for further information from one who has long tried a simple style of European living, may write me freely upon the subject. I propose to issue letters of information upon mission work, which I shall be happy to send to all interested.

Among other needs of India is that of colporteur-evangelists to sell books from station to station, preaching the Gospel to persons and parties as they go. Four of these are urgently needed at once. The want of town missionaries, reserve workers, &c., is great and pressing. "They that sow in tears shall reap in joy."

Y.M.C.A., NEW YORK STATE.—We have received a copy of the annual report of Y.M.C.A. of the State of New York. We note that there are 142 associations in the State, with 162 men employed at ninety-seven points; thirty associations and branches occupy their own buildings; 136 of the 142 associations report an agregate membership of 34,346. There are twenty-seven associations of the above number among railroad men, fifteen in colleges, two among German speaking and one for French-speaking young men.

The Epistle to the Hebrews.

XXXIII.—THE UNCHANGING SAVIOUR.

HEBREWS xiii.

THREE times over in this chapter, the closing chapter of an Epistle the study of which has been so pleasant and helpful, the sacred writer urges his readers to think kindly of those who ruled over them. The full force of the Greek word is better represented by the marginal rendering, guide, than by the word rule. But in any case he referred to those who were the spiritual leaders and teachers of the flock. The three injunctions are—Remember, ver. 7; obey, ver. 17; salute, ver. 24.

It is a proud name for the Christian minister to be called a leader. But unless he have some other claim to it than comes from force of character, eloquence, or intellectual power, his name will be an empty sound, the sign of what he might be rather than of what he is. Those who are qualified to lead other men must be themselves close followers of Christ, so that they may be able to turn to others and say, "Be ye followers of me, even as I also am of Christ"; "Be followers together with me."

But the Christian minister must also watch for souls (17). He is not sent to his charge to preach great sermons, to elaborate brilliant orations, or to dazzle their intellects, but to watch over their souls, as the shepherd watches over his flocks scattered upon the downs, while the light changes from the grey morning, through the deep tints of the noon, into the last delicate flush of evening far up on the loftiest cliffs. He must indeed keep careful watch, for he must give an account in the evening; of his hand every missing one will be required.

It is told of the holy Melville, that his wife would sometimes find him on his knees in the cold winter night, and on asking him to return to bed, he would reply, "I have got fifteen hundred souls in my charge, and fear that it is going ill with some of them." It is not difficult to remember, or obey, or salute men like that. They carry their Master's sign upon their faces. They are among Christ's most precious gifts to his Church.

But there is this sorrow connected with all human leaders and teachers. However dear and useful they are, they are not suffered to continue by reason of death. One after another they pass away into the spirit world, to enter upon their loftier service, to give in their account, to see the Master whom they have loved. The last sermon lies unfinished on the study table; but they never come there to complete it. The final word is spoken. The closing benediction is given. The ministry is done. But what a relief it is to turn from men to Christ: from the constant change in human teachers to the unchanging Master; from the under shepherds who are here to-day but gone to-morrow, to the chief Shepherd and Bishop of souls who watches his sheep in the evening shadows of this era, equally as in the first bright beams of its Pentecostal morning.

This is the meaning of our writer (7). The verb is in the past tense; "Remember them which had the rule over you, such as spoke unto you the word of God: the end of whose life considering, imitate their faith." Evidently they had been lately called to witness the end of the life and ministry of some who had been very precious to them. And, as their hearts were sorrowing, their attention was turned from the changing guide and leader to the ever-living, unchanging Lord, Jesus Christ, who is the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever.

I. WHAT IS DENIED.—It is denied that either time, or mood, or circumstances, or provocation, or death, can alter Jesus Christ our Lord.

Time changes us.—Your portrait, taken years ago, when you were in your prime, hangs on the walls of your home. You sometimes sadly contrast it with your present self. Then the eye flashed with fires which have been quenched with many tears. Then the hair was raven and thick, which is now plentifully streaked with the grey symptoms of decay. Then the face was unseamed by care, unscarred by conflict; but now how weary and furrowed! The upright form is bent, the step has lost its spring.

But there is a greater difference between two mental than physical portraitures. Opinions alter. The radical becomes conservative; temper changes, and affections cool. Names and faces which used to thrill are recalled without emotion. Faded chaplets lie where once flowers of rarest texture yielded their breath in insufficient adoration. Thus is it with those who are born of woman. Time does for them what hardship, and authority, and suffering would fail to effect. And sometimes the question arises, Can time alter Him whose portrait hangs on the walls of our hearts, painted in undying colours by the hands of the four Evangelists?

Of course, time takes no effect on God, who is the I AM, eternal and changeless. But Jesus is man as well as God. He has tenses in his being: the yesterday of the past, the to-day of the present, the to-morrow of the future. It is at least a question whether his human nature, keyed to the experiences of man, may not carry with it, even to influence his royal heart, that sensitiveness to the touch of time which is characteristic of our race. But the question tarries only for a second. The moment it utters itself it is drowned by the outburst of great voices, which exclaim, "He is the same in the meridian day of the present as He was in the yesterday of his earthly life, and He will be the same when to-morrow we shall have left far behind us the shores of time and are voyaging with Him over the tideless, stormless depths of the ocean of eternity."

Ask the blessed dead if they have found Him altered from what they had expected Him to be from the pages of the holy Gospels. And they reiterate the words of the angels, this same Jesus; they tell us that his hair is white as snow, not with age, but with the light of intense purity; that his face shines still as the sun in his strength, with no sign of westering; and that his voice is as full as when He summoned Lazarus from the grave, as mellifluous as when it called Mary to recognise Him. Time is foiled in Jesus. He has passed out of its sphere, and is impervious to its spell.

Moods change us.—We know people who are oranges one day, and lemons the next; now a summer's day, and, again, a nipping frost; rock and reed alternately. You have to suit yourself to their varying mood, asking to-day what you would not dare to mention to-morrow; and thus there is continual unrest and scheming in the hearts of their friends.

But it is not so with Jesus. Never tired, or put out, or variable. Without shadow cast by turning. In his earthly life, wherever we catch sight of Him, on the mountain side, on the waters of the lake, beneath the olive trees in the evening; in the synagogue, or alone; at work in the sunlight, at prayer in the moonlight, at supper in the upper room, He was always the same Jesus. And the apparent exceptions when, for a certain purpose, He altered his manner, and made Himself strange, only brought his essential sameness into stronger relief. And so is He to-day. And we shall become happy and strong, when we remove from all thought of others' moods, or our own, and settle down under the unchanging empyrean of his love.

Circumstances change us.—Men who in poverty and obscurity have been accessible and genial, become imperious and haughty when they become idolised for their genius and fawned on for their wealth. The butler who would have done any favour for Joseph in the prison, forgot him when he was reinstated in the palace. New friends, new spheres, new surroundings alter men marvellously.

What a change has passed over Jesus Christ, since mortal eyes beheld Him. Crowned with glory and honour; seated at the right hand of the Father; occupied with the government of all worlds; worshipped by the loftiest spirits. Can this be He who trod our world, confessing his ignorance of times and seasons, surrounded by a handful of the poor and despised, an outcast and a sufferer? It is indeed He. But surely, it were too much to expect that He should be quite the same! Nay, but He is And one proof of it is that the graces which He shed on the first age of the Church were of exactly the same quality as those which we now enjoy.

We know that the texture of light is unaltered, because the analysis of a ray, which has just reached us from some distant star, whence it started as Adam stepped across the threshold of Eden, is of precisely the same nature as the analysis of the ray of light now striking on this page. And we know that Jesus Christ is the same as He was, because the life which throbbed in the first believers, resulted in those very fruits which are evident in our own hearts and lives, all having emanated from Himself. He has to govern the worlds, but He is still as accessible to the vilest, as gentle and tenderhearted, as humble and lovely, as when that Jewish woman could not restrain her envy of the mother who had borne Him, and when He sat to rest amid the sycamores of Bethany, and the sisters rested by his feet.

Sin and provocation change us.—We forgive seven times, but draw the line at eight. Our souls close up to those who have deceived our confidence. We are friendly outwardly, but there is frost within. We forgive, but we don't forget, and we are never the same afterwards as before.

But sin cannot change Christ's heart, though it may affect his behaviour. If it could do so, it must have changed his feelings to Peter. But the only apparent alteration made by that sad denial was an increased tenderness and considerateness. "Go, tell my disciples, and Peter, that I am risen." "He was seen of Cephas, then of the twelve." "He said unto Peter, Lovest thou Me."

Your sins may be many and aggravated, and you are disposed to think that you should give up all profession of being his at all. But you do not know Him. He is not oblivious to your sins; He has noticed each one with sharp pangs of pain. His eye has followed you in all your wayward wanderings; but He is absolutely unchanged. You are as dear to Him as when, in the first blush of your young hope, you knelt at his feet, and were clothed, as the old warriors used to be, by a stainless tunic over your armour of proof. Naught that you have said or done has lessened his love by a single grain, or turned it aside by a hair's breadth. He loved you in eternity; He foreknew all that you would be before He set his heart upon you; He cannot be surprised by any sudden outburst of your evil. You may be, but He cannot be; and He laid his account for this, and more, when He undertook to redeem. Your sins, O child of God, can no more alter your Lord's heart than can the petulance of a child alter its mother's.

II. WHAT IS AFFIRMED.—He is the same in his Person (Heb. i. 12). His vesture alters. He has exchanged the gaberdine of the peasant for the robes of which He stripped Himself on the eve of his incarnation; but beneath those robes beats the same heart as heaved with anguish at the grave where his friend lay dead. We shall yet see, though in resurrection glory, the face on which stood the bead-drops of bloody sweat, and touch the hands that were nailed to the cross, and hear the voice of the Son of Man. What does the mystery of the forty days teach us, except this, that He carried with Him from the grave, and upwards to his home, the identical body of his incarnation, though the corruptible had put on incorruption, and the mortal had put on immortality? Thus He is the same as "Jesus."

He is also the same in his office (Heb. vii. 24).—Aaron died on Hor, and all his successors in mystic procession followed him. Ancient burying grounds are closely packed with the remains of priests, abbots, and fathers. The ashes of the shepherds are mingled with those of their flocks. The office remains, but the occupants pass.

But Christ, as the Anointed Priest, is ever the same. Unweariedly He pursues his chosen work as the Mediator, Priest, and Intercessor of men. He does not fail, nor is He discouraged. Though the great world of men neither knows nor heeds Him, yet does He bear it up upon his heart, as when He first pleaded for his murderers from his cross. "Forgive them, Father, forgive them," is his unwearying constant cry. And though the ages be black with tempest and red with blood, his pity wells up like one of those perennial fountains which heat cannot scorch, nor cold freeze, because they draw their supplies from everlasting sources. He is the same as "Christ."

III. WHAT IT IMPLIES.—It implies that He is God. It implies, too, that the Gospels are a leaf out of his eternal diary; and may be taken as a true record of his present life. What He was, He is. He still sails with us in the boat, walks in the afternoon with us to Emmaus, stands in our midst at nightfall, opening to us the Scriptures. He wakes our children in the morning with his "Talitha cumi," calls the boys to his knees, watches them at their play, and rebukes those who would forbid their Hosannas. He feeds us with bread and fish, lights fires on the sands to warm us, shows us the right side of the ship for our nets, and interests Himself with the results of our toils. He takes us with Him to the brow of the Transfiguration Mount, and into the glades of Gethsemane.

When we are slow to believe, He is slower still to anger. He teaches us many things, graduating his lessons, according to our ability to understand. When we cannot bear more, He shades the light. When we strive for high places, He rebukes. When soiled, He washes our feet. When in peril, He comes across the yeasty waves to our help. When weary, He leads us aside to rest.

Oh, do not read the Gospels as a record merely of the past, but as a transcript of what He is doing ever. Each miracle, and parable, and trait is a specimen of eternal facts, which are taking place by myriads, at every moment of the day and night; the achievements of the ever-living, ever-working Lord. No lake, without that figure treading its waters. No storm without that voice, mightier than its roar. No meal without that face uplifted in blessing, or that hand engaged in breaking. No grave without that tender heart touched with sorrow. No burden without those willing shoulders to share the yoke.

Oh, take me not back through the long ages to a Christ that was! He is! He lives! He is here! I can never again be alone, never grope in the dark for a hand, never be forsaken, or forlorn. Never need a Guide, a Master, a Friend, or a Husband to my soul. I have Him, who suffices for uncounted myriads in the dateless noon of eternity. He who was everything in the yesterday of the past, and who will be everything in the to-morrow of the future, is mine to-day, and at each present moment of my existence—here, and in all worlds.

XII.—THE DINNER DRESS.

"WE cannot get our rich folks out to church on the week-day evenings," said the Vicar. "They dine late, you know. They come on Sunday sometimes, and let their servants come; but dinner is an important business—it must not be interrupted!"

"Excepting," I added, "by sickness or death, I suppose."

However, the following day, I had occasion to speak to the point, and mentioned the Vicar's regret that the wealthier part of his parish were losing a benefit which their poorer brethren were receiving. This remark happened to be the topic of conversation at more than one dinner-table that evening. One result is worth telling.

That same evening, I saw, sitting in a particular place in church, a young lady in a blue and white silk dress. It was evidently a ball or dinner dress, not such a one as people usually come to church or to an after-meeting in. I looked at her, and walked by her, and round her; but did not venture to speak. There was an elderly lady sitting close by, watching over three other young ladies, who, as far as I could judge, seemed to be much impressed. She was a kind of dragon over them, and kept her eyes fixed upon me, so that I should not speak to them; and I thought I must not dare to approach the other. However, as I had much else to do, and many to speak to in that after-meeting, I left them for the present.

The next evening this mysterious young lady was in the same place, and wore exactly the same dress. She was upon her knees, and her face buried in her hands. I did venture near her this time, and said, softly, "Can I help you?" She never moved or spoke, so I left her, walking by as often as I could to help her if she needed help.

The third evening she was there again, in the same dress, and in the same place. I thought to myself, There must be some meaning in this! Here is a lady who has evidently come away from the dinner-table in her dinner dress; surely she must be in earnest, and wanting something!"

Approaching her, I said, "I have observed you here for the last three evenings, in the same place; what can I do for you?"

She did not speak, but as I remained by her either repeating texts or saying a few words, she suddenly lifted up her head, and said, "May I call and see you to-morrow morning at eleven o'clock?"

"Yes, certainly," I replied; "I shall be at liberty then, and very pleased to see you."

At eleven, a carriage drew up, and the same young lady stepped out and came into the library. She sat down, but was as silent as before. I said, "Tell me, have you given your heart to God?"

"I do not know what you mean," she answered, in a perplexed way.

"If the Lord Jesus stood before you here, and said, 'Give me your heart, my child,' would you say, 'Take it, Lord'?"

"No," she said, "I should be afraid to do so."

"What, be afraid of Him, would you, who died to save you—afraid of putting yourself under his care, and not afraid of being under the power of Satan, without his care?"

"These things are all new to me. I do not know what to do!" she said, with perplexity in her countenance.

I answered, "You should understand that we are all under the power of Satan, who is the god of this world, until we dare, in spite of him, to give ourselves to Christ. Satan blinds the minds of those who do not believe in Jesus, and he will keep you blinded and perplexed too, if he can. Just picture to yourself the Lord Jesus standing before you now, and saying, 'Give me your heart, my child,' and speak to Him yourself. Come, let us kneel before Him—He is here."

I knelt down, and she did the same. Then I said, "Lord, speak plainly to this child. Make her to hear thy voice and invitation. Thou lovest her, and didst die for her salvation, and Thou didst rise again victorious over every power that would keep her from Thee."

She said, "Lord, take my heart."

"Thank God!" I responded. "I am witness that you have given your heart; now I want you to believe that Christ does not ask for our hearts to mock us, but rather in order, with our consent, to take the heart so proffered. As surely as you know you have given your heart, more surely believe that He has taken it. He is more willing to take than you are to give."

As she remained silent, evidently trying to feel something, I said, "Now ask Him to give you his Holy Spirit, and He will teach you how to pray, and what to pray for."

She did not speak, but I took it for granted that she was not resisting. So it proved, as I was made to know afterwards.

At that time she did give up, and asked for the Spirit, and the Spirit did help her to pray, though it was in silence.

It is invariably better to give voice to prayer under such circumstances; but if people will go a roundabout way, they have to take the consequences. This young lady remained for a long time upon her knees, and seemed unwilling to rise. I ventured to suggest that she should say, "Glory be to God, Jesus died for me."

"Oh, I dare not say that," she said, with a kind of start. "No, I cannot be a hypocrite."

"But," I said, "you are daring to do worse than that, for you are doubting the love and work of the Lord Jesus Christ. He did not die for angels, but for sinners. When you say those words you do but acknowledge yourself a sinner for whom Christ died, and thank Him also. Who should glorify God as we sinners should?"

"Well, I do not know what to do," she said, again burying her face in her hands.

I replied, "You had better do as I tell you. I do not desire to mislead you. Give glory to God for his love in giving Jesus to die for you. Do not worry, but trust. You are bewildering yourself, and allowing Satan to get advantage over you. There is nothing more to be done. Supposing you owed a debt, and I came to tell you your debt was paid, you would not be anxious any more, except to acknowledge your obligation to your benefactor."

"Oh, I see what you mean," she exclaimed, with a look of surprise. "Why did I not see this before?"

"Perhaps you did not look," I said. "Your eyes were open enough to see other things Never mind that now; but give glory to God, and never be afraid to make known what the Lord has done for you."

It was wonderful how frank and open this young lady became, who had hitherto been so mysteriously silent.

She said, "My father came to church with me the first night; did you not see him?"

"How am I to know your father?" I asked.

"Oh, I thought you knew us. He went away very happy from your meeting; but he has been a Christian for a long time. I was the only one in our family who was resisting and wayward. When I heard him say that evening he would go to church, I said I would go with him. It was rather late, so I came away just as I was, without changing my dress. Then I sat in the same place, and wore the same things, that you might notice and speak to me."

"What mysterious people you are," I said. "Never mind now, all is well that ends well. Mind, now, you begin to work for the Lord. Ever remember that you are not saved to die and go to heaven, but to live and give glory to God in your life as well as your words."

This is what she has done for many years, and she is not yet weary in well doing.

THE McALL MISSION IN FRANCE.

THE seventeenth annual report of the Evangelistic Mission in France is deeply interesting. It gives a large amount of information as to a work of growing importance. It is difficult to conceive a disciple of Christ reading it without being moved with compassion for the unevangelised millions of fair France. Following a warm tribute to the memory of the late Professor Rosseeuw St. Hilaire, a true friend of the Mission, and a letter from Rev. Dr. Pierson, of Philadelphia, giving his high estimate of the work, after personal examination last year, we have "a plain, unvarnished tale," which is, however, quite inspiriting to read, for it records earnest effort attended by encouraging results.

The question of what shall be done with the Mission converts seems at last to have been answered in a manner which by no means compromises the undenominational character of the Mission. In several places resident pastors have formed converts into Christian groups or branches of their respective churches. Three large new halls have been secured in the centre of Paris, and in several departments additional stations have been opened. With the aid of legacies, the expenditure of the year has been satisfactorily met. Help from England is in one respect being put on an improved basis, the work in French seaports having been, as it were, adopted by friends residing in English seaports. By this means an interesting link of sympathy is established between the coasts of the two countries. The staff of workers was strengthened during the year, and so pace was in a measure kept with the growing exigencies of the Mission. There is, however, still urgent need for a large increase of labourers. Mr. McAll earnestly writes: "How we should rejoice if some devoted young men, British and American, possessing the means of self-support, should feel their hearts touched by the spiritual destitution of hundreds of thousands in this immense city!"

A NUMBER OF INCIDENTS

combine to show that there is a great thirst for the Gospel in France. More than a year ago, an elderly gentleman took a back seat one evening in one of the mission-rooms, being led to attend by receiving an invitation paper in the street. After some weeks' attendance, he said to the missionary: "Sir, I have made a discovery; without knowing it, I am already of your religion." "What religion is that?" "I was sick in the hospital, and one of the fathers urged me to the confessional. I said, 'I respect you, my father, and will listen to you; but I cannot confess to a man.' Since coming here, I find that I am of your religion, the religion of God—of Jesus Christ." "Have you read the New Testament?" "The New Testament—what is that?" "The Book that teaches our religion." "No, I never heard of it." The book was, for the first time in his life, put into his hand, and thenceforward he became a diligent student of the Bible. After listening to a sermon on "Only believe," light dawned upon him, and he exercised the power of faith. Since then he has been "another man," and is now a member of the Reformed Church.

Another man, who had sunk to the lowest depths of degradation, heard words of hope in a mission-hall, and, by the grace of God, has been enabled to show by outward change how real is the inward transformation which has been wrought. This is not the only man who, after such an experience, has boldly come forward and acknowledged a debt of gratitude to the Mission, which God has honoured to both present and eternal salvation. The case of many French working men is represented by the remark of one of their class at a meeting at Versailles, lately. This man listened eagerly to the Gospel message, then heard for the first time, and when asked afterwards whether he liked what had been said, he replied: "Sir, if it could be true! If I could believe it, how happy I should be!" Thus it is clear that the workers have to show the people that the Gospel has its foundation in truth, for the multitudes have been led away by the conflicting errors of superstition and scepticism. It cannot be said that they have rejected the truth, for they have never known it.

The report affords evidence of the wide field for evangelisation presented by the thousands of villages of France. At a kind of tea-meeting held at Ste. Gemme, early in last year, the whole of the villagers, old and young, attended, excepting the tavern-keeper! The various reports of the branch missions are full of interest. Altogether, during last year, 19,403 meetings were held at 126 stations, with 1,155,852 auditors. In connection with the exhibition just opened, the Mission is bearing a brave testimony. The representative in England is Rev. Robert McAll, 17, Tressillian-crescent, St. John's, London, S.E.

MISSION TO COALHEAVERS, &c.—No class of persons seems forgotten or overlooked in these days of Christian activity and enterprise. There is now a mission to furniture movers, carmen, and coalheavers, which recently held its quarterly tea-meeting in the schoolroom of Abney-park Chapel, Stoke Newington. About one hundred of the men, their wives and friends, assembled on the occasion. Mr. Gawin Kirkham presided, and the speakers included Rev. William Spensley, Mr. Rose, Mr. Page, Mr. Harris, and Mr. Walter Prentice, the originator of the movement.

OPEN-AIR MISSION JOTTINGS.—The annual sermon was preached on Sunday week in St. George's Church, Tufnell Park, from Acts viii. 4, by Rev. Marmaduke Washington.—A third edition of Dr. Saphir's address on "What is implied in preaching Christ?" has been called for, making 20,000 in less than three months.—The secretary, Mr. Gawin Kirkham, is engaged on a pamphlet on open-air preaching, designed as a help for beginners.—The next address to the preachers will be delivered by Rev. Dr. Monro Gibson in the Baptist Mission House, Furnival-street, Holborn, on June 20. The topic chosen is "The Unity and Symmetry of the Bible."

CITY YOUNG MEN.—How to reach and influence the young men of London is the subject of earnest thought on the part of members of the Whittington-avenue Y.M.C.A. A second conference was held on Wednesday evening last week, Mr. W. Hind Smith presiding, when a number of friends gave the results of prayerful thought. The point on which there was absolutely no variety of view was the supreme importance of personal effort in the sphere of daily life. It was to such effort that several owed, under God, their own conversion, and prayer was offered to the Father of mercies to endue the members with grace whereby they will be enabled valiantly to testify for Christ in the home, the office, and the various and ordinary walks of life.

For the Young.

THE MISSION OF THE RED GERANIUM.

BY EVA TRAVERS EVERED POOLE,

THE red geranium had a mission in life, although nobody would have guessed it. Much less did the red geranium imagine that such a thing could be possible. It stood in a pretty little greenhouse, side by side with flowers of its own sort, pink and scarlet. There were fuchsias, too, and pale, yellow roses climbing from wire to wire overhead. Some of the plants were quite old, and had lived in the greenhouse since babyhood; but the little red geranium was very young, and had only seen one winter. It stood bravely enough, with a profusion of very green leaves, and very bright scarlet blossoms, trying to look its best. It did not suppose it could be of any use in the world, although it longed to do something for somebody; but it did the best thing under the circumstances, for it got all ready to be of use, and so, when the right time came it had a mission given to it. Cannot you do the same? If you are longing to be of use to those round you, get ready for it. At the right time, if you are ready to be used, God will use you.

So it happened that Miss Florence walked into her greenhouse one day, gloves in hand, and hat on head, looking from flower to flower.

"Which shall I take?" she said, half aloud. "Emily is so fond of flowers: I must take her a nice plant in bloom, and one with scarlet flowers," she added, reflectively. She passed by a pink geranium that had only opened a few of its buds, thinking there was plenty of time, as the summer was long; by the fuchsias, red and purple; by the tall lilies, not yet in bloom; and paused before the little red geranium.

Its heart beat high with expectancy, and yet it felt a little afraid of being chosen. It was pleasant in that bright, sunny greenhouse, with the canary singing gaily overhead, and all the other flowers to look at, and nod to. But to go out into the world, and to help somebody! Ah, that was worth a little sacrifice!

"This one will be just the thing," said Miss Florence, singling out our little friend. "Such a beautiful scarlet bloom, and such healthy young leaves. It really is very pretty, and will quite cheer Emily."

The little red geranium blushed a deeper scarlet than ever, with pleasure at this praise, and trembled with agitation, as Miss Florence took up the pot in which it grew, and carried it through the hall into the drawing-room first, where a pretty little girl, with brown, bright eyes, and sunny curls, ran forward to greet her, exclaiming—

"Oh, how pretty! What a dear little plant!"

But Miss Florence seemed in too much of a hurry to have the plant admired, and asking quickly, "Where is the piece of glass, Edie?" took a tiny piece of folded paper from her niece's hand, and hurried away, carrying the little plant very gently, however, and half sheltering it beneath her soft, white shawl, lest a rough breath of wind should shake off a petal.

Presently the little plant knew she had entered a house, and was ascending a staircase. From under the shawl it could see they were in a small, rather dingy room, shabbily furnished.

A girl of twelve or thirteen years old was lying on a bed in the corner. By her side stood a small table, upon which were some books, a Bible, a glass of rather faded flowers, and a gay piece of worsted work.

The girl's face was very thin and white, and her hands more like claws than anything else. Her eyes were big and dark, but in them was a frightened, wistful look, that seemed almost painful at times. What did she want? What did she fear? Why was there no rest in their brilliant depths?

Emily Jones was one of Miss Florence's Sunday-school scholars; bright, intelligent, warm-hearted. A neglected cold, caught at the summer school-treat, one or two wettings when out on the farm, and consumption had taken hold of the young, delicate frame. Emily was dying, and, although no one had told her, she guessed it all too well, and was afraid! Yes, in spite of all she had learned, and heard, when it came to the actual and important question—"Am I sure that Jesus died for me?"—Emily dared not yet answer, "Thank God, I can say He did!"

Now you know why her eyes had that wistful, fearful look in them, and you can guess that Emily needed simple trust in Jesus as her Saviour to fill her heart with joy in the presence of death.

Miss Florence knew her trouble, and tried hard to show the dying girl how simple the way of salvation was, but it was difficult to Emily because it was so simple. It seemed too easy to be saved and forgiven in the way Miss Florence talked about; surely there was something more to be done ere her sins, her crimson sins, could be blotted out for ever?

Emily greeted Miss Florence with a smile, and her face brightened as she saw the little plant, with its brilliant bloom, and knew by its placing on her little table that Miss Florence had brought it for her.

"How lovely! How good of you, dear teacher!" she cried, gratefully.

Standing on that little table by the bed, the geranium was so tall that its bloom was just on a level with the sick girl's pillow, so that she could lie and look at it without raising her head. She did so now, greeting it with a bright, loving smile that made her pallid face beautiful.

"What a lovely colour it is," she said, softly; "real scarlet, isn't it, teacher? I'm so glad it's a plant, for if it was cut it wouldn't last a quarter so long. Now I can watch it grow too, and how nice that will be! And her eyes glistened with grateful tears as she looked at Miss Florence.

Then they had a little talk together, she and her teacher. It was all about Jesus, and the home beyond. The little flower noticed that Emily's eyes grew darker and sadder, and that a weary look crept over her face, as she listened to her teacher's words. Ah me! there was no rest in her heart yet.

Presently, Miss Florence seemed to recollect something, and, putting her hand into her sealskin muff, she pulled out something wrapped in a little piece of white paper, saying as she did so, "Will you let this little red geranium preach you a sermon to-day, Emily?"

"What do you mean, teacher?" asked the girl, a little astonished at the question.

"I should not be surprised if this flower has a message from your Heavenly Father wrapped up in it, dear. Will you try and find out?"

"Yes, Miss Florence," said Emily, lifting her big, wistful eyes to her teacher's face; "what can a flower say to me?"

"Perhaps it will preach of God's love and God's pardon, dear; and I fear you believe He has neither one nor the other for you?"

A cloud passed over the girl's face; her eyes lowered and filled, her lips trembled, and then she burst passionately out with, "I am so wicked, Miss Florence! How can He love me, so sinful and hard! How can He pardon me? Oh, if I had only listened to you before I was taken ill; now I feel as if God couldn't and wouldn't forgive such a sinful girl as I am."

"The blood of Jesus Christ, his Son, cleanseth us from ALL sin," replied her teacher, softly.

"Not mine! not mine!" repeated the weeping girl; "He cannot wash my soul white."

"'Though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be white as snow; though they be red like crimson, they shall be as wool' (Isa. i. 18). Why not believe what He tells you, Emily?"

"Oh, I can't!" sobbed the girl, her slight frame shaking, and the hot tears forcing themselves through the thin fingers with which she had covered her face.

"Emily, my little niece, Edie, gave me this pretty bit of coloured glass to show you to-day. See?"—unwrapping the paper in her hand—"it is a circular piece of red glass; a treasure of her's, saved from the broken church window. I borrowed it, in order that I might show you something very wonderful by its aid."

Emily, a little puzzled at Miss Florence's sudden digression, wiped away her tears, and tried to look interested, although her heart ached so sorely for God's pardon that she seemed able to think of nothing else.

"It is a pretty colour," she managed to say, as Miss Florence paused, while she let Emily examine it.

"What colour are these blossoms?" asked Miss Florence, suddenly.

"These? Oh, scarlet," replied Emily, following Miss Florence's fingers with her eyes, as they lovingly rested on the red geranium.

"Are you sure?"

"Yes," said the girl, still more surprised.

"Put the piece of red glass between them and you. Look through it at them."

Emily did as she was told, moved away the glass from her eyes, looked again, and then, much surprised, cried, "How strange! They are scarlet when I look at them; but when the bit of glass comes between us they seem white! I can't make it out."

"Yet it is so," said Miss Florence, very gently. "Seen through the red medium of the glass, crimson flowers become white as snow, my dear. Cannot you see it is the same with your sins, Emily? The Lord Jesus, who died for the sinner, stands between the sinner and his sin, and between the sinner and God. Seen through, or in the Lord Jesus, the crimson sins are white as snow. The poor sinner, trusting in the shed blood of Jesus for pardon, is clean and fair. Out of Christ our sins must always be as scarlet; seen in or through Christ, our righteousness is complete. All you have to do is to hide yourself behind the Lord Jesus; to let his righteousness cover you; to let God see you through his spotless Son, and He Himself tells you that 'all that believe are by Him justified from all things' (Acts xiii. 39). To be justified means to be made just, white, clean, spotless. By Him, dear, by Him, you may be made fair and white. Will you take your stand behind Jesus, and let God see you through Him?"

"May I," whispered Emily, a new dawn of hope shining in her eyes.

"Surely you may. Christ Jesus casts out none who come to Him. Sinful and wicked and hard though you are, if you are content to take the sinner's place, and claim the sinner's Saviour, He will not fail you. Trust in Him. Believe that his precious blood is able to cleanse you, and that his loving heart is willing to save you. Dear child, if you thus trust in the Saviour and his death for you, you will be hidden in Him.

"'Hide me, O my Saviour, hide,' you may pray; and, hidden thus in Jesus, God does not see you black and sinful as you feel yourself to be, but clean, and fair, and fresh."

"Miss Florence," asked Emily, with intense earnestness, fixing beseeching eyes on her teacher, "are you sure, perfectly sure, that if I ask the Lord Jesus to forgive and receive me He will do it? May I just be happy, believing He's going to do it?"

Oh, the solemnity of such a question, put by a poor, sin-tossed soul, almost wrecked for eternity, and just within grasp of eternal hope and safety! If Miss Florence had not found out how true and faithful Jesus was for herself long ago, what could she have answered then?

"I am sure, I am certain," she slowly made answer. "I trusted Him to receive and forgive me. He did it; why not you? 'Him that cometh unto Me, I will in no wise cast out' (John vi. 37) are his own words."

"Then I'll come," said Emily, all her long unbelief and resistance suddenly giving way. "If He casts me out, it'll be the first He ever did, won't it, Miss Florence?" with a lingering return of her old doubt for a moment.

"The very first. But He cannot deny Himself; what He promises He will perform. Only try Him, Emily."

It just happened to be God's time of light for Emily's dark soul. Whether the real geranium had anything to do with it, one cannot say; but late that evening it heard Emily's sobbing, ignorant prayer, and wept with her. Through the night it often listened to her repeating the words, "Out of Christ, scarlet sins; seen in Christ, white as snow. Lord! look at me only through Jesus."

Then the little flower smiled and nodded. And when the morning dawned, Emily's eyes lighted first on her flower, and she smiled back at it. "Scarlet sins," she murmured; but the wistful look had died out of her eyes, and a hopeful rest lay in their dark depths. It seemed as though God only spared her life to learn to trust His love, for after the first coming of the red geranium she sank rapidly. Disease did its dread work in a few days' time, and the red geranium watched its little mistress die.

"White as snow," she tried to say with her last failing breath, as her glazing eyes turned towards the crimson blossoms, and then up to Miss Florence.

After she was carried out to the village churchyard, the little flower felt its work was done, and it drooped its stalk of fading blossoms, longing for rest. Miss Florence had said it had a lesson to teach, and it humbly hoped her words were true. But its mission ended, and its God-given work done, rest, sweet rest, was welcome. So it slept.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—The following are the portions for the ensuing week:—Sun., June 9, 1 Cor. xii. 1—13; Mon., June 10, 1 Cor. xii. 14—31; Tues., June 11, 1 Cor. xiii. 1—13; Wed., June 12, 1 Cor. xv. 1—11; Thurs., June 13, 1 Cor. xv. 12—28; Fri., June 14, 1 Cor. xv. 29—44; Sat., June 15, 1 Cor. xv. 45—58.

CHILDREN'S SPECIAL SERVICE MISSION.

Messrs. H. Hutchinson, Clifford H. Nash, and Alfred Armitage, Skating Rink, Croydon, June 15—24. Mr. Josiah Spiers, St. Cuthbert's Schools, Fordwych-road, West Hampstead, to June 7; South Creake, near Fakenham, Norfolk, June 14—24. Mr. T. Lewes Sayer, Doveridge, near Derby, June 9—11.

HOMES FOR CHRISTIAN BLIND.—The ninth annual meeting of the North London Homes for Aged Christian Blind was held a few days ago in the Jubilee Hall, 71-75, Hanley-road, Crouch Hill, N. The report showed that thirty inmates had been received during the year, some of whom must have sought the unwelcome shelter of the workhouse had not the committee listened to their appeal. The balance-sheet, we are sorry to say, exhibited a deficit. The present number of inmates is 63, of whom 30 are over seventy years of age. The Homes provide accommodation for 18 more, and as soon as the funds allow they will be filled by deserving applicants. Rev. Henry Bright is hon. superintendent.

A GALLANT RESCUE.—Mr. W. J. Cairns, the Seamen's Christian Friend Society's missionary at Appledore, had just closed a service, and was sitting in an upper room of the Sailors' Rest which overlooks the quay, when he heard screams, and saw that a child was drowning. Divested only of his coat, he ran down stairs, across the quay, and leaped into the water. A strong tide was running at the time, and his heavy boots and clothes proved a great impediment, but he reached the child just as it was disappearing, and then turning to a boat at anchor, managed to hold on and keep the child's head above water till a boat came and picked them both up. The child was treated on the spot by Dr. Pratt, and great anxiety was manifested until respiration was restored. The child proves to be the only son of a sailor who was brought to the Lord at the special service held at the opening of the Appledore Sailors' Rest last August. The North Devon Journal for May 30 speaks very highly of the missionary's gallantry, and Mr. Cairns himself, when writing to his superintendent, says:—"I found the effort a great strain upon me, but, thank the Lord, He helped me to take our evening service as usual."

On Prison Treatment.

CERTAINLY "barbarous" is not too strong a term to apply to some parts of our prison system, as described by Mrs. Ormiston Chant in The Methodist Times. Without, however, harrowing our readers' hearts with the recital of these, we quote the following as a conception of the treatment of criminals, on which it will do us all good to meditate:—

I frankly admit that a Mrs. Jeffreys, of seventy, "doing" five years for her share in the wholesale corruption and destruction of girls for the sake of gain, from the lowest class of men in creation—namely, wealthy and educated profligates—is not a sight, on the outside of it, calculated to stir one's compassion like that of a poor little Miriam Jones, of sixteen, "doing" the same term for deserting her baby, after having drudged hard and pinched herself heroically for one year to maintain it. But, in the solemn, tender presence of Jesus Christ, my Master and example, I am forced to admit that if I want one single kindness or care withheld from Mrs. Jeffreys during her incarceration, it is the vindictive, avenging instinct in me that does so, not that spirit of Christ which makes me his.

The motives and temptations to crime require deeper study, of a wider nature, than has yet been given them; and the child-life of high and low needs far more tender care and knowledge in dealing with it than it has ever yet had. Who is sufficient for these things? If only the Christian churches would grasp the ideal of Christian conduct and responsibility—if only they would stop denouncing those who differ from them, and manifest to the world their deep, abiding love of Jesus Christ, by trying to live his life, and do the works He did; if only each member of each church would feel called to nothing short of setting forth the life and death of Him whose followers they are, these huge chartered evils would be swept away, and the Christ spirit would cast out the cruel spirit that now holds sway.

There is no cruel vindictiveness in God. His punishments are all the inevitable penalties which attach to sin. The punishments which men inflict upon their fellows should surely manifest a similar absence of vindictive cruelty. But perfect forms of punishment can only exist under the perfect government of God's true King, Christ Jesus. Nevertheless, one of the sublimest proofs of the benign influence of Christianity is the growing amelioration of prison treatment.

The articles on Siberian convict life that Mr. Kennan has been contributing for some time to the pages of The Century Magazine are a very striking illustration of the inspired dictum that the way of transgressors is hard. In saying this we do not, of course, imply that all the prisoners in Siberia are deserving of their fate. In any case, the Russian authorities do not seem to err on the side of too humane treatment. Mr. Kennan's account in the current Century of the prison arrangements at the convict mines of Kara indicate conditions of life that would be a disgrace to any Government pretending to be civilised. It is almost sickening to read of the insanitary surroundings of some of these unhappy prisoners; what must it be to experience them year after year? Mr. Kennan writes of one prison:—

There can be no reasonable excuse, it seems to me, for the failure of the Russian Government to provide at least beds and pillows of straw for these hard-labour convicts. Civilised human beings put straw even in the kennels of their dogs; but the Russian Government forces men to work for ten or twelve hours a day in these East Siberian mines; compels them after this exhausting toil to lie down on a bare plank; and then, to console them in their misery, tacks up on the grimy wall over their heads the command and the promise of Christ: "Come unto Me all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest."

The irony of the situation is such that we should think the sight of these gracious words must cause a revulsion in the minds of all who read. Mr. Kennan well says at the close of his painful recital: "I repeat these things because they ought to be repeated until the Russian Government shows some disposition to abate such evils."

The Pennsylvania Disaster.

THE terrible calamity that has overtaken the dwellers in the Conemaugh Valley, Pennsylvania, through the bursting of a large reservoir, is fitted to arouse the deepest feelings of sympathy throughout the Christian world. How far such catastrophes can be foreseen and prevented it may be impossible to say, but whatever aid can be rendered to the sufferers ought to be speedily given. The computed loss of life is somewhere about 10,000, which constitutes the disaster one of the highest magnitude on record. Some of the details given are exceedingly pathetic and awesome. The Times correspondent, telling of what happened in one part of the town of Johnstown, says:—

The whole night was spent in darkness, but the sick were cared for, and the weaker women and the children had the best accommodation that could be had, while the others had to wait. The scenes witnessed were most agonising. Heartrending shrieks, sobs, and moans pierced the gloomy darkness, and the crying of children, mingled with the suppressed sobs of women, under the guardianship of men, all too much cast down to hope. Nobody slept, and many knelt for hours in prayer, their supplications mingling with the roar of the waters, and the shrieks of the dying in the surrounding houses.

The following is from the correspondence of The Daily News:—

One utterly wretched woman stood by a muddy pool trying to find a trace of her loved ones. When a man stepped forward offering help, she clasped her hands in agony, crying out, "They are all gone. O Heaven, be merciful to them! My husband and my seven dear little children all swept away, and I am left alone." She told her story of the calamity as follows:—

"We were driven by the awful flood into a garret, but the water followed us there inch by inch. It kept rising until our heads were crushing against the roof. It would have been death to remain; so I raised the window and placed my darlings, one by one, on some drift-wood, trusting them to Providence. As I liberated the last one, my little boy, he looked at me and said, 'Mamma, you always told me that the Lord would care for me. Will He look after me now?' I saw him drift away with his loving face turned towards me, and in the midst of my prayer for his deliverance he passed from my sight for ever. The next moment the roof crashed in, and I floated outside, to be rescued fifteen hours later. If I could only find one of my darlings I could bow to the will of God, but they are all gone. I have lost everything on earth now but my life, and I shall return to my old Virginia home and lay me down for my last great sleep."

This poor woman's sad plight is merely typical of hundreds of cases. To send all the accounts pouring in would completely fill The Daily News. Everything human sympathy can do is being done. From every city, town, village, and church in the land, aid of all kinds is being sent—money, clothing, food, tents, medical men, and nurses.

"HERALD OF MERCY" SHIP.—This mission vessel, in connection with Mr. H. Cook's Gosport Mission, has been visiting the ports on the coasts of Kent, Hampshire, Devonshire and Cornwall. A correspondent on board writes to say that God has richly blessed the work among fishermen and others.

The St. Paul's Reredos.

AFTER a delay of some six months, the Court of Queen's Bench has decided that it is incumbent on the Bishop of London to take steps for having the St. Paul's reredos case put forward for hearing on its merits. It may be remembered that the Bishop refused to entertain the application of the protestors, because, in his opinion, the decision as to the legality of the Exeter reredos covered this case; and also because litigation on the subject would do more harm to the Established Church, and the cause of religion, than all gain that could could come from the removal of the reredos. The application for a mandamus, ordering the Bishop to proceed, was argued before three judges, and in their decision, announced on Saturday, the Court was divided. Mr. Baron Pollock, being of opinion that the discretion vested in the Bishop was absolute, and not to be reviewed by the Court, thought the rule for a mandamus ought to be discharged. On the other hand, Lord Chief Justice Coleridge, and Mr. Justice Manisty, were of opinion that the rule should be made absolute; accordingly, it is made absolute, subject, of course, to appeal by the Bishop to a higher Court.

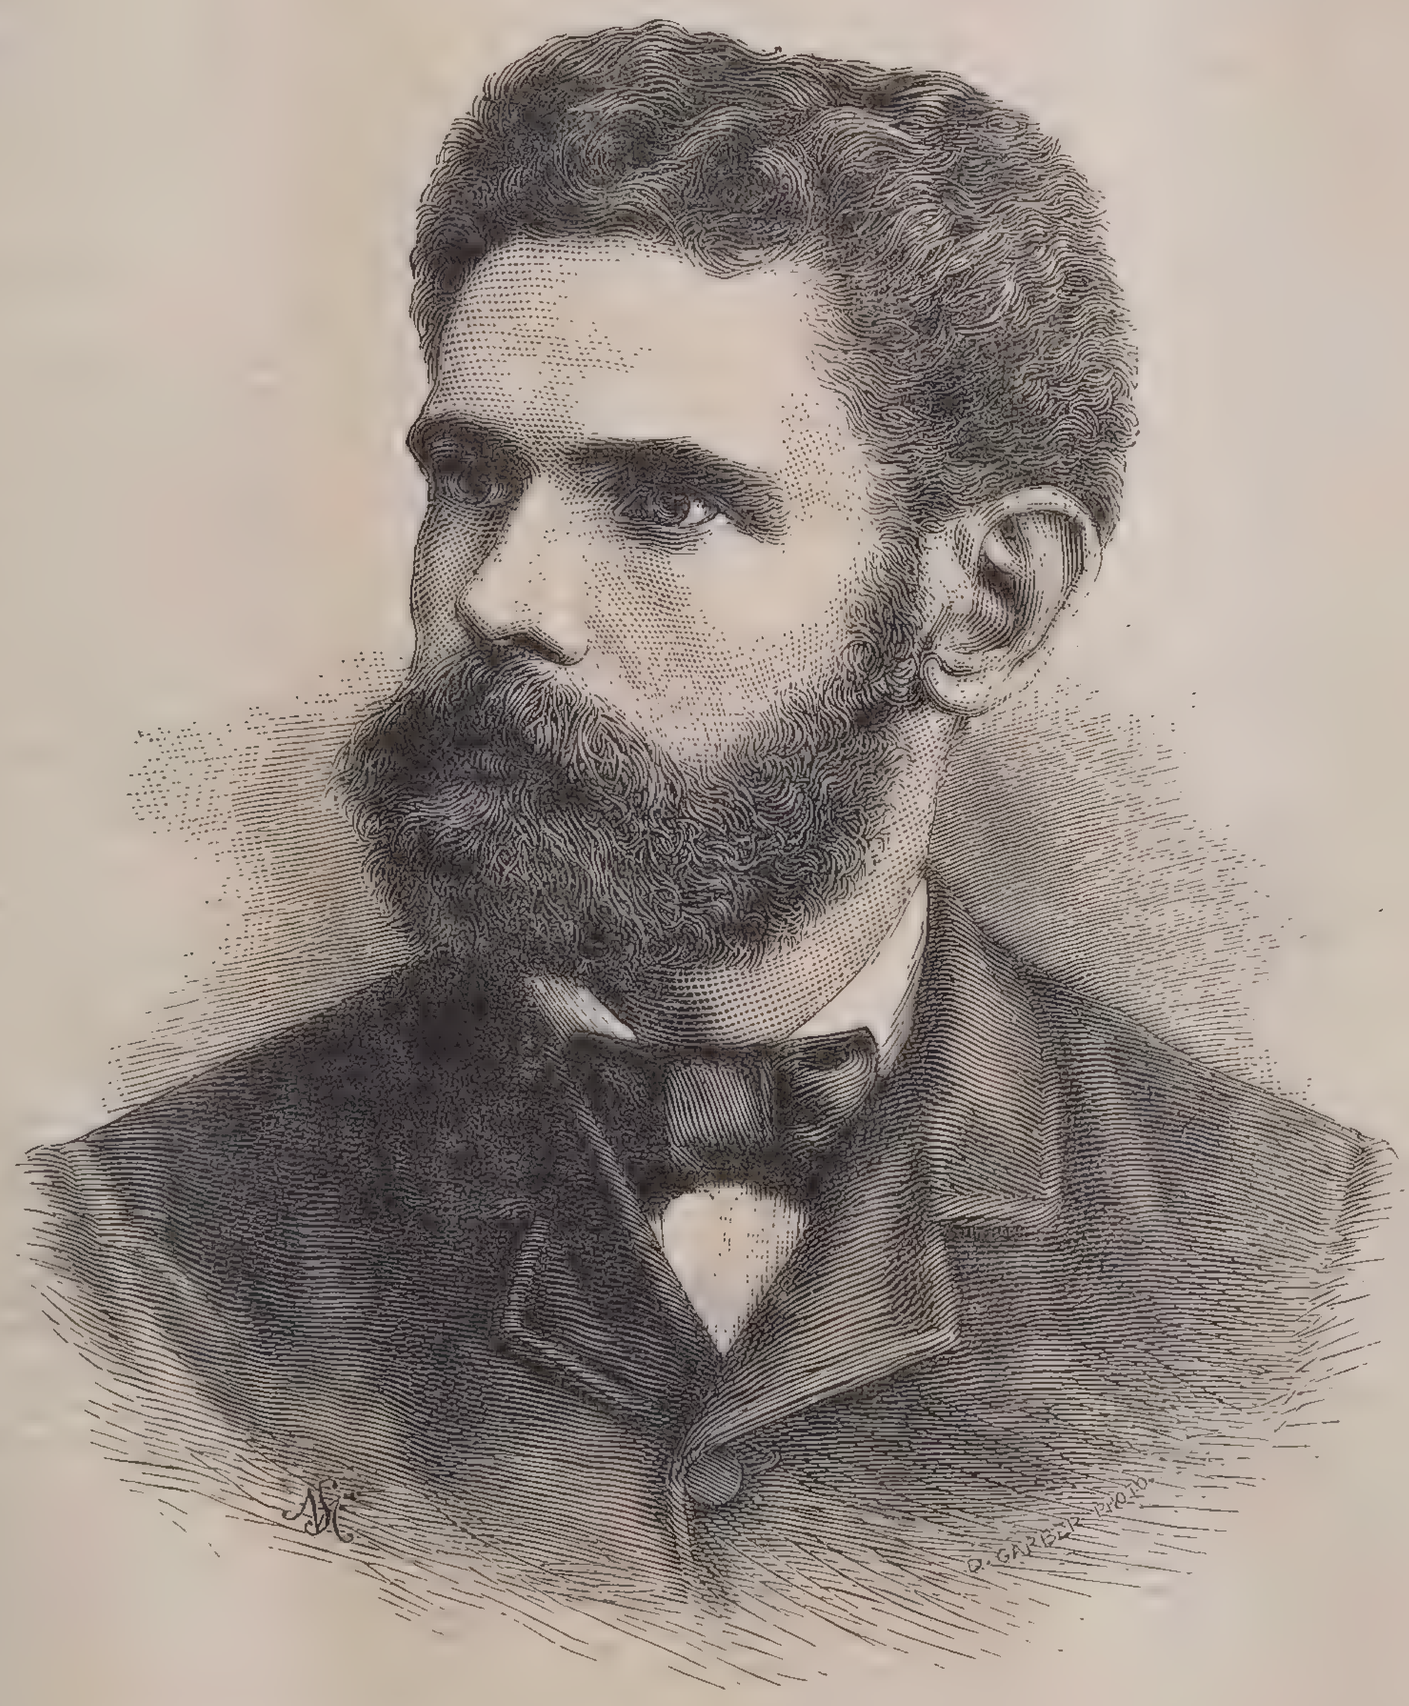
Without entering into the legal technicalities of the question, we may say that the decision of the majority of the Court agrees with the simplest demands of equity and common sense. It would be an intolerable state of things that, as the Lord Chief Justice expressed it, the metropolis and the whole country should be at the mercy of five residentiary and irresponsible canons of St. Paul's, who might set up all sorts of idolatrous images, provided a bishop were found supine enough to allow it to be done. So long as the ritual and accessories of the Established Church are regulated by law, it is the merest truism to say that the ecclesiastics of that Church should respect the law. In the view of many people, the St. Paul's reredos is distinctly idolatrous in its tendency, and there can be no doubt that if it were allowed to remain it would be taken as a precedent, and further experiments would be made in the direction of Romanising those churches that have hitherto been regarded as Protestant. It is in reality a question of ecclesiastical perversity versus the popular good; and, however much the law's delays may interpose themselves, the issue cannot be in doubt, if the real friends of the Church of England are true to their convictions and their principles.

Mr. Justice Manisty ventured to add to his legal argument a plea to the Bishop for having the question brought to a speedy issue, so as to avoid the irritation and ill-feeling which so often accompany litigation on religious matters. If the Bishop of London is well advised, he will listen to this sensible and well-meant appeal. In days like these, when there is so much practical work waiting to be done, it is deplorable to find time and energy wasted in mutual strife and recrimination.

MESSRS. PEATT AND CROZIER, of the Irish Evangelisation Society, are holding a tent mission at Dunmurry, co. Antrim, and the Methodist mission tent is pitched at Gilford, co. Down. In each case the attendance is large and encouraging.

EVANGELISTIC MISSION.—Mr. Newton Jones has visited Chelmsford and held special services. The occasion proved to be one of real refreshment, and many who had during Mr. Jones's former visit found Christ were now engaged in earnest Christian work.

THE LATE DR. W. R. SUMMERS,



Missionary to Central Africa.

FROM first to last the career of the late Dr. Summers, of Bishop Taylor's African Mission, was full of interest. First as a youthful wanderer from home and God, and subsequently as a humble servant of the Lord Jesus Christ, he was ever diligent to a very high degree of enthusiasm. No one, moreover, can consider his life as a whole without recognising, in his early, though strange, experiences, a discipline for the signal usefulness of the later years. "God moves in a mysterious way," and very mysterious are the paths by which He leads some of those whom He pleases to constitute "chosen vessels" unto his own honour and glory.

WILLIAM RICHARDS SUMMERS was born in the island of Guernsey, on April 28, 1855, of parents in humble circumstances. The cramped surroundings in which he found himself were quite early resisted; put to learn the printing trade, the lad determined to "cut and run." He had courage and perseverance, but the little island in the Channel afforded him no scope; moreover, there had grown in him a restlessness which even the larger opportunities of England proved unequal to satisfying. Arrived in London, young Summers was specially attracted by the glare of theatrical life. He secured employment in Hengler's Circus; but, coming into contact with Dr. Slade, the "spiritualist," he joined him, and, announced as "Herr Somayr," drew large assemblages in the Rotunda, Dublin. He even went beyond his master in tricks of legerdemain; what Slade could accomplish in the dark, Summers was able to do in the light, to the still greater astonishment of the sensation-loving public.

Though not brought up under decidedly Christian influences, Mr. Summers had a place in the prayers of his maternal grandmother. Not until he was twenty-two years of age did his mother believe in Christ unto salvation. While ill, she was attended by Dr. George D. Dowkontt, now head of the International Medical Missionary Society in New York, who not only treated her for bodily sickness, but spoke of the Great Healer. No sooner had she declared her confidence in Christ, however, than she asked Dr. Dowkontt to pray for her poor wandering boy, Will.

The conversion of her son being her earnest desire, Mrs. Summers got many friends to join her at the throne of grace on his behalf. And how the prayer was answered! One night, the conjuring performance over, Will was about to retire, when, to use his own words, he "suddenly found himself upon his knees." Being utterly destitute of inclinations towards the worship of God, he was surprised to find himself in such a posture, and began to talk to himself: "Why, Will, what are you doing here, old fellow? Why, you don't believe in anything of this sort; get up, what a fool you are!" In spite of these promptings of Satan, young Summers kept on his knees; he seemed to be held down by a power stronger than his own weak will. He felt as though he must present a petition to the Almighty, but suitable words failed him. He bethought himself, however, of a little hymn which he had learned in the days of childhood; so, having repeated the lines beginning "Now I lay me down to sleep," he lay down and sought rest. He could not sleep, however. Evidently the Spirit of God was striving with him in answer to prayers offered far away. That was the beginning of a change in the young man's life, and as the things of God became precious to him, the "old things passed away." Finding his way to home and mother, he gave himself wholly to God. His conjuring apparatus, which had cost him £100 or more, besides involving much ingenuity and toil, he sold for the sum of 10s. at a rag shop, and started life on new paths.

After a short period of work in Liverpool as a compositor, he left England for the United States in September, 1879. His kind friend, Dr. Dowkontt, had preceded him, and met him on his arrival at New York. In his search for work he went to Philadelphia, and there began to attend and assist in the meetings of the Salvation Army. He was made a captain, and laboured for some time in Atlantic City. While longing for such training as would fit him for more efficient service, he met with a student from Pennington Seminary, New Jersey, by whose advice he wrote to the principal, Rev. Dr. Hanlon, stating that he desired Christian work, was in need of education, but was without money wherewith to procure instruction. Dr. Hanlon saw promise in the case, and invited the enthusiastic young man to "come at once." Working hard in the institution the poor student obtained the first place in the honour roll, doing credit to himself and his school. While thus engaged in study, Mr. Summers was led to analyse his talents, and concluded that he could best serve God as a missionary. In a letter to Dr. Dowkontt he even indicated Central Africa as the one field always on his mind, and said that as he had found that the best missionaries for such a sphere were earnest Christian physicians, he was anxious to pursue medical studies. Leaving Pennington Seminary he willingly accepted the humble post of janitor to the one dispensary then opened in connection with the New York Medical Missionary Society, "picking up" dispensary knowledge, and preparing himself for systematic study. Although only getting six dollars a week, he managed to save nearly half his income, towards maintaining himself while in college. After a course of study under Dr. Dowkontt, he obtained a scholarship at the University Medical College of New York, and so assiduously did he apply himself that in March, 1884, he passed his final examination, and received the degree of Doctor of Medicine.

All the courage and determination which characterised his early life were consecrated to the service of God. In 1881, he wished to attend Mr. Moody's conference of Christians at Northfield, Mass., but was without funds. Investing his last dollar in some photographs of the late President Garfield, he went to the outskirts of New York and Brooklyn, and realised rather more than a dollar on the sale of the pictures. Thereupon he made up his mind to go to Northfield; taking boat to New Haven, he tramped the rest of the journey. Wearied and footsore he reached his destination, to receive a spiritual blessing which he deemed worth the effort ten times over. Some of the brethren at the conference saw to it that he did not walk back, by more than paying his fare.

Having graduated, Dr. Summers was introduced to Dr. William Taylor, who had a short time before been appointed Bishop of Africa, and was praying for a man well acquainted with the Dark Continent. Dr. Summers had, so to speak, devoured every book written upon Africa, and was fully conversant with the state of knowledge on the many problems, scientific and social, connected with the country. He was gladly accepted, and, having been ordained a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church, he sailed for Europe on October 22, 1884, in company with Mr. Heli Chatelain, a devoted young Swiss who had begun medical study with him. At Berlin the two gained some knowledge of the dialects of the Central African tribes from Lieutenant Wissmann, the eminent explorer; and after a brief stay in England they sailed on January 7, 1885, in company with Bishop Taylor. While the Bishop remained at Liberia to meet his party, Dr. Summers and Mr. Chatelain went on to Loanda, where they arrived in the middle of February. Having reconnoitred in Loanda, made friends, and secured a house for the expected party of missionaries, Dr. Summers set out alone for the interior, accomplishing a journey of four hundred miles to Melange. He returned to the coast, having opened up the way for the various stations since located there.

Dr. Summers remained at Melange about a year, healing, teaching, and preaching the Gospel. He so won the hearts of the people by his kindness and medical skill, that they were terribly grieved when they first heard of his intended departure from them on a journey of over a thousand miles to the further side of the Congo. He considered, however, that the work might safely be left, as another missionary was expected to arrive shortly, and he was anxious to press further inland to the point at which, as he believed, missionary operations ought to find their centre. When at length he succeeded in tearing himself away, the people loaded him with gifts, and provided him with carriers and the necessaries for his journey. After six months' travelling, in the course of which his life was often saved as by miracle, he safely reached Luluaburg, on the Kassai River, in December, 1886. Here he remained, and attended to the needs of the people; he saved many lives by his medical skill, and did his best to teach them the way of life. He set himself to preparing a grammar and vocabulary of their language. From this place he wrote two deeply interesting letters, which were in due course published in THE CHRISTIAN. In the first, dated August 31, 1887, he reported himself in good health; in the second, dated January 3, 1888, he said he was just recovering from a five weeks' illness, in which he had suffered from pleurisy, septic fever, and an ill-defined but painful lung disease.

During the journey from Melange to Kassai Dr. Summers was called upon to endure much from hunger, for the people had no food for themselves. To the east of the river all was different, the country being park-like and very productive. The chiefs expressed a strong desire for missionaries and teachers to settle among them: indeed, they cried and begged him to remain. Before he could leave, however, he was taken ill. Writing on March 3 to Mr. J. S. Mead, of Angola, he said: "I have little hope of many days. Phthisis, or consumption, the disease from which my mother died, has got hold of me, my temperature every day reaching about 103 to 105 degrees, Fahr., and this now for months. I can do nothing but see and think, cannot walk, nor work, nor write." While far away from friends he yet enjoyed the consolation of the Friend that "sticketh closer than a brother."

Though separated by a great distance from those who could cheer him, he realised the constant presence of Him who said, "I will never leave thee nor forsake thee." In his solitude he wrote: "Yes, Lord, I am sensible of thy blessed presence, and it is better than a thousand earthly friends. So we walk together, Jesus and I; and I am not lonely, blessed be God." In a letter to his friend, Mr. Chatelain, on March 30, he described himself as "broken down in body." In the midst of difficulties great and many, he said: "God has a plan, and I do not know it; but I am sure He will work out the thing all right in the end. His word is, 'Be still and know that I am God.' I am learning to be still, and I am knowing more and more of God, and can trust Him more and more every day." He lingered until May 25, and then died, as he lived, "for Christ and Africa."

As men reckon time, Dr. Summers was not long in Africa; but, as God takes account of testimony and service, we cannot pretend to estimate the work of this brave man. Bishop Taylor's Mission lost a true pioneer in this devoted young medical missionary. We cannot wish it better than that more men of the same spirit and type should come forward, and under its banner take the glad Gospel to the dark millions of Africa.

THE SOURCE OF JOY.

LONGING I prayed that joy might fill my life,
And waited for the gracious gift from God;
I wearied, for it tarried long; it seemed
As if my cry had never reached his ear.
Forth to the world I went, to seek it there:
Its pleasures pleased while they possessed my heart;
But soon they fled, and left no lasting joy.
Unsatisfied I turned to God again,
And prayed that He would light to me impart,
That I might know what way to take, to find
That happiness my heart so much desired.
"What shall I do, my Lord, to gain this joy?"
His answer came, and, like a lightning flash,
Burst in upon my soul—"Abide in Me."
Obedient to his blest command I bowed,
Nor deigned to ask of Him the how or why;
But, yielding up my selfish soul, I said,
"Lord, take me in; let me abide in Thee."
All weary, wicked, wayward as I was,
His outstretched arms received my sinful soul;
He took me to his wounded, bleeding side,
And in his precious blood He washed me clean.
Oh, what a joy! Forgiveness for the past;
Almighty strength around me to the last.
My Jesus, yes, in Thee there is true joy;
In Thee the highest happiness is found.
Pleasures surpassing all the world can know
In Thee, my Lord, eternally abound.

Edinburgh. B. MCCALL BARBOUR.

A HUGUENOT MEMORIAL.

A PECULIAR interest attaches to the progress of Christian testimony in those small towns of France in which the Gospel lamp has, by God's grace, been kept lighted for centuries, in spite of severe persecution, and in the face of great difficulties. One such place is the town of Beaune, Côte-d'Or, the Protestants of which are carrying on a good work, though necessarily on a small scale.

At the Revocation of the Edict of Nantes, in 1685, Beaune was a considerable place, with some two hundred Protestant families. Hunted down and despoiled, these people had to leave the field in the possession of their persecutors, and it is only quite recently that Protestant services have been re-organised. The need for a church has been much felt, and M. Paul Bouchard, mayor of the town, is in England seeking help towards its erection. It is hoped that the building will not only be a suitable memorial of the martyrs of Beaune, but also a centre of religious instruction for the large number of Romanists who have ceased to believe in the dogmas of their Church and are willing to listen to the truth as it is in Jesus. The entire expense of the building is estimated at £1000, of which French Protestants have already raised £600.

M. Bouchard has been kindly received in England. He is a very interesting man, having himself renounced the errors of Rome in 1877, since which time, by personal effort and by his able pen, he has endeavoured to induce his countrymen to follow his example. He has filled many important public functions in his town and department during the past thirty years, and is a Knight of the Legion of Honour. His work is heartily endorsed by Pasteurs Théodore Monod, Eug. Bersier, and Du Pontet de la Harpe, and M. Eug. Réveillaud, of Le Signal. Among English friends who bid him God-speed are Lord Kinnaird, Rev. Dr. L. Borrett White (Religious Tract Society), and Rev. Dr. Donald Fraser. His address in London is 47, Mecklenburg-square, W.C., and we trust that during his brief stay he will receive many pleasing communications.

THE McALL MISSION.—An American lady, desirous of bringing the good work of this Mission under extended notice, in the hope of thereby raising funds in its aid, is writing a series of pretty booklets, entitled "McAll Incidents." The first, now before us, gives a touching narrative, which shows with what great promise the Gospel may be preached to the poor of France.

AUSTRALIAN MISSION, SO. AFRICA.

A FEW months after my brother, the late Bishop Hannington, lost his life, it was my privilege to enter the African mission field, spending about eighteen months in different parts of South Africa. During that time the Lord was pleased to save a good many. Seeing the great need of increased missionary effort, I proceeded to Australia to tell the Christians of that country about the requirements of Africa. Many became deeply interested, and responded so freely that, in a few months, I was sent back to Africa with two missionaries to start colportage work. I had instructions to return bringing with me either Boer or negro representatives, who might speak for themselves to those who had sent for them, and who had constituted themselves into the Australian Mission to South Africa, which is evangelical and pan-denominational. Miss Schreiner, a very earnest and well-known Christian worker in Cape Colony, was the chosen representative to visit Australia. During the past three months she has spoken very ably upon the wonderful opportunity there is of sending the Gospel into Central Africa by means of native agency. One very able Christian doctor, from Melbourne, in a lucrative practice, is giving himself as a medical missionary, and going at his own expense.

The African chiefs send down their finest and most intelligent men from the heathen tribes of the interior, with express direction to learn all they possibly can. Until within a comparatively short time numbers of these fine fellows have been ruined by drink, returning, if ever they lived to reach home, to corrupt others. Now, by an act of legislation they are shut up in compounds by their own consent for about nine months, during which time we want to teach them to read and understand Gospel texts printed in their own dialect. We have already two carts drawn by mules, and four or five colporteurs at work, selling the Word of God and religious literature throughout the colony; the first four months over 1800 Bibles were sold, as well as Testaments and books. Many have professed conversion, and the visits are greatly prized, especially in the far-off scattered and isolated places where the spiritual privileges are few and far between. We have a Council of Reference in Cape Town, of which Rev. Andrew Murray is chairman, and the effort has been started in remembrance of the late Bishop Hannington. As Australian Christians have liberally provided the carts for her sister colony, if some of the Christians in the Mother Country will assist in carrying on this most useful work, Mrs. James Hannington, widow of the late Bishop, 1, Alfred-road, Brighton, would receive and forward communications to the treasurer, Rev. L. Nuttall, Cape Town.

It may be interesting to add that I have just completed a four weeks' mission in the city of Sydney, and the Lord has been graciously pleased to save a goodly number.

SHEFFIELD Y.M.C.A.—The Sunday afternoon Bible-class has so increased of late, that a larger hall has been taken in which to hold the meetings. The average attendance for May was 117. Four large open-air meetings are sustained every week, two on Sundays and two on week-days. Scarcely a Sunday evening passes without some conversions taking place at our evangelistic service. Fifty-two young men have joined as members and associates during the last two months. An excellent site has been secured for new premises, which will shortly be erected at a cost of from £16,000 to £18,000. £10,500 has been promised in donations and shares towards this scheme. Monthly meetings for the deepening of the spiritual life are held in our rooms, and it is our desire that the Lord alone may be exalted in this work.

THE EVANGELISATION SOCIETY.

IN the case of the Evangelisation Society, it is altogether beyond question that extended operations mean increased usefulness. It is quite an annual thing to record tokens of Divine blessing on the work; we rejoice to say that during the past twelve months, evidences of the favour of God have been many and conspicuous. Gospel meetings were held in many new places, tent missions being a prominent feature of the work. A large number of Christian ministers in England and Scotland have rendered cordial help.

The annual report gives a number of letters from friends in different parts, and testimonies of fruit coming from the seed sown. During the summer of 1888, the evangelists worked in fifty-one tents, nineteen of them belonging to the Society, the remaining thirty-two being the property of private individuals or local associations. Writing of a Sussex village, in which meetings had been held three consecutive summers, a correspondent of the Society says: "Yesterday I visited three houses, in which I found five persons, of whom I should like to write briefly. One is a woman seventy-eight years old, who for years refused to go to hear the Gospel, lest her condemnation should be increased thereby, as she was sure that in any case she would be lost. But last year she went to the tent, and there the message of God's love and the offer of his mercy to all, reached her heart. She yielded herself to Him, and has ever since been rejoicing in his wonderful grace. Her grand-daughter, aged twenty, was brought to God at the same time. In the next house I entered I found a woman in the last stage of consumption, and in extreme poverty—not even a chair to sit on; yet she was happy, rejoicing in her Saviour. I asked her how long she had known the Lord, and she replied that it was only last summer, in the tent, that she had received this blessing, and that her life had been changed ever since. I also saw her young daughter, who professed to have received the same blessing at the same time, and truly, judging by their conversation and their surroundings, one could not doubt that they did indeed know what it is to live by faith in the Lord Jesus Christ. They have a cruel husband and father, and yet they were full of praise to God for all his goodness to them. Again, in the next house I saw an elderly woman, who received great blessing and spiritual help at our tent missions."

Friends of Christian effort will find much in the report to cheer their hearts. It is clear that the workers make a point of thoroughly instructing their hearers in the great truths of the Gospel, and, as a result, there are fewer cases of disappointed hopes than in other circumstances. The pages of incidents mention the case of a poor man who, on his eyes being opened to his own sinfulness and God's pardoning mercy, sought the services of a little boy as instructor, and learned to read. Having now made progress in the way of the Lord, this man is able, not only to read for himself, but for the enlightenment of others. Sending a donation to the funds of the Society, he expresses a hope that he may be blessed of God in his endeavours to show unto others the way of salvation.

Altogether 228 evangelists took 20,716 meetings last year in 1086 places: the estimated attendance of the public being about three millions. The contributions amounted to £12,496. Communications respecting the work should be addressed to the hon. sec., Captain W. E. Smith, 21, Surrey-street, Strand, W.C.

Home Teaching Society for the Blind (31, New Bridge-street, E.C.).—Mr. R. TAIT, secretary, writes:—"Additional subscriptions and donations are the pressing want of this Society at the present time, as many contributors have been 'called to rest.' I can testify from personal visitation that the blind are brighter and their surroundings more cheerful through the ministrations of our blind teachers."

LIGHT IN ASIA MINOR.

REV. DR. G. F. HERRICK is now in England, advocating the cause of Anatolia College, situate at Marsovan, Asia Minor, sixty miles inland from the Black Sea port of Samsoun. Evangelical in character, the College exists in order, with the blessing of God, to promote Christian manhood and service in the country. The pupils number 130, and during the last collegiate year nineteen of them were received into the fellowship of evangelical churches.

From Anatolia College go forth the preachers and teachers, and the leading Christian workers among laymen, in a region bounded on the west by the Mediterranean, on the north by the Black Sea, on the east by the Euphrates, and on the south by the Taurus mountains.

The value of the College is great, and, when we bear in mind the activity of the Jesuits on the one hand, and the influence of infidelity and materialistic science on the other, cannot be estimated. Such truly Bible work in the midst of Bible lands is specially interesting. Communications to Dr. Herrick may be addressed to the Bible House, 146, Queen Victoria-street, E.C.

JULY and AUGUST in NORTHFIELD.

THE invitation of Mr. Moody to the public to come to his boyhood's home in the summer months is as full and generous as his own large heart. He holds as tenderly his brethren beyond the sea as those nearer home. His love embraces the world. With a passionate longing does he desire souls. Hence the opening wide of all doors, and the granting every facility for Christian fellowship and instruction The summer days bring him the rest of activity.

The untiring work of a long winter on the Pacific Coast and at Chicago only spurs him on to greater service, and to an enlargement of his plans. This summer the Conference is to continue through the month of August instead of ten days, while the college boys are invited to spend the days from June 29 to July 10 inclusive. In addition to this a Gospel Singers' Training School is to be opened June 20, and continue six weeks at Northfield. Mr. D. B. Towner is to be conductor.

Mr. Moody desires to afford accommodation for all who come, and, as usual, the Seminary buildings will be thrown open at a very modest sum for board, while the pride of the village, the charming new "Hotel Northfield," will be opened for guests. Tent life is also common, the grounds being freely given, and thus board is reduced to a mere trifle. We are amazed that, for all the privileges of such a gathering, the public buildings for the meetings, the freedom of "all out doors," the speakers distinguished and eloquent, the singing by the best in the field, are all supplied without cost to the visitor. But it is just like Mr. Moody; he does nothing by halves!

The Boys' School at Mount Hermon, the Girls' Seminary at Northfield, are very flourishing, and hundreds are knocking at the door for admission.

Come, O readers of THE CHRISTIAN, to this fair spot, one of the fairest in fair New England, and clasp hands in Christian fellowship with your American brothers. S. E. B.

Northampton, Mass.

OUR SHOWPEOPLE.—At this time of the year, when so many fairs, wakes, and races are held, and large shows and circuses are travelling through the country, we are anxious to arrange Sabbath meetings for our travelling showpeople. We find that gathering them together on the Lord's Day is the best opportunity of bringing before them the claims of the Gospel. God's blessing has, indeed, rested upon this work; many of these wanderers have found Christ as their Saviour. I shall be glad to send a report and copy of showmen's paper, The Caravan, to any address, post free.

"BRIDGE OF HOPE" MISSION.

LIVING in this part of East London, the problem as to what will be the future of the children who swarm our streets is one daily costing us the deepest and most anxious concern. The lads and girls who, in the growing darkness, should be safely at home, are, instead, the greatest nuisance to those whose work brings them up and down our thoroughfares. Visitors calling, or poor women applying for admittance, are frequently pelted with mud, &c., and otherwise annoyed. Endless are the questions that arise as to cause and effect, but we cannot, dare not, let the little ones perish, whilst we are sitting down to consider, and, if possible, to solve some of these difficulties.

Perhaps the work we are doing amongst children is less widely known than the rescue work; but in addition to the latter, which in itself is large and increasingly heavy, we have always more than fifty young girls to be daily cared for. Some of our most recent cases will be typical of hundreds who are still needing help. One poor girl of twelve was found near our house lying on the pavement crying bitterly, surrounded by rough boys, and so crushed by her helplessness, that she seemed even without a desire to escape from her tormentors. We brought her in, and an investigation of her story revealed a history so sad that, whatever moral taint the poor child bears, is a matter for sorrow, but not for surprise. Already she is partially crippled, the result of a fall from careless arms in her infancy, and the distorted limb speaks only too plainly of neglect and suffering through which the poor child must have passed. We found that she had been placed by her father in the care of a miserable woman with whom he had formerly lived; being out of work, he had failed to pay the usual weekly sum for the child's maintenance, and in a fit of anger the woman had thrust her into the street to do as best—or worst—she might. We are already gladdened by signs of intelligence in the little wan face.

The next is the child of a woman who has herself been the keeper of a bad house. Tired of the life, she gave it up, and came to us quite destitute. Now we have mother and child, for both of whom we anticipate a brighter and happier future.

The third is a pathetically sad story, and shows that the women living their sinful lives have better feelings, even whilst parading the thoroughfares with such impudent boldness. Perhaps those who are strangers to such daily sights would never dream that the bold faces could soften, or that their eyes could be suffused with tears of remorse, if not of repentance. We learn differently from such cases as the following, which is by no means a solitary one. C—— is a woman who has lived a terrible life for years. She has a child, ten years of age; and, as she saw this little one imitating the ways of the girls and women all around her, some tenderer chord was struck, and she longed to save the child. She came to us with a companion—a woman whom we have often tried to help—and both of them were evidently touched as we spoke to them of their sad lives, and tried to induce them to come into the Home. In this we failed, and they are still in their old haunts. We have, however, sent the child away to a good country Home, where we hope the past years of her life will soon be forgotten, and that the hideous sights and sounds of Ratcliff-highway will be drowned and blotted out, amid the songs of birds and the sight of fields and flowers. Will not our friends remember the mothers of such children, and pray that remorse may deepen into real repentance?

Saddest of all is our last case, a young girl twelve years of age. So young, and yet with the sweet, holy innocence of childhood, sullied for ever! She came to us through Mr. Waugh's noble work on behalf of the children, and today, whilst she is, we trust, beginning a new and happier history, a man—or a demon—is beginning to work out his richly deserved punishment of fifteen years' imprisonment. Alas! his incarceration cannot restore to the child that of which he has irrevocably robbed her!

As we receive one after another of such cases, our hearts cry, "How long?" But until He come, we have his injunction, "Take this child and nurse it for Me." God is greatly blessing the work, and is still opening fresh doors for us. We hope soon to give a little account of a new country Home which we are enabled to open through the kind help of the young people of Rev. F. B. Meyer's congregation. Whilst we most thankfully record that the new Refuge and Night Shelter are entirely paid for, we need more than ever the continued support of those whose hearts are touched by the sufferings of the degraded and outcast, and whose ears are opened to the "cry of the children."

LONDON CITY MISSION.

EARL COMPTON, M.P., presided at a meeting of the London City Mission, held at Exeter Hall on Wednesday evening last week. The facts relating to the work of the Mission include some very large figures: Nearly 3½ millions of visits and calls were made by the missionaries, upwards of 277,000 of them to the sick and dying. Nearly five millions of tracts were distributed, 8650 out-door services were held, 1909 drunkards were reclaimed, 5300 persons were induced to attend public worship, and 315 fallen women rescued.

The CHAIRMAN congratulated the missionaries on the good work they had done during the past year. They were, he said, labouring in the right spirit by going amongst the poor and needy and teaching them the way of salvation. Rev. CHARLES MOINET, in the course of an earnest address, mentioned that 8000 public-houses had been visited by the City Mission agents during the year, and half a million of frequenters of such places had thus been brought under the sound of the Gospel. Rev. NEVISON LORAINE also spoke, and the work of the Mission was shown to be increasing alike in volume and importance.

JEWISH CHILDREN IN BOMBAY.—There is great need for a suitable school building in Bombay for Beni-Israel children, receiving instruction through the Indian Female Normal School and Instruction Society. The building at present occupied is most unsuitable. This school was established in 1874 by a lady missionary; the necessity for it was soon seen by the numbers who sought admission. At that time it might have been considered a ragged school, for the children then attending were mostly those whose parents were too poor to afford to pay a fee. To purchase the ground we require about £500, and for the building at least £1000. Ours is the only Christian girls' school in this community in all Bombay. Help can be sent to the Indian Female Normal School and Instruction Society, 2, Adelphi-terrace, Strand, London.

Bombay. S. TROTT.

PRIMITIVE METHODIST CHURCH SOCIETY.—This humble organisation continues to do a good work in some parts of Ireland. It was re-organised in Dublin at the time when the late Primitive Wesleyan Society united with the Wesleyan body, forming what is known as the Methodist Church in Ireland. It adheres to the usages of Primitive Methodism, while maintaining connection with the Church of Ireland, of which all its missionaries are required to be communicants. The adherents of the Society now number about 6,750; about 120 unpaid agents work under the direction of six paid agents, who are viewed as Protestant teachers, not as pastors or ministers. The work is carried on at a cost of about £300 per annum, but this is not raised without difficulty. Indeed, unless the friends of pure religion render more help some of the paid workers will have to be dispensed with. Communications may be addressed to Mr. Joseph Atkinson, Mission House, The Mall, Ballyshannon.

CHRISTIAN EVIDENCE SOCIETY.

THE annual meeting of the Christian Evidence Society was held in Exeter Hall on Thursday last week, Sir William Thomson, F.R.S., professor of natural philosophy in the University of Glasgow, presiding. A brief report, read by Rev. T. T. Waterman, stated that the income had been £1133, which the expenditure had somewhat exceeded. The tract distribution of the year amounted to 100,458.

The BISHOP OF BALLARAT, in a weighty speech, maintained that the infidel lecturer must not be left alone. There is no easier suggestion than that the Christian is afraid to meet fair argument, and that the Gospel may be preached but not defended. If, however, that suggestion should be confirmed by the silence of Christian people, many people would begin to think it true. The Church of Christ to-day, like its original of old, is set for the defence of the Gospel.

Rev. T. VINCENT TYMMS, in a vigorous address, asked: Why did our Lord Jesus Christ hold so many arguments with the teachers of the people? Was it not mainly to weaken and nullify their influence over the people they would otherwise have misled? Why did St. Paul write so many controversial letters? Surely because he was divinely impelled to show the emptiness and unreason of those objections to Christianity which were rife in his day. Was there not something significant in the fact that John Wesley began his work of itinerant preaching in England just two years after the publication of Butler's "Analogy"; that book, which victoriously closed the great deistic controversy, put new courage into believers, and gave a strong intellectual basis to the evangelical movement of that century? We should certainly be recreant if we did not make strong efforts to-day to acquaint the world with the evidences of Christianity.

Bishop French and Canon Bonney, F.R.S., having spoken, Mr. Kitchen Parker, F.R.S., formerly Hunterian Professor at the Royal College of Surgeons, delivered a brief address, in the course of which he said: Christ is my life. I know more about what real life in Him is, than I do about natural life. My being an Evolutionist has not touched that. Christ in me the hope of glory; what a little thing is science to put against that! The more child-like we are in science, as well as in religion, the better it will be. As we go on and study science, let us spend more time on our knees.

Rev. R. A. Redford having spoken, the CHAIRMAN pointed out the groundlessness of the notion that science is able to explain all the facts of nature without adopting a definite belief in a Creator. He added: St. Peter speaks of scoffers who said that "all things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation," but himself affirms that "all these things shall be dissolved." It seems to me that even physical science absolutely demonstrates the scientific truth of these words. We feel that there is no possibility of things going on for ever as they have done for the last six thousand years. In science, as in morals and in politics, there is absolutely no periodicity. Everything is in a state of evolution and progress. The science of dead matter, which has been the important subject of thought during my life, is strenuous on this point, that the age of the world is definite. We do not say whether it is a hundred million years or more, but we say it is not indefinite. Then we are brought face to face with the most wonderful of all miracles—the commencement of life on this earth.

The speeches were independent in tone, and, generally speaking, of a high order.

House of Rest for Clergy and Christian Workers.—This little Home at Crieff is opened, and is conducted on the principles of total abstinence. There is a lovely and unintercepted view of the mountains.—Communications to DEACONESS, Briar Villa, Crieff, N.B.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

LONDON Yearly Meeting was brought to a close on May 31, and may be ranked among the best on record. The attendance was good and the interest keen throughout, more especially among the young of both sexes. Correspondence and visitors from America and Ireland are greatly valued, and the sense of brotherhood thus manifested intensifies the loyalty and deepens the attachment to the cause. This year the home mission work has got a real impulse. Keen discussion in reference thereto occurred both on Monday and Wednesday, with the result that the committee, heretofore appointed annually, was elected for three years. Thus the forward movement was stamped with the approval of the body at large. Any other result would have been exceedingly disappointing, if not crushing and fatal.

Last week we observed that there was no burning question before the meeting, as in the previous year, but the large Quarterly Meeting of Yorkshire had sent up the problem of Poverty for the care and attention of the Yearly Meeting, and this was considered in a joint meeting of men and women Friends on Tuesday—when probably over 1000 were present. The discussion was opened by Edward Grubb, B.A., of Scarborough, in a most able and comprehensive address, which was followed by several others viewing the subject from various standpoints. Among other suggestions was that of a Mission in the East-end, somewhat like the Wesleyan West-end Mission, and the handsome offer was announced in the evening of £500 per year for three years, by one Friend, towards such work on the part of the Home Mission Committee. A practical conclusion therefore is hoped for, and maybe an East-end Mission will come out of the discussion.

Lancashire and Cheshire Quarterly Meeting in like manner had sent up Peace for consideration, and nearly an equal attendance heard Wm. C. Braithwaite, barrister-at-law, and other Friends, very ably unfold and enforce our duty therein; while, in the evening of the same day, perhaps 1000 attended the home mission meeting, with Sir Joseph Pease in the chair; President Mills, of Indiana, and John T. Dorland, of Canada, were the chief speakers. For many decades no such day's work has been witnessed by London Yearly Meeting.

The annual meeting of adult schools, with Sir Edward Fry in the chair, was enthusiastic, as progress all round was reported, and the speeches were excellent. The same may be said of the Friends' Temperance Union meeting, when the Bishop of London gave a vigorous and beautiful address, under the presidency of that noble friend of the cause, John Taylor.

The greatly needed high school for the sons of Friends has got within a few hundreds of pounds of the required sum to enable those in charge to accept the munificent offer of £5000 by one Friend towards its establishment.

The closing sitting was very instructive, and as always solemn. Henry Stanley Newman, labouring in America, Frank Dymond in Canada, Ann F. Jackson in New Zealand, and Jos. James Neave in Australia, were all remembered in prayer. At the previous sitting, our young Friends going out to India and Madagascar were specially prayed for. Friends' meetings have been re-opened in Oxford and Cambridge, and there is a widespread hope of revival and blessing over the entire Yearly Meeting.

W. HOBSON.

Cardiff.

An interesting incident occurred at the Friends' Meeting-house, Westminster, on Sunday week. Toward the close of the meeting, in the midst of the silence which followed an address, Madame Antoinette Sterling, the famous cantatrice, who frequently attends the meetings of Friends, rose in her place, and with deep feeling and great reverence, sang the anthem, "The Lord is my Shepherd." Never did singer have an audience more quiet, more astonished, and more profoundly moved than had Madame Sterling on this occasion.

GOSPEL WORK IN WALTHAMSTOW.

THE devoted Christian workers who for some time had on their hearts and hands the administration of the Queen's-road Gospel Hall, Walthamstow, have indeed been led by strange paths, in which they have undergone sore trial of their patience, if not indeed of their faith. The Lord has, however, given them a victorious issue out of adversity, and hearty rejoicing follows hard upon sanctified trouble.

By order of the Court of Chancery the Queen's-road Hall had to be removed, being declared to have been erected in contravention of stipulations contained in the freeholders' covenants on the Hoe-street Estate. The message of the Gospel had been much blessed in the building, and it was with sorrow that the place was laid in heaps and another site sought for. However, in due course a plot was secured in the Folkestone-road, near Hoe-street Station, and on Saturday last the new hall was opened in the presence of congregations which included a number of friends from distant places. With the land the building has cost £2014, and some hundreds of pounds have yet to be raised to free the undertaking from debt.

In the afternoon a praise meeting was held, at which Mr. J. McVicker delivered a helpful address on the great need for Holy Spirit power. After tea a public meeting was held, when the spacious building was all but full. Prayer was offered to the God of all grace to own the efforts to be put forth in the hall, and also to bless Mr. T. H. Morris, who, after being intimately and actively identified with the work, is soon leaving with his wife and family for Central Africa. After an address by Dr. Neatby on the needs of the Holy Ghost for effective Gospel testimony, Mr. Morris spoke briefly. With six others he is a trustee of the hall, and his personality will constitute an interesting bond of union between much-loved Christian work in Walthamstow and effort in the Continent of Africa, in which he will shortly make his home. In stirring words he told of the agitation of mind which he endured until he placed himself entirely in God's hand, to go to Africa or anywhere else, and in language of stimulating assurance he declared his absolute confidence in the Lord. His friends shed tears at the thought of his going away, but their mourning was turned into holy joy as he reminded them that no danger could come to him or his family except by permission of the Lord, whom he was going out to serve. Hearty addresses followed by Mr. T. B. Miller, Lieutenant Mandeville, Mr. W. R. Lane, and others. Mr. Morris hopes to preach in the hall for two Sundays, and to say good-bye on Thursday, the 20th inst.

MR. HENRY VARLEY has lately been visiting some of the opium dens and other places of evil resort in Melbourne, and sends to The Daily Telegraph of that city a strong protest against the immunity accorded to them.

"JOYFUL NEWS" FOREIGN MISSIONS.—Rev. Thomas Champness has already ten of his Joyful News evangelists at work abroad—in South and West Africa, South India, Ceylon, and China. On Friday week six more sailed from England. They were: Messrs. Garstaff and Langstaff, for South Africa; Messrs. Adkin, Harris, and J. T. Whittome, for South India; and Mr. Clarke, for Ceylon. On the Wednesday evening previous to their departure, they took farewell of their friends at a crowded valedictory meeting, held in the Wesleyan chapel at Rochdale, under the presidency of Mr. Champness. Each of the six outgoing missionaries, besides Mrs. Champness, Rev. G. K. Pryor, and Rev. Josiah Mee, spoke a few words.

THE MANCHESTER CONVENTION.

THE meetings of this Convention were held in the Union Rooms, Tipping-street, Ardwick. Formerly the building was a Congregational church, but, through the generosity of a Manchester merchant, it has been given to the City Mission. It is situated in the midst of a very large population, chiefly composed of the poorer class. The Convention began on Wednesday, May 29, when addresses were given in the morning by Rev. Geo. Robson, chairman, and Rev. H. Jones. In the afternoon Mrs. Macalpine gave a valuable exposition of the missionary's theme. Rev. W. S. Standen followed, earnestly appealing for a right walk in order to a true work. Mr. Dunn, from the London City Mission, enlivened and inspired the evening meeting with an account of work in visiting public-houses. The day was closed by a brief, earnest word from Rev. Evan Hopkins.

On Wednesday, after reading and exposition by Rev. G. Wainwright, Mr. Hopkins again spoke, giving a clear and lucid exposition of the subject for the day—"The Sinner, the Convert, the Saint." How shall we regard the Sinner? As condemned already. God deals only with two men—Adam and Christ—with every other man in one of these two. Either dead in Adam, or alive in Christ. The Gospel is not to offer to men another probation, but to give them a new position—to put them in Christ. The Convert was described in Acts xxvi. 18, where he is said to be awakened, converted, forgiven, sanctified. These points were clearly stated and powerfully enforced. The Saint, in order to be what God intended, needed: (1) Knowledge of what God had given in Christ. Every Christian had all fulness in Christ, but many did not know it; (2) Willingness to be, and to have what God wills; and (3) Faith to appropriate what is already his. Mrs. Mason followed with a practical exposition of Acts ii. 32, 33,

In the afternoon, Mr. Wainwright urged the importance of seeking true converts. Failure in our converts might arise from three faults in our teaching: (1) Not seeking to lead men to conviction. (2) From not teaching the substitutionary work of Christ. (3) Because only half conversion is preached. Matt. xi. 28, is separated from the following verses, which call to yoke-bearing, and promise a further enjoyment of rest. Mr. Henry Lakin and Mr. Dunn followed with an interesting account of their experiences.

Mr. Lockhart, of Liverpool, at the evening meeting, gave a forcible and clear statement of the sinner's position as at enmity against God. Saint is the term most frequently used to decribe Christians, and applies not alone to those who have grown old in the service of Christ, but to those also who have but just begun to serve Him. To change the sinner into the saint is God's work. Why are some more used in His work than others? Learn the secret of power in Acts ii. Pentecost was not the Holy Ghost coming down upon the unsaved, but filling the saint. Mr. Wainwright followed with a further exposition and application of a full conversion, as described in Matt. xi. 28—30.

On Friday, Rev. F. D. Sanford gave a powerful address on "Have ye received the Holy Ghost since ye believed?" Rev. W. S. Standen again spoke in the afternoon, and was followed by Rev. F. B. Meyer, on consecration in order to appropriation. His words were very searching, dealing with definite things in the lives of men; and illustrations of the truth were drawn from all kinds of sources. All felt the power of God during the address. At the evening meeting, Mr. Meyer urged the necessity, and possibility, and conditions of being filled with the Holy Ghost. A season of praise and prayer closed the Conference, which was felt to have been a most hallowed and inspiring time to all.

SALVATION SLUM WORK.

IN one of our leading northern towns a meeting of influential residents was recently held in the library of one of the town institutes, in response to the following card:—"Slum Work in ——. A desire having been expressed for further information about this work as carried on by the Salvation Army, it has been arranged that an opportunity shall be given on ——, in ——, for the leaders fully to explain the mode of procedure, and to answer any inquiries. Tea and coffee at 4 o'clock." [Some leading names followed.]

There was a large gathering of all denominations present. Many who did not approve of some things in the Army work, after a full explanation, and an opportunity for interrogating the leaders present, were satisfied that they were reaching and helping a class almost untouched by any of the churches. Some misunderstanding was cleared up, and there is every prospect, as far as "slum" work is concerned, that increased help will be forthcoming.

CHRISTIAN WORK IN ITALY.

I HAD the pleasure recently of coming in contact with various agencies for good on the Continent of Europe. At Rome, in the Gould Industrial Home, Via Magenta, I found fifty-five boys and girls, chiefly of the orphan class, under happy circumstances. Mrs. Gould, the founder, died in 1875, but her husband interested his American friends in the work. Funds were sent, and the present premises were secured. Mrs. Edwards has worthily supplied Mrs. Gould's place as superintendent. I also went on the Sunday to the Mission-room of Rev. J. Wall. I found over two hundred listening attentively to his Gospel address, and the following Sunday I saw about a hundred at his school, of men, women, and children. His large Bible-class, Mrs. Wall's mothers' meeting of over sixty, his medical mission, patients' and prayer-meetings, colportage, and much visitation, appear to have well answered their end. Often there are 2000 attenders during the week at the six rooms under Mr. Wall's care; thirty-three were added in the year to the church, which numbers about two hundred members.

I had the satisfaction of seeing similar good work at Naples, Florence, Venice, &c. Any of your readers who may have the opportunity to visit such missions will both cheer the conductors and have their own piety and zeal stimulated. I was pleased to see copies of THE CHRISTIAN at a number of hotels and the Y.M.C. Associations. JOHN SUGDEN.

Manchester.

THE LADS' INSTITUTE, 186, St. George's-street, Ratcliff-highway, E., has completed its second year of useful service. It is opened four evenings in the week, when lads are welcome, and come in numbers which often tax the accommodation. The object is to impress upon them the love of God in Christ, and in order to their temporal advancement they are grouped in classes for education and instruction in useful arts. The workers have been much cheered. More volunteers, ladies and gentlemen, able to give an evening a week, are sadly needed. Communications should be addressed to Mr. J. Theodore Isaac, Strangers' Rest, 163, George-street, London, E.

SOLDIERS IN INDIA.—A good and great work for the Master is being carried out at Jullundur, a military station in the Punjaub, by the Christian men of the 3rd Batt. Rifle Brigade. Several of the men of this regiment, which has only recently arrived from South Africa, are good soldiers of the Lord Jesus Christ. In their camp they have a room set apart for evangelistic work. Gospel services, &c., are held every evening, and these gatherings have already been owned of God in the conversion of many. Tracts, magazines, or papers bearing on the Scriptures or temperance, will be most thankfully received by the secretary, Private A. W. Knight, 3rd Batt. Rifle Brigade, Prayer-room, Jullundur, Punjaub, India.

BAPTIST MINISTERS AT PRAYER.

FROM Monday, May 20, to Wednesday, May 22, a number of the brethren connected with the Baptist Ministers' Prayer Union met together for prayer and conference at the Baptist Chapel, Sutton-in-Craven, Yorkshire. Those bright and peaceful hours spent amongst the Yorkshire hills will long abide in the memory of all who were privileged to be present. The meetings commenced on Monday afternoon, and the closing meeting was on Wednesday morning, when the communion service was held. A number of well-known friends took part in prayer and addresses at the different gatherings.

The hospitality of the friends at Sutton was of the most generous description, and nothing that Christian kindness could add to the enjoyment of the meetings was lacking. Public meetings were also held on Wednesday afternoon and evening. Rev. W. J. Mayers added greatly to the enjoyment of the meetings by singing a number of sacred solos.

HOME FOR GERMAN SAILORS.

THERE was opened by Princess Christian last Friday afternoon at 8, East India-road, a new Home for German sailors visiting the port of London. The institution, which is a model of its kind, owes its origin mainly to the energetic efforts of two ladies—the Baroness Schröder and Mrs. Lichtenberg—who saw the vast need in the midst of so many low lodging-houses for a comfortable Home conducted on Christian principles for Germany's mercantile marine. They issued an appeal last February to their country people for funds with which to establish such an institution, with the result that the sum required (£2,000) has been received. The Home affords accommodation for fifty men.

The opening ceremony was conducted from beginning to end in the German language. After a dedicatory prayer, Baron Schröder presented an address to Princess Christian, who was accompanied by her husband. Her Royal Highness, in declaring the building open, said she felt much sympathy and love for the sons of Germany, and she was particularly gratified to take part in such a useful and necessary work for the well-being of German sailors. Admiral Schröder, from the German Embassy, in a lively speech expressed the thanks of the promoters of the Home to Princess Christian. The royal party, after inspecting the building, left amid an enthusiastic outburst of cheering.

A NEW MISSIONARY SCHEME.—The Baptist Missionary Society have decided to make a fresh experiment in India. Rev. W. R. James, one of their ablest and most experienced missionaries, and a notable bazaar preacher, is to be entrusted with it. He is a single man himself, and half a dozen earnest young men, who are prepared to devote themselves to the work in which he has been so long engaged, are to be found and go back to India with him. They are all to live together in the native quarter of some great city, probably Calcutta, and there to commend the Gospel in life and deed, as well as by word. Mr. James estimates that they can live in comfort and good health at a cost of about £50 a year each.

SEAMEN AT LEGHORN.—May I ask your readers to remember the Seamen's Bethel here? As in most other ports where this work is carried on, bags of papers are supplied to outgoing ships—a great boon to those "afar off upon the sea," and one that the recipients always thankfully acknowledge. There is, however, a great difficulty abroad in procuring suitable English literature for such a purpose. There are many back numbers of THE CHRISTIAN and other religious and secular papers lying forgotten and unused in British homes which would be invaluable here. They will be gratefully received if addressed, "For Seamen's Bethel, 15, Via delle Grazie, Livorno, Italy."

(REV.) J. WOOD BROWN.

SATURDAY EVENING.

THE week is past, its busy toils are o'er,
And we our scenes of labour gladly leave,
To hail the Sabbath's calm approach once more,
And worship on the preparation eve.

Let us review the way we have been led,
Count up the mercies of another week;
We have been daily sheltered, clothed, and fed,
And our warm hearts our Father's praise shall speak.

And for his love, in spirit and in truth,
In lowly homage at his feet will bend,
And while we feel the Sabbath's sacred worth,
Own the kind Giver, ever faithful Friend.

Soon will our week of life be overpast,
And we for ever earthly things shall leave;
Then, till we dwell where Sabbaths ever last,
May our life be death's preparation eve.

ELIZABETH LOVE.

A CRISIS IN PORTUGAL.

DEAR SIR,—Portugal is just now passing through a political and religious crisis which may in its issue affect the welfare of the country for many years to come. The prayers of God's people are specially needed that a relapse into intolerance and oppression may not take place.

The situation, briefly, is this. In consequence of the spread of education and an increased knowledge of the Bible, which colporteurs carry through the land, the priests' hold on the people has been considerably loosened, especially in the larger towns, where mission work is carried on. Very few of the middle-class Portuguese really believe the doctrines of the Church of Rome, but, unfortunately, infidelity and religious apathy are very general, though certain forms of religion are maintained. On the other hand, the Jesuits, who were expelled from the country in a former king's reign, have for several years past been stealthily returning, and by degrees have regained so much of their old influence and wealth that the Court and governing powers are ruled by them at present.

They are now endeavouring to get the principal trade and industry of the country into their hands, and a hard struggle is taking place between leading merchants of Oporto and the Government, which has given special privileges and monopolies to a company founded by men of the Jesuit party. If the latter win the battle, hard times may be feared for the small and weak Protestant congregations, amounting to not many hundreds, throughout the whole country; for the degree of religious freedom which now exists will surely give place to intolerance and persecution, as already evinced by one or two legal proceedings lately taken against Protestants. At a conference of the "Associação Catholica" held here recently, some of the subjects discussed were the best means of repressing the spread of "Protestantism and impiety," and the restoration of the temporal power of the Pope.

Will your readers join their prayers to those of the handful here, that these things may turn to the glory of God by opening the eyes of the Portuguese to see and accept the true liberty which the Gospel of Christ offers; that the yoke of Rome may be entirely cast off, and that not infidelity, but true faith in the Saviour, may rule. F. J.

Oporto.

ETIENNE DOLET.—A statue has been erected upon the Place Maubert, Paris, in memory of this freethinker who was executed for heresy in the sixteenth century. The inaugural ceremony, on a recent Sunday, was an occasion of high festivity among the freethinkers of Paris. Intolerance was denounced by orators, who seemed to overlook the shocking outbreaks for which so-called free thought has been responsible.

Y.M.C.A. Convention, Philadelphia.

THE Y.M.C.A. has gained a reputation amongst the citizens of the great American Republic which makes its present and future course comparatively easy. It is widely honoured and respected. Its numerous palatial buildings make it one of the best known public institutions in any of the large cities. As a proof of this, "Appleton's Guide Book," the Baedeker of the States, always takes note of its situation and provisions; in many cases it prefixes an asterisk to denote special excellence, and mentions the building as well worthy of a visit from the ordinary tourist.

Philadelphia, in which the recent Convention was held, is the city of magnificent distances, one of its streets—Broad-street—being fifteen miles long. It is noted, however, for more worthy qualities, also being known as "the city of homes." The hospitality and high moral quality of its citizens are widely recognised. The Association building is one of the largest and finest in the country. The secretary, Mr. David McConaughy, is one of the best-beloved and most highly respected officials on either side of the Atlantic. He leaves America in October, to take up Association work in Madras, and hopes to spend some little time in London, en route.

This Convention was the largest ever held, nearly one thousand delegates registering their attendance. It was preceded by a secretaries' conference at Orange City (in the immediate neighbourhood), most of those in attendance going on to the General Convention. For liveliness and profit the smaller conference was the most distinguished, because the subjects were not only treated but also discussed at each session. The method adopted was a very wise one. A brief paper was read on the subject assigned, and then the opener remained on the platform, seated, and answered any questions which those in attendance chose to fire at him. No speeches were allowed; but this cross-examination was far more effective in revealing the strong and weak points in the position taken up by the writer.

The sessions were presided over by experienced secretaries in succession. The subjects discussed were of a very practical nature. For instance, Mr. See, secretary of the Brooklyn Association, the largest in the world, dealt with the possibility of making the Bible training-classes more efficient; the next subject was the drawing of mechanics into closer sympathy with the Association; next, how to secure the best spiritual results from the physical and intellectual agencies; how to overcome the diverting power of the secular duties of the secretary upon his spiritual life. This was an admirable paper read by Mr. D. A. Budge, of Montreal. In addition, each department of the work received full attention; railroad men, college men, foreign young men, &c.

Another fine and much-applauded paper was read by Mr. H. E. Brown, State secretary of Illinois. He advocated strict adherence to the clearly defined work of the Y.M.C.A., and the avoidance of entangling alliances with white cross unions, temperance societies, &c. These things he held to be good in themselves, but they ought not to be taken up by the Associations as such. By quoting a long series of resolutions, showing the precedents set throughout the history of the Association, he clearly established the soundness of his contention. The devotional spirit and the fraternal affection of the secretaries were distinguishing features of this most successful conference.

The Philadelphia Convention—so called because of the absence of conference — was popular and well attended from the first. After preliminaries a hearty address of welcome was given in the name of the local association by Mr. Francis W. Kennedy, president. The delegates from abroad were introduced at this point: Mr. Robert Burn, of London, who read an interesting letter from Mr. George Williams; Mr. Robert McCann, travelling secretary for Ireland; Mr. Carl Fries, Stockholm; Mr. Ernst Hofer, Zurich; and Baron von Stark, Berlin.

The report of the International Committee of the United States and Canada was then read by Mr. Cephas Brainerd, chairman of committee. It spoke of much hard work successfully accomplished; of the highly satisfactory condition of the general work; and, as a climax, dealt with the American interest in the work amongst young men throughout the world. This was one of the key-notes of the Convention, that henceforth Association interest should be world-wide, and no longer confined to the work of any individual country, however vast.

This was the topic of the very next paper, read by Mr. E. R. Monroe, president of the New York Association, a very influential friend, and one thoroughly well informed on every detail of Association work. The title was "Responsibilities of Members of American Associations to Young Men in Foreign Mission Lands." Mr. J. T. Swift, who has spent several months in Association work in Japan, and who is returning thither at once, also spoke more than once during the sittings. The event of the first day was beyond question, a masterly address on "Modern Unbelief among Young Men and its Antidote," by Rev. Francis L. Patton, LL.D., president of Princeton College, New Jersey.

On the second day the president of the Convention, Mr. H. B. Chamberlin, of Denver, Colorado, read an instructive paper on the provision of secretaries for the future. Mr. Chamberlin spent many years in secretarial work in the Association, but was obliged to retire through ill-health. God has greatly prospered him in business life. He remains a staunch friend to Association work, and to secretaries in particular. He leaves for a visit to London on May 29, by the City of New York, and will be accompanied by the British delegates. Another University dignitary gave one of the addresses on this day, namely, Professor Gilmore, of Rochester, who spoke on libraries and librarians. A most exciting question decided at this session was, which of several invitations to entertain the next Convention should be accepted. Eventually Kansas City triumphed over Chicago by two votes—258 to 256.

The next day brought a new batch of papers, chief of which was "The Growth of Secular Agencies in our Work; Opportunities, Advantages, Dangers." The next important topic was dwelt with by Mr. Russell Sturgis, well known on the English side of the Atlantic. It dealt with the vitally important question, "The power of the Bible to-day in the Y.M.C.A."

Every evening crowded meetings were held in the largest hall in Philadelphia, except the first, which was devoted to a reception in the Art Gallery. At these meetings leading public men spoke. One evening, Mr. Pitcairn, general manager of the Pennsylvania railway, spoke on Railroad Association work. He testified to his own conversion from opposition to warm approval. On another, the Hon. James Beaver, Governor of Pennsylvania, gave a most successful address on Association work, with which he is practically acquainted.

Bible-readings were given during the devotional meetings which preceded every session. In addition there were many special daily meetings for prayer. The outer man was well cared for; a sumptuous meal being provided and reception-rooms placed at the disposal of delegates in one of the best-appointed hotels in the city.

On the Sabbath a happy and impressive farewell meeting was held, presided over by Mr. Robert Orr, general secretary at Pittsburg. Amongst many interesting addresses was one made by Mr. John Wanamaker, Postmaster-General, an old friend of the Association. Mr. Ira D. Sankey, who sang frequently during the Convention, and who was in general charge of the song service, was in admirable voice. He both sang and spoke at the closing meeting. A well-planned excursion to Washington brought the happy and profitable Convention to a close.

INTERNATIONAL DISARMAMENT.

"THE Christian Arbitration and Peace Society" is a movement towards disarmament, started by our American brethren across the water. They have passed through what has been called their civil war, but it was hardly more of a civil war than the present armed condition of Europe indicates, as the sections of country at variance were as remote from one another, and almost equally as little interested in one another, as Germany, France, Italy, &c.

The subscribers, believing that all war is contrary to the spirit of the Gospel of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, have associated themselves together "to promote peace and goodwill among men; to show the baneful influences of war on all the great interests of mankind; and to promote the final abandonment of wars and appeals to physical force, by the amicable settlement of differences between nations, peoples, classes, and individuals."

The signatories to this constitution indicate a very powerful Christian influence, including prominent representatives of every Christian denomination, and various philanthropic and mercantile institutions in America, as well as the names of several well-known English Christians.

It is the earnest desire of this Society that something may be done at the coming Paris Conference that will eventuate in the simultaneous disarmament of the armies of the Continent, and they have sent a strong committee to attend it. On account of the postponement of the conference from June 1 to 23, part of this committee are now in London, quietly using their influence with the Christian people to support any movement here in this direction. To the common plea of Englishmen, that the idea is altogether Utopian, these gentlemen urge that this is not the case at all; that all or nearly all the Indian wars that a few years ago were so prevalent in the United States have ceased, by the Christian people accepting and acting upon Christ's principles on this subject; that the probabilities of war between the United States and Mexico and the South American States have been reduced to almost nothing, through the arbitration treaties that have been made; and that public opinion has been so changed that it is quite probable a Court of Arbitration may be formulated at the Convention of the American States of North and South America to be held in Washington next October, to settle all interstate matters. We confess that the subject is a far-reaching one, but great reforms have been started and successfully pushed in America, and we can see no reason why our Christians should not, and every reason why they should, heartily support this effort to overcome the terrible results of having so many men in idleness with all the wickedness incident thereto. Anyone interested can consult with this American committee by applying to either the Peace Society, New Broad-street, or to the International Arbitration and Peace Association, 41, Outer Temple, Strand, W.C.

ALBERT INSTITUTE, CHRIST CHURCH, SOUTHWARK, provides washhouses and baths in a poor district of London, where they are sadly needed. In addition to schools and clubs, the premises include living rooms, which are let out to respectable married couples. For eighteen months the Institute has been a great boon to the labouring classes, but it has not been supported as the trustees, including the rector of the parish, have desired. Communications should be addressed to the secretary, Mr. A. Craven Greenwood, at the Institute.

CITY WORKWOMEN.

THE prayers of your readers were asked for a service among our work-women by Messrs. Fullerton and Smith. The attendance was much greater than there was room for them, and there was much definite blessing. Several testified to having been saved during the present year, and others to a willingness to be saved. We are looking for much more fruit.

We should be thankful for continued prayer for the thousands of young women around us, and for more practical sympathy in the work. The need of lady helpers for work-room services and for correspondence is great. Letters should be addressed to me, care of hall-keeper, 186, Aldersgate-street. ELEANOR FISHER.

MAJOR WHITTLE IN SCOTLAND.

THE second and last week in Inverness was the most fruitful one. The large meeting for young people on the Sabbath was specially owned of God. During the week there were four other meetings for young people, and many professed to have found Jesus. The subject at each of the evening meetings has been "I am the door," and successively there have been presented the door of the sheepfold, the door of the ark, the blood-besprinkled door of the Passover, the door of Rahab's house, and the open door, and the door that was shut. The interest and the "signs following" increased nightly, and on the last evening there were three solemn after-meetings, of women in the church, conducted by the Major; of young men in a hall, by Mr. Charles E. Whittle; and of older men in another hall, by Dr. Moxey.

Dr. Black and Messrs. Camburn and Connell have been present at almost every meeting, and have rendered invaluable aid. Mr. George Walker, the president of the Christian Union, and Messrs. Campbell and Corner, and other members have stood by the Lord's servants, and strengthened their hands. Dr. MacNee, a beloved physician, has also laboured in the Lord. On Thursday, May 25, the Major lost the services of his son, who has sailed for America to be united to a Christian girl who we believe is destined to be a true helpmeet in the Lord's work, as well as in the other relations of life. Many earnest prayers and loving wishes accompany our young friend, who has endeared himself to all hearts, and whose labours among young men have been signally owned of God.

THE GROVE MISSION, SOUTHWARK, having its head-quarters in Great Guildford-street, is an agency which has, during a long period, been much blessed of God in a needy part of the metropolis. For half a century operations were carried on in a hall which was at one time a stable; last year new premises were erected, and it is hoped that the latter house will witness still greater blessings than the former. In addition to well-attended services on Sundays, there is a flourishing Sabbath-school, also meetings for young men and women. Over 120 persons have become united in church fellowship, while some 50 young people are meeting in preparatory classes. Rev. W. Allen is pastor, and Mr. John William Weston, honorary superintendent of the Mission.

MR. QUARRIER has just despatched 125 girls to Canada, from the Orphan Homes at Bridge of Weir. Prior to sailing, the party attended a large meeting of friends and supporters of the Institution in the hall of the Christian Institute, and were fervently committed to the keeping of the Lord. In the course of some remarks, Mr. Quarrier said that during the past eighteen years he had sent out 3000 children. The outfit, passage-money, and surveillance for ten years cost £10 a head. His daughter in Canada had written to say that there are already 400 applications for the girls. No child is handed over unless the applicant produces a certificate from a Christian minister. Mr. Quarrier added that there are now 680 children in the Homes; should the admissions continue to be at the present average rate of two daily, ten more houses will be required.

FISHER-FOLK IN STORNOWAY.

A CORRESPONDENT in Stornoway, Island of Lewis, N.B., writes:—

Mr. and Mrs. Webster, of the Wesleyan Home Mission, are working most earnestly and successfully among the fishermen and others there, from the East Coast of Scotland and elsewhere, prosecuting the herring fishery. The large Drill Hall is filled to overflowing, especially on Lord's day evenings. Mrs. Webster is a most acceptable speaker, and although the harvest is not yet ripe for the ingathering, yet the presence of the Spirit is manifest. Your readers are earnestly entreated to pray for the blessings required by none more than "they that go down to the sea in ships," and others who are engaged in the work of harvesting the food from the sea.

Large numbers of the fishermen attend the other churches in the town, while a band of sisters are working a coffee-house and visiting the women and girls engaged in the trade at their several homes or lodgings. About four thousand persons are there now above the ordinary population.

RESCUE WORK IN PORTSMOUTH.

THE excellent work carried on by the Portsmouth Rescue Society and Protestant Home for about twenty-seven years is well known to Portsmouth people and many beyond its immediate sphere. The objects of the Home are: "To reclaim the fallen from their wretched course of sin, in the streets of Portsmouth and the neighbourhood, to that of respectability and usefulness; to instruct them in the way of salvation; and to provide the inmates with a comfortable home during the time necessary for their training for service or some other useful position." During the past year, including those remaining in the Home at the beginning of the year, with admissions and re-admissions, 149 women passed through the superintendent's hands.

The work throughout is thorough, practical, and conducted day by day in the very spirit of the Gospel. The success of the moral training with the Christian teaching of the Home has been largely manifested, and has indeed brought forth fruit in the true conversion of many of the women. The loss of a large legacy of about £500 through a mistake in a will has been a great trial, and the Committee appeal for help. Mrs. Colebrook, The Home, Brunswick-road, Southsea, is superintendent.

CONTINENTAL & FOREIGN NOTES.

MADAME HEIDSIECK-WALLBAUM, who died recently at Sedan, has bequeathed legacies amounting to 870,000 francs to Protestant churches and charities, mainly in Sedan, Rheims, and Paris.

M. E. DE PRESSENSE, the well-known French pastor and senator, has momentarily been deprived of the power of speech, through a surgical operation. There is, however, hope of a complete cure being affected.

THE FIRST SUNDAY-SCHOOL IN FRANCE seems to have been opened at Luneray, Seine-Inférieure, in 1814. This is indicated by a letter preserved in archives of the consistory of Rouen, the text of which was given in the June issue of Le Journal des Ecoles du Dimanche. It seems that the school was commenced by a visitor who was well acquainted with the methods which had for some years proved so useful in England. Among the scholars in this first Sunday-school was M. Frank Pnaux, the well-known authority on the progress of Protestantism in France.

COLPORTAGE IN FRANCE.—During last year the sixty-two colporteurs of the British and Foreign Bible Society sold upwards of 66,000 Bibles, Testaments, and portions of Holy Writ in France, being an increase of 11,471 upon the preceding year. It is in the poor and sparsely-populated regions that these humble Christian workers do best. In order to induce a labourer or artisan to invest two sous for a Gospel portion, he has to give such explanations of the contents of the book as shall justify the expenditure. In this way religious indifference is overcome, and before the purchase is made, there is a real desire to read the book.

Letter to the Editor.

AUSTRALIAN ABORIGINES.

DEAR SIR,—It has been reported to me that some correspondent had stated in your columns [Rev. J. B. Gribble, in THE CHRISTIAN, Feb. 1] that there were 200,000 Aborigines in New South Wales, of whom only 4000 had heard the Gospel. How far this is from the truth will appear when I state that the annual report of the Aborigines' Protection Board gives the number of Aborigines as only 5402 in the Colony in 1887.

There have been at various times missionary operations among the blacks, and at the present time there are two mission stations. Little success has attended the efforts made in days past on account of the migratory character of the Aborigines, but there have been instances of conversion to Christ. In later years, where they have been induced to settle on the mission stations, more have been savingly enlightened.—I am yours sincerely, ROBERT STEEL, D.D.

Sydney, New South Wales.

N.B.—Mr. Daniel Matthews, who has laboured among the Aboriginal people for some years, is now on a visit to England, and can confirm my statement.

OBITUARY.

MISS MARY LUCE, JERSEY.

AFTER twenty-eight years of painful suffering and confinement to her bed, this devoted and happy saint passed away, on Sunday morning last, at her house, Millbrook, Jersey. For these many years she was a ministering angel to scores of the Lord's servants both at home and abroad. Her pen was a prolific one in giving wise and spiritual encouragement to many a weary clergyman, minister, and missionary. She will be greatly missed by a large circle of Christians.

ARCHDEACON PHILPOT.

The venerable Benjamin Philpot, formerly Archdeacon of the Isle of Man, died a few days ago at Surbiton, aged 98. It is believed that at the time of his death he was the oldest clergyman in the Church of England. Admitted to holy orders in 1815, Archdeacon Philpot has for the last sixty years been a well-known, energetic, and highly esteemed member of the Evangelical section of the Church to which he belonged. He remained to the end in full enjoyment of his faculties, and of fair health and strength until the last few months, when the prolonged and fatal illness of his eldest son, Rev. W. Philpot, told seriously upon his bodily powers. He finally succumbed, with no sign of any organic ailment, to the slow process of natural decay, leaving no fewer than thirty-six living grandchildren and fourteen great-grandchildren.

REV. CHARLES OWEN.

At Vernon, Michigan, U.S.A., on Tuesday, May 14, Mr. Charles Owen, "after he had served his own generation fell on sleep." The deceased was well known in the East-end of London, where his zeal for souls and tender spirit won him many friends. He was for six years honorary treasurer of the Christian Mission (now the Salvation Army), and for eight years a co-worker with Dr. Barnardo in the Edinburgh Castle, Limehouse. In 1882 he went to America in search of health, and there he has ever been found at the post of duty proclaiming the power of the blood, and the glorious hope of the Church. He laboured with the Baptist Church at Grimsby, Ontario, for one year, and more recently with the Vernon Church for three and a half years. In both places he won the esteem, affection, and respect of all who knew him, and fell asleep among sorrowing friends. In Mount Pleasant Cemetery, Toronto, his remains await the trump of God.

COMMON LODGING-HOUSE MISSION.—This agency is organising Gospel services in an increasing number of the kitchens of the common lodging-houses of London. Sir Robert Phayre has kindly accepted the post of president. A branch of the Mission has been established at Westminster, with Mr. Burdett Coutts, M.P., as president. The office of the Mission is 67, Imperial-buildings, Ludgate-circus, E.C.

China Inland Mission.

THIS Mission postpones its anniversary till the bustle of the May meetings is over, and its friends are free to attend the dual gathering in the Mildmay Conference Hall. These friends are numerous enough to make a goodly assemblage at any time, but this year the return and presence of Mr. Hudson Taylor must have proved an additional attractive power.

The afternoon meeting on Thursday week was presided over by Mr. GEORGE WILLIAMS, whose wise and cheery words are always full of strength and stimulus. In an opening petition Rev. D. B. HANKIN prayed that the recurrence of the Church festival of Ascension Day might carry with it lessons of Christ's risen power. In his secretarial statement, Mr. BROOMHALL glanced at the events of the past year, and said it had been one of unusual contrasts as to light and shade—a season of peculiar trial and painful bereavement. Through the mercy of God the year had also been marked by progress and blessing. During its course fifty-four new missionaries left for China from this country and America. The present staff of workers numbers 328, including the wives of missionaries, most of whom were themselves missionaries before their espousals. There are fifteen accepted candidates now preparing for demission to the field. The Secretary had also a tale of considerable advance to tell in the matter of money resources; so that God continues to honour the faith of the Mission in adding largely year by year to the ranks of its workers. Some deeply interesting and pathetic details were given by Mr. Broomhall as to the funds contributed through the Mission towards famine relief. He read extracts from the touching letters of poor but willing givers, and re-echoed the prayer of many of these that the relief administered might be instrumental in breaking down prejudice and opening the hearts of the people to receive the message of God's Gospel. As to the ascertained results of the year's work, the Secretary said that throughout the year 472 had made a confession of faith. Reference was made to a recent article in The Times on China Missions and the comparative results realised by the different societies at work there. The writer of that article truly said that too much should not be made of apparent divergences in the proportionate number of converts, as so many varying elements go to account for them. In the case of the China Inland Mission, very much pioneering work has been done, which shows little in the way of ascertained result, but which is nevertheless of great value as affecting the future of missions in China. In this respect appreciative reference was made to the pioneer journeys of Dr. Cameron and the late devoted Mr. Adam Dorward. The latter was only one of several valued workers who have been removed to a higher sphere of service during the past year. Among the number was Mr. George Stott, whose death we lately recorded. An interesting memorial pamphlet, describing his closing testimony, and giving many pleasant recollections of him, has been prepared (price 2d.), and copies may be had of our publishers.

The Chairman had some helpful things to say about the recompense that follows self-sacrifice and the patient endurance of trial. As a nation, he said, we have been verily guilty in our dealings with China; it is ours now to make all possible amends and send our very best, both in earthly and human treasure, so that the Gospel may be proclaimed in China and an antidote be provided for the sore evils that afflict her people.

Mr. J. E. MATHIESON said that the China Inland Mission was regarded at Mildmay as one of the great agencies of the time for stimulating faith in God and confirming trust in his power to save to the uttermost. China is rapidly coming to the front in the comity of nations, and she has undoubtedly a great future before her; notwithstanding her past isolation and self-sufficiency. Her territory, too, is so vast that there is ample elbow-room for all the workers that all the societies can pour into her.

A very cordial welcome awaited Mr. HUDSON TAYLOR, who looked in fairly good health. He said it was a great pleasure to be back again, and to meet so many who had given practical proof of their interest in China, not only in money gifts, but in gifts of beloved relatives, far more precious to the Lord of the harvest than any amount of silver and gold. The trials in missionary service are not few or far between, and, as Mr. Broomhall had said, the Inland Mission had lately drunk deep of the cup of trials and bereavements, though the supply of comfort and encouragement had also been great. This thought led Mr. Taylor to speak in very thankful terms of his visit to America last year, and the wonderful time of blessing experienced there. Several marked and gracious answers to prayer were recounted in the recovery of sick ones. As to the advances of the year, he said that thirteen new stations in different provinces had been opened; for the specific details, which were of a very interesting character, we refer the reader to the next month's issue of China's Millions. In speaking of progress in the province of Kiangsi, Mr. Taylor observed that it was almost wholly due to the devoted efforts of the sisters; nothing, indeed, had more deeply impressed him of late than the way in which God has honoured the labours of the lady missionaries. It is clearly through them that many of the higher ranks of the Chinese can be won for Christ. They alone can have access to the women of China, and through that part of the work many of the more influential males are also reached. One feature of the work that has afforded Mr. Taylor much delight has been the fact that the body of missionaries constitute in themselves a little Evangelical Alliance. Brethren and sisters belonging to many different sections of the Church, work together in the fullest harmony and concord. It is this spirit of unity and brotherly love that is needed in all lands and through all the churches if we would carry out the Master's wish and entreaty to preach the Gospel to every creature.

Mrs. STOTT (who has so recently been bereaved by the translation of her husband) gave an intensely interesting account from her own experiences of fruit appearing among Chinese women after years of plodding and prayerful endeavour. From some of the facts she narrated, it was made abundantly evident that these Chinese women are well worth saving; their zeal and self-denial in working for the salvation of their own countrymen are a striking object-lesson to the women of our so-called Christian lands.

Another meeting was held in the evening, Mr. Samuel Gurney Sheppard presiding. Those who took part in the proceedings were Mr. Hudson Taylor, Mr. Broomhall, Mr. Theodore Howard, J.P., Dr. J. L. Maxwell (who made an earnest plea for a much-needed increase in the medical staff of the Mission, which was backed up by Mr. Taylor), Mr. F. W. Baller, Mr. George Nicoll, Mr. G. W. Clarke, and Miss Margaret Leitch, of Ceylon.

Mr. Wm. Hall, evangelist, is labouring at the Evangelistic Hall, Carluke, this week.

Fermoy, co. Cork.—A week's series of evangelistic services has been held here by Rev. James Kirkwood.

Evangelistic meetings are being held in one of the Lanarkshire Christian Union's tents, at Carnwath. Mr. M. Ferguson is the evangelist.

Paris Exhibition.—Rev. R. W. McAll says in a recent letter: "The meetings in our large temporary hall for the 'Exposition Universelle' are full of interest. Large numbers attend nightly."

Mr. and Mrs. George Evens have concluded a mission in connection with the Methodist Free Church, Longtown. It has been a time long to be remembered, Christians receiving great blessing, and sinners returning to God. The singing of Mrs. Evens proved a source of much good.

A Y.M.C.A. GARDEN PARTY.

"IT almost seems as though one had to become blind in order to be clever." This was the sincere encomium passed by Mr. George Williams in presiding over a pleasant al fresco meeting at the Norwood Royal Normal College for the Blind on Saturday afternoon. Through the combined kindness of Mr. Williams, and Dr. Campbell of the Blind College, a number of Y.M.C.A. friends from Aldersgate-street were invited to spend the afternoon at the College. Saturday was the first day of June, and the month opened in the good old queenly fashion. The sun poured down a generous wealth of golden light on the Norwood slopes, and the outing was much enjoyed by the goodly company present,

The doings of the blind students were, of course, the great attraction. For the sake of the visitors the educational classes were for a time put into full swing. It was one unbroken round of delight to watch the sightless students, from the tiny tots who were modelling clay apples and pears, up through the geography, arithmetic, elocution, writing, French, and other classes. A pleasing little incident happened at the geography class. While Mr. George Williams stood listening with admiration to the full and ready answers of the boys, who followed with their fingers on the map the rapid questions of Mr. Campbell the teacher, a reference chanced to be made to Bridgewater, and the bath-brick industry carried on there. Mr. Williams interrupted the flow of questions and answers to say that he knew something of Bridgewater, and had often seen the brick-making, though he did not say that that quiet little Somerset town had the honour of being his birthplace. After the classes came the recreative displays — roller skating, drill, gymnastics, boating, cycling, &c., all of which, performed with the utmost ease and confidence by the blind lads and lasses, were a source of genuine wonderment to the visitors.

After tea on the upper lawn, a meeting was held in the out-door rink, at which Mr. Williams presided. Besides his own timely remarks, there were genial addresses from Mr. Coldwell, of Newburgh, N.Y., Mr. Hind Smith, Mr. Werner, of the London German Y.M.C.A., Mr. Eckman, a young Swede, Mr. J. H. Putterill, and Dr. Campbell. In these addresses complimentary reference was made in about equal proportion to the advantages of the Y.M.C.A. and of the College for the Blind; everybody agreed that both were splendid and valuable institutions, and hoped that the afternoon's proceedings would be beneficial to each. About seven o'clock the party broke up, vastly pleased with the event.

Dr. Campbell, the enthusiastic and energetic head of the Normal College, who is himself blind, was here, there, and everywhere, feeling as much at home in threading the mazes of the extensive grounds as if he had the best pair of eyes in the world. His son, who sees to some purpose, appears to hold the strings of all the active study of the institution in his hands, and is a noted gymnast. Dr. Campbell expatiated with much zest on the skill and attainments of his blind pupils, and no wonder. He is to take some of the hardest workers on a cycling trip to Paris at Whitsuntide.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For blessing on a Conference on Christian Unity, at the Birmingham Y.M.C.A., on Thursday, June 13.——For much blessing on tent services at Cwmffrwdoer and other places in connection with Mr. Wintle's Mission, South Wales.

At a great gathering of educated natives at Madras was resolved to ask the Government to grant local option on the drink traffic in the Madras Presidency.

The American papers report that the Pullman Company took out 1600 liquor licences in one week for as many Pullman cars. Yet Mr. Pullman will have no saloons in his model town, knowing so well their pernicious influence.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

The Bishop of Durham has returned to his diocese from Bournemouth, after an absence of several months. Dr. Lightfoot's health has much improved, but he is still far from well.

On the return of Rev. Evan Hopkins, vicar of Holy Trinity, Richmond, from his recent short visit to Rome, he was presented by the members of his congregation with an address couched in most affectionate terms, and a purse of over 200 guineas, in token of their esteem.

Mr. Edmund F. E. Wigram, son of Rev. F. E. Wigram, the devoted hon. secretary of the Church Missionary Society, is to be ordained to the curacy of St. James's, Hatcham (Rev. S. A. Selwyn, vicar), and, after two years' service in the ministry, it is his desire to join the ranks of the C.M.S. missionaries.

On Monday evening, in Red Lion-street, Clerkenwell, a mission-house for the use of the Italian Protestants in London (and as a nucleus for similar organisations all over the country) was opened by the Bishop of Salisbury in the presence of a large number of ladies and gentlemen. His lordship said it was a home to which the poor Italian people who preferred the Protestant religion might worship.

A private conference of evangelical Churchmen, on the present state of ecclesiastical affairs, is to be held in London on June 19 and 20. "The necessity of Protestant Churchmen uniting for upholding the Reformation principles of the Church of England," will be one of the chief subjects for discussion. There will be an opening service at St. Martin's-in-the-Fields, with an address by the Dean of Canterbury.

Rev. R. Clark, of the C.M.S. Punjaub Mission, has been on a tour through Ajnala, Narowal, and Fathgarh. Everywhere he found the work most encouraging. The churches at these three places are full of Christian converts, where a few years ago there was not one baptized Christian; and villages in many districts have some Christians in them. "What is now needed," Mr. Clark writes, "is teaching power. The new Christians must be taught, and it is towards this that our energies must be directed."

METHODIST.

The Primitive Methodists have opened an Orphans' Home at Old Alresford, Hampshire.

The further extension of missionary work in West Africa will be pressed upon the Primitive Methodist Conference this year.

Rev. Alex. McAulay has returned from his long evangelistic tour in the West Indies. At every place where he held meetings he had large congregations, and the word preached was greatly blessed.

On Wednesday afternoon, last week, the memorial-stone of the new Wesleyan Chapel at Hatfield was laid, in the presence of a large and representative gathering of Wesleyan ministers and laymen, including Revs. John Walton and Dr. Ebenezer Jenkins (ex-Presidents of the Conference), Dr. Bowman Stephenson, and Hugh Price Hughes. At a public meeting subsequently held general satisfaction was expressed that at length Wesleyan Methodism had secured a proper footing at Hatfield.

BAPTIST.

The Duckpool-road Chapel, Newport, Mon. (Rev. A. T. Jones, pastor), which seats seven hundred, being very crowded, the church has decided to open a mission-room in a new district. Weekly meetings are at present being held in two new districts where there is no place of worship.

At the invitation of Mr. C. H. Spurgeon between five and six hundred deacons and other representatives of London Baptist churches met at the Metropolitan Tabernacle on Tuesday evening, last week, the object being to consider how best to deepen the spiritual life of the churches.

At New Barnet on Sunday week the ordinance of believers' baptism was administered by the pastor, Rev. A. Emlyn Jones. Among eight candidates two were members of the Established Church, and another was Rev. Charles Houghton, late minister of the Congregational Church at Holbeach, Lincolnshire.

At the annual foreign missionary meeting at the Borough-road Baptist Chapel, Southwark, the other day instead of the usual speeches, Rev. W. Allan, vicar of St. James's, Bermondsey, delivered a lecture on his recent visit to Bonny and other mission stations in West Africa. Rev. Burman Cassin, rector of St. George's, presided.

The ministry of Rev. W. Williams at Lambeth-road is increasing in power and fruitfulness. There were twenty-five baptized last week, and twenty-four received into fellowship on Sunday, making sixty-six this year. The church has lived for many years in unbroken harmony, while all its agencies are instinct with Divine life and strength.

At Mare-street Chapel, Hackney, E., on the evening of Sunday week, Rev. Evan Thomas delivered an address on "Baptism: a Confession of Discipleship," after which twenty-five persons were immersed. Several others were baptized on Thursday evening. "A tidal wave of spiritual life," writes a correspondent, "has visited this old church, so rich in past traditions."

A district conference in connection with the Baptist Ministers' Prayer Union was held on May 20—22 at the Baptist Chapel, Sutton-in-Craven, Yorkshire. Those who took part in the meetings included Revs. John Aldis, jun., J. Gelson Gregson, W. P. Lockhart, F. E. Marsh, J. E. Martin, W. J. Mathams, W. J. Mayers, F. B. Meyer (president of the Union), and others. The brethren dispersed to their various spheres of service, not a little refreshed by such a season of fraternal intercourse and quiet devotion.

SALVATION ARMY.

General Booth last week conducted large meetings in Switzerland.

The reports of the Shelter work continue to be most gratifying. On one night recently, at one of the men's shelters, no less than 200 were turned away after the place was full.

Captain Grace Lewis has been holding drawing-room meetings in Liverpool, amongst the wealthier classes, with great success, the attendance and interest manifested being most gratifying.

The attention of headquarters has recently been called to Chili, an urgent request having been received to commence a campaign there. Inquiries are being made with a view to complying with this request.

Captain Stirling has addressed a letter from her prison cell at Chillon to her comrades in Switzerland, urging them to fight on, and rejoicing in the fact that God has thus permitted her to suffer in his cause.

CONGREGATIONAL.

Rev. J. Morgan Gibbon, of Highgate, has accepted an invitation to the pastorate of Stamford-hill Congregational Church.

The Congregational Union of Jamaica have resolved to commence missionary work at Grey Town, Nicaragua, Central America, and also to ask the churches to make a special offering in behalf of the London Missionary Society, to show the sympathy felt in the present "crisis."

At the South-cliff Church, Scarborough, the annual soirée was held last week. The pastor, Rev. Vine Hall, stated that during the year the debt of £100 had been cleared off, and £740 spent in renovating the church and increasing the accommodation at their Seamer-road mission chapel.

Since the appointment of Rev. Thomas Warren to the pastorate of the joint churches of Rawmarsh and Greasborough, Yorkshire, there have been large accessions to the churches and Sunday-schools, and a strengthening of the other organisations, and lately the foundation stone of a new mission chapel at Parkgate was laid.

PRESBYTERIAN.

In connection with Rev. Thomas Curry's church in Bermondsey, S.E., a mission has been established for carrying on aggressive Christian work in the district. Its mode of working is by means of visitation, tract distribution, social gatherings, and weekly services.

Rev. Z. B. Woffendale, of Somers-town Presbyterian Church, Ossulston-street, Euston-road, received the large number of sixty-three new members into the fellowship of the church on Sunday week. Five adults and nine children were baptized on the same evening.

An open-air service was held in Victoria-park on Sunday last, under the auspices of the London Presbytery (North), in continuation of the series begun in Regent's-park. A large though shifting crowd gathered and heard the Gospel message delivered. The workers from Harley House lent their stand, and assisted in the service.

Brunswick-street Church, Manchester (Rev. W. Rigby Murray, minister), is about to extend its home mission work. The congregation has laboured for fourteen years in Union-street, Ardwick, and there is now a membership of 126 persons. More commodious premises being needed, it has been decided to build a mission-hall at a cost of £2000.

A pastoral letter, prepared by Principal Dykes, was read from the Presbyterian pulpits on Sunday. The pastoral deals largely with the question of amusements. Moderation in everything, says the Professor, is the Christian rule. Physical exercise is intended to be a minister to mental and spiritual well-being, not destructive of it. As to indoor entertainments, it must be left to each one's conscience to judge what is helpful and what hurtful. The time given to amusement of any sort ought never to absorb one's whole leisure, but the best hours at one's disposal ought to be jealously reserved for employments of higher value.

NOTES FROM IRELAND.

A Colportage Association, which has been established by the Methodists of the Cork district, has commenced operations under hopeful auspices.

Dr. M. L. Rossvally has been delivering lectures in Belfast on "The Atonement: its Sacrifice and Ceremonies." They have attracted a good deal of attention.

The annual Methodist Conference is to meet next week at Cork, and among those elected to attend its sittings, as lay representatives, is Mr. J. Townsend Trench, the well-known land agent and evangelist.

Unostentatiously the Belfast Prison Gate Mission is doing much good. During the year just closed, eighty-four women were received into the Home, and not a few of these openly professed to have experienced a change of heart.

The annual meeting of the General Assembly of the Irish Presbyterian Church, representing nearly half the Protestant population of Ireland, commenced its proceedings in Belfast on Monday evening. The session will last for about ten days.

The annual report of the Presbyterian body in Ireland for the year 1888 has been published, and, in the present condition of the sister island, it is of unusual interest. There has been during the year a general increase, 2453 having been added to the number of Sunday-school children, with a corresponding increase in the number of teachers, while the revenue has been increased by nearly £10,000; the "congregational subscriptions" having gone up £7808; nearly sixteen thousand pounds having been contributed for foreign, and £3471 for home mission purposes. There is much in this to rejoice over, and those who are most familiar with Ireland and its needs will find much in these simple figures to thank God for.

The Crescent Presbyterian Church, Belfast, of which Rev. I. McIlveen is the pastor, reports a prosperous year.

The sixtieth annual meeting of the Congregational Union of Ireland was held last week at Limerick. Rev. H. E. Bennett, of Sligo, presided, and about thirty-five delegates from various parts of the country were present. Rev. R. F. Horton attended as the representative of the Congregational Union of England and Wales.

NOTES FROM SCOTLAND.

The Established Church are about to build a mission chapel at Jochdar, island of South Uist.

A new mission-hall has been opened at Merkland-street, Partick, by the Free High Church.

The evangelistic work of the Sharon Hall Mission, Paisley, under their new president, Mr. Dalzel, is being accompanied with much blessing.

Renwick Free congregation, Glasgow, have welcomed home their minister, Rev. J. F. Daly, and his wife, who have just returned from a tour in India and Palestine, Mr. Daly having been appointed, along with Professor Lindsay, by the Free Church Assembly, to visit the mission stations in India.

A meeting has been held in Edinburgh to bid farewell to several missionaries about to proceed to India and Africa. The missionaries were Rev. Alex. Hetherwick, Miss Christie, Mr. Duncan, and Mrs. Fenwick, who are proceeding to Africa, and Revs. Henry Rice, Robert Kilgour, and Miss Augusta Reid, who are about to start for India.

In the tabulation of the returns of Free Church membership in our last issue, the number of members and adherents in the Presbytery of Caithness was erroneously given as 6417, instead of 9918. The return for the whole Church is thus brought up to 336,335, so that instead of there being a decrease of 264 over the Church, there is in reality an increase of 3237 to be noted.

FALLEN ASLEEP.

Mr. George Herbert Lake, an earnest Christian philanthropist, of Kennington, near Ashford, Kent.—The Ven. Thomas Sanctuary, Canon of Salisbury and Archdeacon of Dorset.—Right Rev. Richard Rawle, D.D., Principal and Professor of Divinity in Codrington College, Barbados, from 1872 to 1888 Bishop of Trinidad, West Indies.—Rev. William Lloyd, for sixty-four years rector of Lillingstone Lovell, Oxfordshire.—Rev. John Christie, D.D., Professor of Church History in the University of Aberdeen, N.B.—Rev. J. G. Davies, of Newbridge (Mon.), a prominent minister of the Baptist denomination in Wales.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

HOME.

Sir Wilfrid Lawson spoke at the recent annual gathering of the Free Church of Scotland Temperance Society.

The Scottish Leader says that Professor Meiklejohn has libelled the Scotch and the Dutch by the charge that they are the most drunken nations in Europe.

At a teetotal wedding at Greenock recently "fifty lads and lasses" sat down to tea instead of the customary whisky. This is taken as an omen of better times.

The Liverpool Wesleyan Band of Hope has requested superintendents of Sunday-schools to arrange for systematic temperance teaching, if possible, on one Sunday in each quarter.

The Newport District Band of Hope Union held its annual conference, and reported sixty-six affiliated societies, with eight thousand members, an increase of seventeen societies.

In the Local Government (Scotland) Bill it is provided that the licence duties shall be appropriated to the payment of local rates. This is justly objected to as giving the community a pecuniary interest in the traffic.

On Friday, according to notice, Sir Wilfrid Lawson is to move a resolution in favour of the direct veto. But should he win, what then? The House of Commons has thrice affirmed the principle of local option. Why, then, has it not become law?—Northern Advance.

Mr. Edward T. Smith, of Birmingham, has recently conducted a Gospel temperance mission at Sutton, Surrey, delivering the orations of J. B. Gough and Dr. Talmage, and giving original lectures. A large number of pledges were taken, and great good accomplished.

The Royal Victoria Hall and Coffee Tavern, Waterloo-road, London, is now a great success. The £17,000 needed to purchase the freehold has been raised, and as soon as possible will be handed over to a competent governing body to be appointed by the Charity Commissioners.

Dr. Alex. Whyte, of Edinburgh, lately said he found that when Gospel temperance work was taken up by a church, town, or community, these made staple progress. He appealed strongly to non-abstaining ministers to join them, and said he never had a more uncomfortable time in his life than the last two or three years before he came over.

FOREIGN.

James Tyson, the Australian millionaire, is a staunch abstainer.

Connecticut will vote upon a prohibitory amendment next October.

The Knights of Labour in Kentucky are crusading against the saloon. Many gates of death have been closed through their efforts.

Every beer saloon is a primary school in intemperance; every gilded drinking-hell is an academy wherein men graduate in this vice.—Toledo Blade.

Miss Frances E. Willard reports great activity and growth in temperance sentiment in the Southern States, and her free expressions of the need of prohibition were well received.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, JUNE 9.—Numbers XXVII.

IN the census given in the previous chapter males only are mentioned; and these young women, noticing that, in consequence of there being none in their household, their family was omitted, represented their hard case to Moses. They would have no share in the land, and their father's name would cease in Israel (4). It was a noble request. They felt sure that there was a portion for them, and they claimed it. What a mistake it is for any of God's children to allow themselves to be deprived of their inheritance in the risen heavenly life, the rest of God, the heritage of promise!

Moses constantly fell back for direction on the teaching of God (5; xv. 34). How wise it is not to lean to our own understanding (Prov. iii. 5, 6).

The sisters' request was abundantly vindicated (7), and they also established a precedent for all future time. God always delights to own a faith which simply and fearlessly appropriates all that He has given, and refuses, even in the face of nature's weakness and death, to surrender a single jot or tittle of the promised inheritance (Matt. v. 28).

The closing paragraph is sad and solemn (12). Moses personally suffered for his disobedience; but dispensationally it is true that the law cannot take us into the Promised Land, and therefore the great lawgiver could not go over Jordan. But how meekly he yielded to the Divine decision. How solicitous he was that the people should be well cared for (17). Mark how God retained for Himself the right to lead the congregation, so that their appointed head had always to take his directions through the priest. We, too, need to consult the Divine Oracle within our hearts (Rev. ii. 17).

MONDAY, JUNE 10.—Numbers XXVIII.

A repetition is here made of several laws previously enacted. This was rendered necessary, because a new generation had sprung up since their first institution. It may even be that during the weary wandering of forty years the religious rites had remained in disuse, and were only revived now that they were approaching the settled land of their heritance.

Notice the remarkable expressions, My offering, My bread, My sacrifices, a sweet savour unto Me). Evidently these offerings typified certain characteristics in God's people, and above all in Christ, which are precious to the heart of God. Do we daily offer such sacrifices? (Heb. xiii. 15, 16).

The divisions are marked. The daily offering —8), the Sabbath offering (9, 10), the monthly ferings (11—15), which were accompanied by the owing of trumpets, by the suspension of all bour, by the celebration of public worship (2 ings iv. 23), and by social and family feasts Sam. xx. 5). The passover offerings (16—25). e day of the first fruits (26—31).

The remarkable thing in all these sacrifices was e prevalence of the burnt offering (3, 6, 10, 13, 23, 27, 31), which signifies the devotion of the ole being to God (Rom. xii. 1). But this can ver be acceptable to God apart from the sin ering, by which alone we are rendered able stand for a moment in God's holy sight. We ust remember that these abundant sacrifices re partly intended for the maintenance of the eat body of priests and attendant Levites emoyed in the house of God. What sunny, holy ys must have been those of convocation (18, 26), en the land rested, and the hymns of worship ngled with the shouts of festal crowds!

TUESDAY, JUNE 11.—Numbers XXIX.

The solemnities of the seventh month described this chapter were very imposing. The seventh nth of the ecclesiastical year was the first month the civil year, and corresponded to our Septem-. It was the Hebrew New Year. It was anunced by the blowing of trumpets, which made olemn preparation for the sacred feasts which re held in greater numbers in this month than at other part of the year.

There were special offerings for the first month, addition to the usual monthly and daily offers (6).

The great Day of Atonement fell on the tenth of the seventh month (7—11). Its observances fully noticed Lev. xvi. But there seems to be addition made here of the large burnt offering, also of the sin offering to atone for the sins that mingled with the day's services. Our holiest service needs cleansing in the precious blood.

The feast of booths or tabernacles was held after the Day of Atonement (12—38). It lasted seven days, the first and last of which were Sabbaths, and a particular offering was appointed for each day, diminishing as each day passed by, as if God consulted the weakness of his children, who so soon tire. If the different days are lightly underlined in the Bible, the divine method will be more apparent. It is interesting to read Neh. viii. 14, &c.; also to remember that it was at the close of this week that our Lord Jesus spoke the marvellous words of John vii. 37. The annual offerings here enumerated as having been offered at the public expense amount to 1241, besides the immense number of private offerings. Do we sufficiently recognise the daily and special claims of God on our time, substance, and persons?

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 12.—Numbers XXX.

Vows might concern the offering of some gift on the altar, the abstaining from particular articles of meat and drink, the observance of private fasting, or the doing something for the service of God beyond what was authoritatively required (Jud. xi. 30—35; 1 Sam. i. 11; Ps. cxxxii. 2; Jer. xxxv. 6). A vow had to be audibly expressed, and it then became irrevocable. "Shall not break" (2). See also Ps. lv. 20. These vows in the case of women and children, however, were subject to the revision of husbands and parents.

It is very solemn when a soul devotes itself to God. Such an act of consecration should not be lightly entered upon. How terrible it is to see people speaking frivolously about a solemn consecration service! and when once the vow is made, at all costs it must be kept (Eccles. v. 1—6.)

At the same time God always takes into account all those disabilities which are beyond our power to prevent, and occur to us from our association with others. The Lord shall forgive (5, 8, 12).

Jesus faithfully kept to his solemn undertaking to be our Surety, and to die for us. Though it cost Him bloody sweat, and death of agony, He swerved neither to the right nor left, and finished the work of glorifying God, and saving us, which He had undertaken.

How solemn is our responsibility in hindering any whom we love from carrying out their pious schemes and wishes. We have no right to disallow (5, 8). On the other hand, it is sometimes better to hold our peace (14), and to allow the will of God to proceed in the souls of those whom we love, without meddling with it by a single word of praise or blame. In these things we shall be divinely directed. We think, however, that it is not the will of God that we, who are not under law but grace, should bind ourselves by vows; but be led by the Spirit. "Swear not at all" is in our judgment a precept to this effect.

THURSDAY, JUNE 13.—Numbers XXXI.

The Midianites, under the direction of Balaam, were the principal instigators of the infamous scheme of seduction planned to entrap the Israelites into the double crime of idolatry and licentiousness, so that the Lord would be compelled to withdraw his help and presence (xxv.). Before Moses died, he gave orders for their extermination.

The word "delivered" (5) means draughted, or chosen. It is very remarkable to find Phinehas, the priest, who had commenced the process of judgment, commissioned to lead the troops. This was not one of the wars of Canaan, but a war necessitated by the evil passions and sinful outbreak of the people; and also of solemn judgment against the Midianites for their awful wickedness.

In this case the Midianite women were slain, because of their share in the seduction of Israel (15).

Though Israel was obeying God in this terrible act of judgment, they had contracted defilement (19), and needed cleansing (Lev. xv. 13). We need this also, whenever we do God's work. All the spoils of war had also to be cleansed (22, 23). We must all go through a process of purification; but not through fire, unless God knows we are able to bear it.

The booty was divided into two equal parts (26, &c.), the one for the whole people, the other for the soldiers; but from each a proportion was deducted for sacred purposes.

In token of God's wonderful care (48, &c.), the people gave of the spoils of jewellery an amount equal to £87,869 16s. 5d., for the use of the Tabernacle. The Midianites were fond of such display (Judg. viii. 24).

It was a terrible judgment, and yet probably this nation had reached a pitch of wickedness which would have infected the world, and needed to be dealt with summarily. And probably God only anticipated by a few years the natural result of the awful vices which were rife in their midst. These young girls, who were taken into the Israelite homes as slaves, would be under very stringent regulations, and be brought up in the knowledge and worship of Jehovah.

FRIDAY, JUNE 14.—Numbers XXXII.

Reuben and Gad, being contiguous to each other in the camp, had many opportunities of conversing together, and therefore united in preferring the request for permission to settle on the East of Jordan, where the vast tracks of pasturage were eminently suited for their flocks. Many opinions have been expressed as to the rightness of their request. They have been taken to be half-and-half men, mere borderers, who were content with something short of God's purpose, and so stayed on the safe and comfortable side of Jordan. It is a great mistake to let the thought of good pasturage warp the action of obedience or faith.

At first Moses would not hear of their proposal (6—15), and before his indignant remonstrances they drew back from him (16). His indignation arose because it seemed to him that they were anxious to evade their fair share in the hardships of the conquest of Canaan.

But they explained their willingness to serve in the campaign, when they had rebuilt the cities recently captured, and had left their children under the care of some of their brethren. As only 40,000 passed over Jordan (Josh. iv. 31) about 70,000 remained in charge of the new possessions. We must bear each other's burdens (Gal. vi. 2). After these solemn assurances Moses was able to assent to their proposals, and formally announced the matter to the leaders of the people (28). Let us not be content with anything less than Eph. ii. 6. This is our heavenly inheritance, across the river of death to self and sin. Let us be determined that it shall be possessed by us at all costs.

SATURDAY, JUNE 15.—Numbers XXXIII.

This is a catalogue of the camping places between Egypt and the Land of Promise, where they made a prolonged sojourn. The record would confirm their faith in God's marvellous guidance and help, and would give them new courage on entering Canaan. This is practically the winding up of the story of the wilderness journeyings.

The burial of the firstborn is a new light upon that terrible plague and the delay of Pharaoh in his pursuit (4).

The present road after losing sight of the sea for an interval, owing to a great mountain range, comes back to it again (10). And here we have a remarkable testimony to the accuracy of this record. The arrival at Kadesh (37) is their second sojourn there (xx. 1). Between this and their former visit (i. 11; xiii. 20) occur the thirty-eight years of wandering.

The command for the expulsion of the Canaanites was very stringent, and everything was to be destroyed which would serve to lead the people into their atrocious sins. We cannot be too careful in destroying prints, books, novels; anything which has been a curse to others or to us. Any failure to do this, any union with sinners, any permission of them or their ways is sure to be terribly avenged on ourselves. It is ever so much better to root out evil with a strong hand, than to permit it in any form, for the little one will inevitably grow till it dispossess us of our inheritance, or cause us serious discomfort.

Y.W.C.A. TEMPERANCE WORK.—The first conference on temperance work in connection with the London Y.W.C.A. was lately held at Morley Halls, Regent-street; the meeting was convened through the energetic endeavours of Mrs. Hind Smith and Miss Morley. The Hon. Miss Kinnaird, Miss Skirrow, Miss Gough, Miss Coles, Miss Leitch, Major Lombard, and others, took part in the discussion, which was on the whole encouraging. It was decided to hold another conference in October.

REV. H. GRATTAN GUINNESS is still in America, and has been arousing great interest in foreign missions by his lectures and addresses in various cities. On his visiting Lincoln University on May 10, eight students offered themselves for missionary service in Africa. The University offered to educate, free of charge, twenty students, to be selected by Mr. Guinness, for service in Africa, ten to be from the Congo, and ten from the schools in the South. A Company has offered to put Mr. Guinness' missionaries on the coast of Africa free of charge.

The Book World.

SOME JUNE MAGAZINES.

SUNDAY MAGAZINE.

MISS HESBA STRETTON relates a most pathetic story of Trixy, a child acrobat, and how she was done to death, to swell the gains of her cruel employers, and to satisfy the sensational cravings of the gaping and thoughtless crowd.

THE YOUNG MAN.

An excellent portrait of Rev. John McNeill is accompanied by a literary sketch, a part of which we observe is bodily borrowed from our recent sketch, without any acknowledgment. There are contributions from Dr. Hiles Hitchens, Rev. W. J. Dawson, and others.

THE CHRISTIAN TREASURY.

Mr. Meyer has quite a galaxy of good contributors this month. Mr. W. Y. Fullerton is pungent and practical in his paper on "God's Jewels." Lady Hope continues her story "Snow Blossoms." There is a suggestive sermon by Canon Westcott, and Mr. Meyer's own contributions are as taking as ever.

THE GUIDE.

This monthly professes to be "a help to personal progress," and its contents justify the profession. Rev. A. F. Forrest, of Glasgow, is contributing some thoughtful articles on the Gospel parables. The sixth of a series of comprehensive and instructive sketches on "The Saviours of Society" is devoted to Miss Agnes Weston and her work among Her Majesty's blue jackets and marines. The series will have a special interest for all earnest labourers in the Master's vineyard. (1d. William Love, 226, Argyle street, Glasgow.)

THE LEISURE HOUR.

Mr. W. J. Gordon tells the story of the ill-fated Panama Canal; Prebendary Harry Jones discourses wisely on "Almsgiving"; Dr. Schofield, in an article about "Nervousness and Hysteria," says that, in discussions on Faith-healing, it is well ever to remember the distinction between cases of organic disease and mere nervous disorders. The good effects of moral as distinguished from physical remedies will be chiefly found in the latter class of cases. An excellent sketch and description are given of Dr. Phillips Brooks' splendid Church Structure in Boston, U.S.A.

THE CENTURY MAGAZINE.

We have elsewhere referred to the article on Siberian Prisons in the current issue of this singularly attractive serial. In the same number there is a charmingly illustrated sketch of the work of the New York Y.W.C.A. It describes a wonderful variety of industrial and other classes, in which the members of the Association are taught to improve their leisure hours. The religious part of the work is well attended to, while a relief committee cares for the sick and needy, and sends tired women to the country. Last year 10,000 had this treat, at the cost of less than a dollar a head.

SUNDAY AT HOME.

Rev. Geo. Cousins contributes a very excellent and encouraging story about Samoa, past and present, and recounts some of the wonderful triumphs of the Gospel in those distant islands of the southern sea. Another valuable paper is that entitled "Recent Discoveries and the Christian Faith," in which the writer says: "The more one investigates in the region of history and of science, the more one is taught the lesson of intellectual modesty and humility—to abide patiently upon the teaching of facts, and thus gain that fuller light which is evermore poured from above on lowly and teachable souls."

THE QUIVER.

We read with pleasure in this issue, of the first bronze medal for bravery that has been presented to a woman in connection with The Quiver fund. The recipient was Miss Fanny Best, a nurse, resident in Tiverton, who courageously defended the little ones under her care when attacked by an infuriated cow. In the same number some interesting particulars are given of a monthly serial for the blind, started and printed in Braille type. By its agency our afflicted brethren and sisters will be able to enter the rich fields of literature, from which seeing readers derive so much pleasure and benefit.

THE FIRESIDE.

This serial has for its chief attraction Miss Emily Holt's graphic story of life in the time of William the Conqueror. The contents of the magazine are wonderful in their variety, Rev. C. Bullock, the editor, being himself a very industrious contributor.

THE GOSPEL MAGAZINE.

Rev. Dr. Doudney, the venerable editor, opens with a vigorous address, entitled, "Our Fiftieth or Jubilee Editorial Year." His brother in declining years, and oldest correspondent, Mr. George Cowell, writes on "The Covenant of Grace." Replete with articles on great themes, this monthly is never uncertain in its teaching. Sunday Afternoon, June 16.

JESUS CRUCIFIED: MARK XV. 21—39.

GOLDEN TEXT: PHIL. ii. 8.

OF Simon the Cyrenian (21) we know nothing beyond what is mentioned here. Whether he was a disciple of Christ, or became one afterwards through this fellowship with the Lord's suffering, we cannot tell. His son Rufus is supposed to be referred to in Rom. xvi. 13. Cyrene was an African city on the coast of the Mediterranean. Men of Cyrene heard the Gospel on the day of Pentecost (Acts ii. 10), and were among the teachers scattered abroad through the persecution, some of whom helped to found the church at Antioch. "Bear his cross" ("after Jesus," Luke xxiii. 26).—The heavier end was upon Jesus. Simon followed bearing the lighter part of it. Is not that a picture of every true follower of Christ? We are called to bear his cross, and to follow Him (Mark viii. 34); thus we go forth to die with Him, and to pass through his death into resurrection life (Rom. vi.).

The crucifixion (22—25).—The place was called Golgotha (Calvary, in Luke). Probably so named because in shape it resembled a skull, or perhaps because it was the place of public execution. Its exact locality is still uncertain; but Heb. xiii. 12 tells us it was outside the city, and points an important lesson from that fact. It is more important to learn that lesson than to discover the exact site. "Wine mingled with myrrh" (23).—A drink intended to stupefy those who were to be crucified. Jesus tasted (Matt. xxvii. 34), but would not drink. He had come to "taste death for every man," and for his atoning work needed to have his faculties in full vigour.

"They crucified Him" (24), "the third hour" (25), i.e., nine o'clock in the morning. The previous night had been spent, not in sleep, but partly in prayer in Gethsemane, and since then in being hurried from one tribunal to another, and in suffering humiliating and painful inflictions from his enemies. Morning brings no relief, but only deeper suffering. Crucifixion was the most shameful and painful form of death. It could not be inflicted upon any Roman citizen. The victim was first stripped, then laid upon the cross, and huge nails driven through the palms of his hands, then through the feet, either separately or together. Then the cross was dropped into a hole in the ground, increasing the agony of the sufferer; and there he hung, raised but a little from the ground, enduring constantly increasing torture, until death came to his relief. To such a death the Son of God became obedient; and prophecy had foretold it (Psa. xxii. 16—18). Yet the physical was not the worst part of the Saviour's sufferings. He has Himself strengthened his servants to endure physical torture perhaps as great, but as the sin-bearer He had still more to endure. See Isa. liii. 5, 6, 10, and Zech. xiii. 7. Apart from this explanation the cross is inexplicable. There seems to be in it neither wisdom, nor righteousness, nor love, unless He died as "the Lamb of God taking away the sin of the world." "They parted his garments" (24).—How manifestly God was behind even the enemies of Christ, so that they unconsciously fulfil the prophecy in their own conduct.

"The superscription" (26) was written in three different languages (John xix. 19, 20), which may account for the different words used to describe it. It is called "his accusation" (Matt. xxvii. 37). It served the purpose Pilate evidently intended, and condemned the Jews themselves (see John xix. 21, 22); but not less did it condemn Pilate for consenting to the will of the Jews. The superscription still applies to Christ. The ignominy of the cross has not destroyed his kingly character and claim. He will yet reign, and even now as "the Lamb slain" is in the midst of the throne (Rev. v. 6).

"Two thieves" (27).—A further attempt of his enemies to heap reproach upon Him, so as to make men ashamed to own Him. Yet another signal failure, for in this also, prophecy had anticipated them (28, and Isa. liii. 12). Their worst does not and cannot exceed what God's "hand and counsel had determined to be done" (Acts iv. 28). And of the thieves, one became a witness to his Kingship, and his power to save (Luke xxiii. 39—43). The triumph of the cross never appears so wonderful as in that event.

The mockers (29—32).—"The passers by railed on Him," as they passed to and from the city.—They recalled the charge made against Him, while what He meant by his words was being fulfilled (John ii. 19). "Come down from the cross" (30).—The cry of many still. "The offence of the cross has not ceased." The world can do with Christ anywhere but there. His life and character they can applaud; but his cross is foolishness and a stumbling block. "The chief priests" (31, 32) were more refined in their cruelty. They would not speak to Him, but spoke contemptuously to one another about Him. Yet how their charge glorified Christ. "He saved others," even his enemies witness that. How it recoils upon themselves. Why crucify Him, if He saved others? And how much truer it was than they thought. He could not save Himself because He would save others. The more we study the incidents of the cross, the more does the glory of Christ appear in it.

This mockery continued for three hours, then at noon, "the sixth hour" (33), when the sun should have been at his full splendour, darkness settled over the land—probably Judea. No natural explanation can be given—it was evidently miraculous. Probably it awed and silenced for awhile the mockers around the cross; but, as no immediate punishment fell upon them, their terror would grow less, until, after three hours more, it passed away, and the sun shone again on the awful scene. The cry of the Saviour as the darkness was about to pass away was awful. "Eloi," &c. (34).—See Ps. xxii. 1. Nothing so exhibits the terrible nature of Christ's sufferings as this. To have an experience of God-forsakenness is hell. This is what sin merits, and this the Saviour endured. To what danger are they exposed who are going forward to endure the full penalty of their sin! But even this cry excited further mockery (35, 36).

Then came the end (37—39).—"A loud voice"—the cry, not of an exhausted and vanquished man, but of a conqueror. "He triumphed when He fell." Marks of his triumph accompany the end. "The veil was rent" (38), declaring that now through the rent veil of his flesh the way into the holiest was opened (Heb. x. 19, 20). See also Matt. xxvii. 51—53. "The centurion" (39) was convinced through these wonders, and, as a condemnation of the crime of the Jews, confessed "truly this man was the Son of God."

NERVOUS EXHAUSTION.

PULVERMACHER'S WORLD-FAMED GALVANIC BELTS, for the cure of NERVOUS EXHAUSTION and DEBILITY, have received Testimonials from three Physicians to Her Majesty the Queen and the leading Physicians of Nine London Hospitals, including Forty Members of the Royal College of Physicians of London.

The distressing symptoms of NERVOUS EXHAUSTION and DEBILITY are speedily removed by means of Pulvermacher's World-famed Galvanic Belts, which are so arranged as to convey a continuous electric current direct to the affected parts, gradually stimulating and strengthening all the nerves and muscles, and speedily arresting all symptoms of waste and decay.

Dr. C. HANDFIELD JONES, F.R.C.P., F.R.S., Physician to St. Mary's Hospital, says: "I am satisfied that Mr. PULVERMACHER is an honest and earnest labourer in the field of science, and I think he deserves to meet with every encouragement from the profession and scientific men."

Dr. H. A. ALLBUTT, M.R.C.P., 24, Park Square, Leeds, writes, October, 1888: "I always recommend with confidence Mr. PULVERMACHER'S BELTS. Ladies recovering from illness incidental to their sex will find these BELTS of vast assistance in restoring lost nerve power."

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

PHTHISIS.—BOTH LUNGS AFFECTED.—CASE of a LADY at COVENTRY.

Mrs. K. S. P., a widow lady and a governess, consulted me October 29th of last year. Illness had commenced 13 months before this with cough and general weakness. Consumption was in the family. Her cough had now become very severe, expectoration had increased and become decidedly purulent, hæmorrhage had taken place, and both fluid and congested blood had been mingled with the phlegm, pains in the chest had become severe, also in the left side, the breathing more oppressed, the secretions all wrong, fever and night perspirations, loss of flesh in the chest, arms, and legs was rapidly taking place, the strength failing fast. Her doctor now declared her left lung seriously diseased, and the right lung a little.

Reading of my treatment in the Christian World, she determined to apply to me.

In a month she reported herself as having been at a standstill—"no visible improvement," but not worse. "I trust the medicine will relieve me in time."

In another month she writes: "I am thankful I am improving. I now feel sure it will do me good if I continue. I leave it to my heavenly Father."

After this, the winter months trying her, she went on but slowly; but was very much better by the end of January last in all her symptoms. "I am very thankful (she writes) for the great relief experienced." In another month she was better still. Writing me April 23rd she says: "I have attended chapel for the first time since August last. My friends are astonished at the change in me. I cannot express my gratitude to you and to my heavenly Father for your medicine, which, I am sure, has been the means of saving my life. I wish more knew of it."

(I have reason to think this lady would not like her name and address to appear in print, but am sure would be glad privately to corroborate this.)

NOTE. — Days of Consultation. — TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give portrait and sketch of the late Rev. Henry Quick, Congregational Minister, Clifton, Bristol.

At this season of the year many calls reach us from open-air workers for a supply of Gospel tracts. Will our kind readers replenish the treasury of our "Tract Fund," which is considerably overdrawn, that we may be in a position to respond to the most pressing of these requests.

We give in this issue (a week earlier than usual), the programme of the forthcoming Mildmay Conference. This will probably enable those who purpose attending, to make their arrangements with more leisure and comfort.

In a very weighty communication to The Times, of Friday last, Bishop Smythies, of the Universities Mission, pleads that, as a step towards removing the curse of the slave trade in Africa, the status of slavery should be abolished in the islands of Zanzibar and Pemba. This would exercise a great moral effect on the Continent wherever the knowledge of the fact might spread. Zanzibar would then be a place of refuge to which hunted slaves might flee, and where their freedom would be secured. Bishop Smythies is by no means among those who believe in the comparative happiness of the African bondsman, and he has had ample opportunity for personal observation. We earnestly hope that his suggestion may in some way be carried out, and that England and Germany will combine to exercise their influence to such a desirable result.

We referred to the Queen and vivisection in our last issue. Since then our attention has been called to a passage in Mrs. Oliphant's "Life of Principal Tulloch." On a visit of his to Balmoral, Her Majesty said, very warmly, that it made her wild to think of the cruelties practised on poor animals, and she ridiculed the idea of comparing it to sport. "She told me," says the Principal, "that I ought to preach about it."

It is refreshing to find such firm faith in the Bible, in a geologist of world-wide fame like Sir J. William Dawson, F.R.S. In the June Contemporary Review there is an article by him on "Genesis, and some of its critics." Unhappily, he finds these critics in men who sit in theological chairs in universities, determining the human processes by which the Scriptures were composed, and sneering at every man who does not accept their dicta. Against these "critics of yesterday" Sir William Dawson contends that the editor or author of "the noble compositions contained in Genesis i. and ii." was a man who knew what he was saying; was not a writer of such absolute mental imbecility as our modern doctors make out; that he had profound and accurate conceptions of physical facts; that there is no such contradiction between Genesis i. and ii. as these modern critics suppose; that the Bible account of Eden is sustained by recent geographical researches; and that the antiquity, unity, and genuineness of the early chapters of Genesis will not suffer from literary, linguistic, and scientific inquiries, however far they go.

The controversy with Agnosticism, as defended by the originator of the term, has answered a useful end. It has absolutely proved that scientific scepticism is obliged to recede when it has incautiously ventured on lines of literary criticism in relation to the Christian Scriptures. Professor Huxley's reply in the June Nineteenth Century, to Dr. Wace, is feeble in the extreme. The rest of the long essay appears to our careful reading sorely wanting in candour. It sustains itself by appeals to authorities which are not accepted by the Professor's opponents, and it would plunge a generation appalled by the mystery of evil, into utter despair both as to its origin, and how it can be overcome.

Not less unfair, although more common, is the Professor's contention that ministers of religion are swayed by mercenary considerations. Let it be admitted that there has been a host of ecclesiastics who have sordidly adopted the maxim that it is best to sail with wind and tide. Nevertheless, no fair-minded person can fail to admit that through Apostolic, Patristic, Reformation, Puritan, and Nonconformist times, down to the Scotch Disruption of 1843, the most magnificent and impressive sacrifices which the world has seen have been made in loyalty to truth and conscience, by ministers of Christianity.

Eight hundred and ninety-four lives lost every year through missing ships hailing from our ports, is the reply of Samuel Plimsoll in The Ninetecnth Century to Mr. Scrutton's defence of the shipping interest. Mr. Plimsoll does not condemn all such advocates, but he gives instance after instance of men terrified as they went out in vessels which were in a shameful condition, which were fully insured, and not one of which was ever heard of again. No pleas ought to prevail to arrest a remedy against the loss, on an average, of more than two of our brave seamen every day.

The action of those among our countrymen who have sent goods to be shown at the Paris Exhibition, in making a decisive stand against the desecration of the Sabbath there, is much to be commended. On the Continent, Sunday is the chief day for pleasure-seeking, and those who flock in their thousands to the Exhibition on that day will learn a salutary lesson from the silent protest of the British section, with its exhibits covered up, and the exhibitors away. Englishmen enjoy the high and inestimable privilege of being taught and accustomed from their earliest years to the Scriptural observance of the Sabbath; but many of them are tempted to forego it when they travel on the Continent, led away by that fatal principle of "doing in Rome as the Romans do." This being so, the attitude taken up by our fellow-countrymen in so public a place, and so public a manner, is all the more useful and hopeful; it displays a moral courage which is especially to be admired, and which cannot fail to make its impression upon professing Christians of other nationalities.

The wide extent to which superstitious practices prevail in the Mohammedan world is demonstrated by the high reputation which the "occult arts" enjoy among the most highly educated of the people. The University of Garaouïn, at Fez, Morocco, is the largest educational establishment in North Africa, having forty professors and seven hundred students. Naturally the theology which claims the Koran for its source and centre forms an important part of the curriculum. In an account of the work in a recent issue of The Times we read that among the subjects studied are:—

> The talismanic numbers, or the determination by calculation of the influences of angels, spirits, and stars, of the names of the conqueror and the conquered, and of other future events. The difficulty experienced in obtaining a Professor intimate with the principles of this science, and able to impart his information, is said to be incredible.

The latter sentence hardly requires explanation. Pity the poor Mohammedans, slaves of such a tyranny of ignorance and folly! Only as the light of God in Christ becomes known in North Africa will the devotees of the False Prophet become emancipated. Then we shall hear of the truth as to Divine providence rendering permanently vacant the professional part which, it is not astonishing to learn, is at the present time only filled with "incredible difficulty."

The Romanist papers in the Italian capital are very properly protesting against the projected performance in Rome of dramas which they describe as being grossly indecent. We trust that the protest may not be without avail, for, if what is said of the plays is correct, there has been of late years no greater sign of the decadence of our age. It is a remarkable fact, however, and one to which our Roman contemporaries omit to give due prominence, that one of the worst of the advertised plays was written by a Romish cardinal.

We are glad to notice that the condition of street children in Newcastle has not been lost sight of. Several ameliorative and preventive measures are already bearing good fruit. At a recent meeting of the Board of Guardians a resolution, was passed empowering their officers to prosecute in any case of wilful neglect on the part of parents in regard to their children, and it is anticipated that this course will have a very beneficial effect. There are many other large towns in which it is desirable that drastic measures of the kind should be adopted.

We are not surprised to find Dr. Macdonald, M.P., who is the coroner for North-east London, stating before the Select Committee on Friendly Societies that he had come to the conclusion that infantile insurance was "a temptation, and almost an incentive, to neglect, and even to murder." Dr. Macdonald went on to say that of 262 children upon whom inquests had been held during six months, 126 were insured, five of them being under a month old, twenty-two under three months, and so on. At one age the number of insured children who died under doubtful circumstances was just double that of the uninsured. These figures, affecting one small district, are terrible enough, without any effort to calculate what the proportion must be throughout the entire country, and they certainly point to what we have frequently urged, the need for restrictive legislation in regard to the matter.

In an able paper in the current number of The Theological Monthly, under the heading of "Church of England Hymnals," Rev. W. G. Horder finds that the general tendency of hymnody has been in the direction of an emphatic doctrinal tone, and complains of a lack of "really poetic hymns." During the last twenty-five years, however, Mr. Horder states there has been a great development in the direction of this metrical and imaginative excellence rather than in that of "doctrinal decisiveness," and he is satisfied that the progress will continue to be upon that line. We trust that Mr. Horder's anticipations may not be realised; for those hymns which are the greatest favourites, and which have been the most largely blessed are those in which there is no uncertain sound in regard to vital truth: in which, in fact, there is a statement, metrical it may be, but certainly not imaginative, of the great verities of sin and salvation.

The following statement, from the correspondence of The Times, is a very startling one:—

During the month of May no less than forty-three suicides were committed in Vienna, a total which for that month has not been reached for many years past.

We scarcely understand the distinction that seems to be drawn here between one month and another; anyhow, the estimate of the value of human life must be at a very low ebb in the gay Austrian capital. At the same time, we in Great Britain are not in a position to throw many stones at our neighbours, in view of the alarming disregard of life that is finding expression in so many brutal murders and suicides. All this, of course, is the natural outcome of Agnosticism and unbelief; where there are trust in God and a committal of life and sorrows and burdens to Him, no one need seek to fly from the ills he has to those he knows not of.

The awful and heartrending accounts of the Pennsylvania disaster, which have been filling the columns of the daily papers, are not without their lessons, many of them of a most striking and impressive character. Of these, perhaps the most grimly instructive is the narrative of the disregarded warnings. Some hours before the catastrophe, and while there was yet time to escape, affrighted messengers came hurrying down the valley, announcing the likelihood of a flood, and crying aloud as they went: "To the hills! To the hills!" A few took the warning, and fled away for their lives amid the scoffing jeers of the multitude who disbelieved in the scare. In a few hours the rushing, mighty torrent came down, and swept away those scoffers, while those who had heeded the notice were away and in security. What a moral is here for those who persistently neglect the call to salvation, and deride those among their brethren who give obedience unto it while yet there is time. What more graphic illustration of the foolishness of unconverted men could be imagined than that which has so impressively been furnished to us by the hand of Nature?

The Times of Saturday has a very sympathetic and well-expressed article on the great calamities with which dwellers in America are so painfully familiar. A startling addition to the muster roll was reported in that morning's paper on the burning of Seattle, an important town in the new State of Washington, on the Pacific seaboard, in which several lives were lost, and property destroyed to the tune of £3,000,000. Referring specially to the disaster in the Conemaugh Valley, The Times says:—

It is almost unfeeling to speak of the material damage. Nature repairs her ravages; and even capital recovers its losses in time. What is untold, and what never can be told, is the unobserved and unrecorded suffering, the silent and unspeakable tragedy of those 10,000 lives suddenly extinguished, many of them by the most awful and agonising of deaths. Here and there a survivor or an eye-witness can afford us a faint glimpse of the accumulated horrors of the deluge and the holocaust. But of wives widowed, of children orphaned, of whole families overwhelmed, of the suffering, the suspense, the agony of the victims, the tale is incalculable, the tragedy is almost beyond human conception. The sympathy of the whole civilised world is with the American people in this unexampled disaster; nor is admiration wanting for the patience of the sufferers, and the promptitude with which relief was organised, order restored in spite of the inhuman activity of wreckers, marauders, and ruffians, and measures set on foot for retrieving the material part of the calamity....

While we may be thankful for our immunity from these occasional penalties of material greatness, we cannot forget—and it is satisfactory to see that our countrymen have not forgotten—that the people of America are our own brethren, and that sorrows and sufferings which make the whole world kin are entitled to special and active sympathy from ourselves.

The proposal to establish a Pasteur Institute in London, has called forth earnest protests, not only from medical men who hold that it has yet to be proved that the system of inoculation is actually protective against hydrophobia, but also from persons who believe that it is morally impossible for the Divine economy to provide escape from the consequences of a dog-bite by means which necessitate the infliction of unutterable agony upon dumb animals. Dr. R. E. Dudgeon, writing to The Daily News, states that since the introduction of M. Pasteur's inoculations, deaths from hydrophobia have increased in number among the French people, while in Germany, where dogs are universally muzzled, the malady is very rare. Another correspondent, who points out that one requisite of a Pasteur Institute is a constant supply of dogs in a state of madness, lasting on an average fourteen days before they die, writes:—

What is needed in London is not the adoption of Pasteur's system, which involves physical danger to the human being, as well as methods from which the enlightened conscience revolts; but the establishment of a well-appointed institution for the study of hydrophobia by humane methods, and the prompt treatment of persons who are bitten, by the vapour bath and other means which have proved highly successful, but which require a special institution for their application.

As time passes, spiritualism becomes more completely discredited. In a book, recently published, Rev. J. H. Skewes told a tale full of marvellous circumstance, setting forth how the "spirits" of a deceased child "revealed" the course which was followed in the discovery of the fate of Sir John Franklin and his Arctic exploring party. Sir Leopold McClintock, who is still in the flesh, has speedily cut short the career of this clumsy fiction. The expeditions were, he declares, altogether independent of "spiritual" advice or direction. Sir Leopold acutely points out that in the "revelation" a channel is mentioned by name which, as a fact, was neither discovered nor named until two years later than the date of the pretended "spiritual" utterances!

Caring for the Lonely.

BY REV. W. J. DAWSON.*

THE life of a young man in a great city is often one of the loneliest of lives. He has comrades, but few friends; many companions, but scarcely one counsellor. He has left the safe anchorage of home, and is often half intoxicated with the sense of his unrestrained liberty. At the most critical and susceptible period of life he is most solitary, most left to himself, and least guarded against the seductions of impure delight.

The two things most needed at such a time are the friendly aid of a thoroughly honest and manly piety, and, if possible, the social rallying-point of Christian club or home life. It is a question which Christian households in great cities should discuss, whether it is not their bounden duty to open their doors freely to this crowd of young strangers who surround them; for to be cut off in the early stage of manhood from the society of good women, is an unspeakable misfortune. It is a yet more urgent question whether the churches should not provide in every city social centres for young manhood. I do not mean one or two huge institutions, such as we now possess. I mean numerous homes and clubs, where young men coming up in search of situations could find help, welcome, and accommodation, and where, after business hours, they could gather in genial social intercourse. Some social stimulant the young nature craves, and must have. If the churches do not provide it, the music-hall will.

CONVALESCENT HOME, FOLKESTONE.—Our readers may recollect that Mrs. Mearns has a Convalescent Home at Folkestone for London poor. Many of these can only receive its advantages on payment of a nominal sum, or entirely free. Rev. A. Mearns, Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street, E.C., writes that he has spent all the money received for the purposes of the Home, and more than £200 in addition. He asks for the practical co-operation of those who sympathise with the provision of such a boon to the necessitous and the deserving. Many of the applications received are of a peculiarly touching description. Every subscriber of a guinea has the privilege of recommending a suitable patient for a fortnight to the Home, and any minister sending the amount of a collection is entitled to recommend patients on the same terms as an annual subscriber of the same amount.

Evangelising at Epsom.

THE Christian Church of to-day has been sadly slow in obeying many of the injunctions of her Lord. Nothing can be plainer or more emphatic than the command to "sow beside all waters." Yet, as a rule, the Church only sows the seeds of saving truth in certain convenient and selected spots. The Open-air Mission has done much in the way of "reaching the masses" in the old-fashioned and only rational way of going where the masses are congregated. Epsom Downs in Derby week is certainly a resort of the masses; but the churches as a whole have evidently thought that the devil ought to be left in sole possession. So, with the exception of a faithful few of the Open-air Mission, and a band from the London City Mission, our ministers of the Gospel have religiously kept away from the racecourse, afraid apparently lest they should compromise their reputation by being seen in such society. That was not quite the line of action that guided the great Master Himself.

This year, the thought came to Mr. Josiah Nix, of the West London Wesleyan Mission, as he sat in his study, that he must take the Gospel to the sinners on Epson Downs. At first the suggestion startled him and he fought it. But the idea forced itself home till he concluded it was a heaven-sent inspiration. Then he yielded, sought guidance and help from God, and began at once to lay his plans. He told his fellow Christians what he thought he would require—a tent, a couple of furniture vans, a quarter of a million tracts, leaflets, &c., and some money for incidental expenses. Everything came in due course, as indeed it always does where the cause is good and the need is genuine. When the races began on the Tuesday, Mr. Nix and his band of workers had a splendid tent—the largest on the Downs—pitched in the valley nearly opposite the Grand Stand, with the words emblazoned all around it in letters that could be seen from afar, "Whosoever shall call on the name of the Lord shall be saved."

Our representative rode down to Epsom on his Rudge bicyclette on Derby day, to see the Gospellers at work. To one who has never been there before, the sight of the masses—that is the only proper word—is a startling revelation as to the strong hold which the racing mania and the betting instinct occupy among the people. There is no need to attempt a description of the vast congregation that is gathered ready to hand for any preacher who is moved to take compassion on it. Verily, we have here all sorts and conditions of men, from scions of the reigning house down to the veriest tatterdemalion who has not rags enough to cover his nakedness. But every man of them has a heart to be got at, whether it be covered with aristocratic plush, or with very dirty linen. Moreover, they are not like those in ordinary church assemblies, who have been so saturated with Gospel appeals that these have become to them like an idle, oft-repeated tale. Truly, it is a splendid army to attack in the name of the Lord of Hosts.

Our reporter found the attacking party a comparatively small one. There was the veteran Mr. Kirkham, who has seen nine-and-twenty "Derby Days" without losing or winning a penny piece. He had a band of workers stationed at all the leading points of arrival, distributing printed Gospel messages. Right in the heart of the course there was a company of twenty City Mission men, heartily and effectively singing the Gospel to the accompaniment of harmonium, fiddles, cornet, concertina, and what not; and preaching it, too, right well. This band had been busy all along since the Sunday, either in Epsom town or on the Downs. A little further along there was the Wesleyan contingent, going at their work with a will—singing, preaching, praying, in their usual red-hot fashion. So far as our observation went, there was not an opposing voice, except the unearthly screams of the steam whistles or the brazen notes of the steam organs connected with the booths and merry-go-rounds, and the all-pervading hubbub of the fair. In the middle of the day, when the racing was at its height, the Course had to be vacated. The City Mission men went down for a while to the town of Epsom; while the Wesleyans betook themselves to the precincts of their tent, and there kept going the stream of Gospel talk and testimony. The work went on from Tuesday to Friday inclusive.

In order to find out his impressions of the week's work, our reporter had a conversation with Mr. Nix after he returned to town. The result must be compressed into a brief space.

In answer to questions, Mr. Nix said he was greatly encouraged by the result of what was an experiment, so far as he was concerned. He did not expect to be received so well by the crowds on the course. He was prepared for opposition, but encountered nothing worse than a few good-tempered jokes. One thing that astonished him was the number of people who joined in the singing of the hymns, even when unprovided with leaflets. That showed that the visitors to the races were by no means confined to the ranks of the sporting and betting fraternity. In the course of the week Mr. Nix and his friends had, of course, many interesting personal conversations. Mr. Nix has a goodly store of noteworthy incidents in connection with these talks treasured up in his memory. One carriage occupant admitted on Derby day that he had had a good time financially, but, touching his heart, he added, "I have had a bad day here." He had been listening to the Gospel message, and conscience had been at work. In one instance a gentleman from the far north said he was convinced the evangelists were right. He had been much influenced, he said, by a clergyman in his neighbourhood who went to nearly all the races, so that he thought there could be no harm in it. Now his eyes were opened, and he saw that if he would be a consistent Christian he must lead a very different life. One of the workers handed a copy of the pretty "Epsom Card" to a gentleman entering the paddock. On the back of this card was printed the words, "The blood of Jesus Christ, God's Son, cleanseth from all sin." He looked at it, and walked away towards the paddock. Presently he came back, and said, "No, I won't go in; I will go home." The worker believed he went straight away off the course to the train.

The work in the tent, especially in the evening, was also attended by many encouraging features; as a standing witness throughout the week, with its bold lettered texts, it was most invaluable. Before breaking up, some very interesting conversations took place with those engaged at the races. One cocoanut-stand proprietor called to shake hands with Mr. Nix, and say how he had appreciated what he had heard. He had been a great drunkard, but some years ago he signed the pledge, and became a Christian. He was about to retire from his business, and wished to devote the rest of his days to doing good to others. A large show proprietor, who also had a talk, said he had been trying to be a Christian, but had been greatly hindered by the drink. He was pointed to God for strength, and having signed the pledge, he knelt in prayer, and besought God earnestly to give him strength to keep it. A good number of pledges were taken in the course of the week. Of a truth, there is plenty of room for temperance work on these Downs, for the drinking that goes on, especially towards nightfall, is something terrible. If the authorities could prohibit the sale of intoxicants on the Downs, things would present a very different aspect indeed. It would hardly be possible for them to regulate the drinking that goes on in the fashionable carriages.

Mr. Nix has great plans in his head for next year at Epsom. He thinks that a determined effort should be made to carry the war into the enemy's camp on a large scale. He had a good many workers, all told, last week, and there were probably fifty more connected with the Open-air and City Missions. But all these were as a drop in the bucket, compared with the vast throngs of people that covered the Downs. Next year Mr. Nix wants to have at least five hundred able speakers and workers scattered about among the people, so as to make some sensible impression. With the experience gained last week, we may hope that if great things are attempted for God on this unique occasion, there will be corresponding results.

MILDMAY MISSION TO THE JEWS.

REV. JOHN WILKINSON and his fellow-workers have recently carried out some special efforts on behalf of the Jews of London. The first calling for notice was a service of song, given by a choir of twenty-four Christian voices, conducted by Mr. W. McCluer. The audience consisted of over 200 Jews and Jewesses, with several children, making a truly interesting gathering, in the hall below the German Church, Goulston-street, Aldgate. Mr. M. Cohen, of Kensington, was chairman, and among those who delivered addresses were Messrs. Bevan, Barnet, and Samuel Wilkinson.

On the evening of May 31, a meeting was held in the Mildmay Conference Hall, for the purpose of offering concerted praise to God for his abounding blessing on the work of the Mission during the past thirteen years. In a brief but stimulating address, Rev. J. Wilkinson gave an account of God's leadings, making special reference to the wonderful way in which he was put in possession of 100,000 New Testaments in Hebrew, of which nearly 90,000 are already in circulation among the Jews of various countries of the world. The baptism of two believing sons of Abraham lent additional interest to the proceedings. One of these converts was, about three years ago, a pronounced infidel, but becoming an inmate of the Mission Convalescent Home at Highgate, he felt the warmth of Christian love, and came under such Gospel instruction as brought him to see his lost condition, and convinced him that Jesus was Israel's Messiah and the world's Redeemer.

The annual excursion for East-end Jews took place on Tuesday, June 4, when a happy party was entained at Mildmay Park. Amusements were followed by tea, after which Mr. Gawin Kirkham explained his well-known picture "The Broad and the Narrow Ways." A more attentive audience never listened to the lecturer, and many were the prayers that went up to God that the weary wanderers of Israel's race might soon be treading the way which the Crucified has opened unto life and immortality. Later on, Mr. J. E. Mathieson presided over a meeting at which several friends delivered addresses, opening the Old Testament Scriptures, and setting forth Jesus as the Christ foretold by the prophets of old.

The children of the Mission night school were taken to Mildmay on the following day. They were made merry with games, both before and after tea. In the evening Mr. S. Wilkinson presided over a meeting, at which addresses were delivered by Rev. Mr. Shaw, of St. Paul's, Canonbury, Mr. Dressler, who is about to undertake work among the Jews of Morocco, ladies of the Deaconess House, and other friends. Blessing is confidently expected to follow these various endeavours, for the glory of God and the welfare of the descendants of his ancient people.

PORT SAID.—Will friends who send us donations for mission work at Port Said kindly state clearly for which object their gifts are intended, as confusion sometimes arises. There are the Sailors' Rest, associated with the name of Mr. W. H. Taylor, of the British and Foreign Bible Society's Depôt; and the work of visiting sailors on board ship, &c., prosecuted by Mr. Eoll.

THE SOUTHSEA CONFERENCE.

THE annual Christian Conference, convened by Rev. F. Baldey, vicar of Southsea, took place on Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday of last week. There was a goodly company of speakers, and, in spite of the intense heat, St. Simon's schoolroom was crowded with eager listeners. The plan was followed this year of leaving the speakers free to choose their own subjects without previous arrangement; this had the effect of giving great variety and fulness to the messages delivered.

The addresses of Tuesday morning were given by Dr. S. C. Morgan, on Ruth, Ittai, and the woman with the alabaster box, as examples of love, loyalty, and surrender; by Mr. Graves Walker, on God's hunger for his people's worship; and by Dr. White on Resurrection Life preceded by death to sin, a very solemn and searching word. The evening was occupied by Mr. Thwaites, Mr. Finlay Gibson, and Mr. Sturdy, the two former principally devoting their remarks to the unsaved who were likely to be present in so large a gathering, and Mr. Sturdy dealing with sanctification.

The morning of the second day was occupied by an admirable address from Rev. J. Lindsay Young, on "Preserved for Christ Jesus" (Jude 1, R.V.), followed by Mr. Chapman, on "Jesus Crowned," and Rev. J. B. Figgis, on the need for Divine Fire, as well as the altar and the wood. In the evening, Rev. J. J. Luce spoke well on the words: "Go, stand, speak"; Rev. J. Hudson Taylor gave a lovely picture of Christ, the model Missionary, dealing with the woman at the well; and Mr. Eugene Stock gave an interesting description of the difference between a disciple and an apostle, and the occasions when these words were severally used of the same persons. On Thursday the meetings were addressed by Lord Radstock, Mr. Finlay Gibson, Mr. Storrs, and others, when hindrances were dealt with.

There was a happy time of communion with the Lord at the early prayer-meeting each day, and also at 10.15, on two mornings; there being a celebration of the Lord's Supper, on Thursday, in Simon's Church instead. Tuesday and Thursday afternoons were partly occupied by Bible-readings, and partly devoted to accounts of Christian work, as also the social hour after the Conference dinner. These were chiefly given by ladies. Wednesday was pre-eminently the missionary day, and much interest was felt in the fact that Miss Edith Baldey, younger daughter of the Vicar of Southsea, is about to sail very shortly for Frere Town, East Africa; and Mr. Knott, one of the curates of the parish, for a mission in Central India, both under the direction of the C.M.S. The words spoken by each will not soon be forgotten, especially the earnest exhortation from Mr. Baldey's young daughter, who entreated her large audience, among whom were many personal friends and former scholars, to enthrone Christ in their hearts.

A goodly number assembled for the praise meeting on Friday morning, and there was indeed a "joyful sound" among them. The feelings of many hearts found utterance in passages of Scripture, expressive of the special blessing each had received; and at the close of what was perhaps the most hallowed hour of the Conference, a very practical expression of thanksgiving was shown, offerings to the amount of about £140 being cheerfully contributed towards clearing off the debt upon the new schoolroom; and great gladness was felt by all.

MR. DANIEL MATTHEWS, late of the Maloga Aboriginal Mission, writes to us en route for England from Australia by the s.s. Victoria. He expects to arrive with his party in London about the time this issue is published. The passage, he says, has been a pleasant one, and they have been able to witness for God on board the ship.

A MISSIONARY BREAKFAST.

THE annual missionary breakfast on Whit Monday was held in the Powis Hall, Bayswater, under the presidency of Mr. Frank White, the pastor of the Talbot Tabernacle. The weather was most unpropitious, but there was no lack of guests. The speakers were Mr. Hudson Taylor, who pleaded with all his wonted earnestness for China and its crying needs; Pastor Lecoat, who in broken but expressive English, told of his difficulties and triumphs in priest-ridden Bretagne; Dr. H. G. Guinness, whose strong and impassioned appeal for heathendom in general, and Africa in particular, will not soon be forgotten; and finally, Miss de Broen, fresh from her good work in Paris, whose unexpected presence seemed peculiarly acceptable, Always animated and interesting, her touching allusion to female devotedness as recorded in the Gospels, as also her persuasive entreaties for more workers, must have gone home to many a heart.

The Chairman, in the course of his very brief address, alluded to his recent visit to Algeria in search of health, paid a warm tribute to the worth of the North Africa Mission, and called for the sympathy and prayer of all present for its devoted missionaries. The meeting throughout was well calculated to fan into a flame the zeal of the people of God. Why should not all our evangelical churches follow the example of the church in the Talbot Tabernacle, and arrange for an annual missionary breakfast?

OBITUARY.

MR. THOMAS WALES, SEN.

THIS earnest worker (formerly of the Evangelisation Society) four years and a half ago went to Australia, and took the superintendence of an Aboriginal Mission at Warangesda. We regret to record his decease, which took place on April 2, at the comparatively early age of fifty-five.

FINSBURY PARK. — The London County Council has allowed preaching services to be held in this Park, at a point midway between the bandstand and the gymnasium. The Board of Works in former years refused to permit such services.

INDIGENT BLIND VISITING SOCIETY.—The annual meeting of this Society, for providing religious instruction and relief to the indigent blind, was held last week at 7, Connaught-place, Hyde-park, the town residence of Mr. T. A. Denny, who presided, in the absence, through indisposition, of Lord Ebury. The number of persons under visitation is 949, the secretary of the Society, Mr. W. C. Lester, and the twelve visitors themselves being blind. The number attending the day classes is 396, and there is a temperance society in East London with 777 members, besides a strong Band of Hope among the children. Lord Middleton, Revs. Prebendary Whittington, Dr. Donald Fraser, H. B. Bromby, and W. Evans Hurndall spoke in support of the Society's beneficent work.

THE WORKING-MEN'S MISSION, COLLINGWOOD-STREET, NEW CUT, S.E., superintended by the Brothers T. and J. Young, celebrated its twelfth anniversary last week, when Mr. Spurgeon, who has been president of the Mission from its foundation, preached to a large congregation from 1 Chron. xxviii. 9, "If thou seek Him, He will be found of thee." Among those who took part in the proceedings were Messrs. R. K. Causton, M.P., and T. A. Denny, and Rev. B. Senior. It was announced that, at the suggestion of Mr. Spurgeon, a project has been set on foot towards procuring new premises in view of the expiry, some years hence, of the lease of the present Mission premises. Several sums of money were promised in support of the scheme. The agencies of the Mission are numerous. To a saddening extent the workers have the poor with them, so last year they supplied seventy thousand meals to the destitute and unemployed, young and old. Over 650 Gospel and prayer-meetings were held in the Mission-hall and lodging-houses, and in the open air. The children are carefully looked after, and tract distribution is carried on with vigour.

INCIDENTS BY THE WAY.

"As you return home, friend, alone, look up to the Lord Jesus and yield yourself up wholly to Him. He waits to receive you." So we addressed a poor woman away in the Midlands, in a very thinly populated district, last summer. Some years before, the listener, known to one of our mission party, had professedly, with several others, come out on the Lord's side. In a few days bereavement left her an orphan, and almost friendless, and on a previous visit to that district a most unexpected recognition had taken place, her home being changed from the crowded city to a very lonely cottage.

The words spoken at this first visit had lingered in the memory, and at the second meeting, by the wayside, in response to our appeal she with great simplicity, remembering how loss of all Christian association had estranged her from the Lord, said, "I will," and we left her rejoicing in the belief that the Father had received the wanderer home.

On one occasion we briefly gave the Master's invitation "Come unto Me" at a cottage door, emphasising the fact that to an invitation we must say yes or no. The prompt answer was, "I cannot say no to Him." One Lord's Day evening we passed through a village, somewhat late, simply proclaiming, as the pony walked through, the Gospel invitation, "Come." Some weeks afterwards, one of the party met a young man who simply heard the Lord say "Come," and he could not forget it.

One showery summer day, in 1888, and there were many, we were somewhat tired, and about 4 p.m. tried in vain to get hot water, and the loan of a cottage for half an hour. As a last resource, we crossed a field to a cottage, and found the resident willing and anxious to receive us. She had spent money freely in buying books, in the reading of which she hoped to find light; we had also sought spiritual help in the village in vain. The chat at tea that day was not soon forgotten. "I have been asking the Lord," she said, "for some time to send someone to tell me the way of life." The little prayer-meeting afterwards was very happy. She received the kingdom of God apparently as a little child, and answering her from the Scriptures as to any sins in the future, we told her that, like the pebbles in the stream behind her house were cleansed by the flowing waters, so, "if we walk in the light as He is in the light, the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin." The Spirit Divine seemed to chase away every cloud, and we left her rejoicing

These incidents are recorded with the hope that others will go into the highways this summer. One fact strikes us very forcibly. Gospel preachers seem still to go where others have been, instead of looking for more needy districts.

For instance, the Malvern range of hills seems covered with Gospel light, but if the dwellers there would patiently visit the Terne Valley, or traverse the level tract of country south to south-west, they would probably be greatly surprised at the lack of Gospel preaching. In Oxfordshire we find new places of worship opened in several villages that were already over full, while a few miles away the greatest spiritual destitution prevails.

SOUTHSEA MISSION.—The borough authorities having granted permission to pitch the Gospel tent on Southsea Common, the summer's work has been commenced. In years gone by much blessing has attended the mission effort, and it is hoped that, with faithful preaching and prayerful solicitude for those who hear, this season's experience will be in a high degree encouraging. Further particulars of the endeavour, in which the Gospel is presented to the people without charge or collections, may be had from Mr. John Denning, Ebenezer, Saxe-Weimar-road, Southsea.

XXXIV.—THE ESTABLISHED HEART.

HEBREWS xiii. 9.

IT is a good thing to have an established heart. With too many of us the inner life is variable and fickle. Sometimes we have days of deep religious earnestness, when it seems impossible for us to spend too long a time in prayer and fellowship with God. The air is so clear that we can see across the waters of the dividing sea, to the very outlines of the heavenly coasts. But a very little will mar our peace, and bring a veil of mist over our souls, to enwrap us perhaps for long weeks. Oh, for an established heart!

Now there is one thing which will not bring about this blessed state of establishment. And that is indicated by the expression, "meats"; which stands for the Ritualism of the Jewish law. There is ever a tendency in the human heart towards a religion of rites. It is so much easier to observe the prescriptions of an outward ceremonial than to brace the soul to faith, and love, and spiritual worship. Set the devotee a round of external observance, it matters little how rigorous and searching your demands, and the whole will be punctually and slavishly performed, with a secret sense of satisfaction in being thus permitted to do something towards procuring acceptance and favour with God.

There is a great increase of ritualistic observance amongst us. We behold with astonishment the set of our times towards genuflexions, the austerities of Lent, the careful observance of prolonged and incessant services, and all the demands of a severe ritual. People who give no evidence in their character or behaviour of real religion are most punctilious in these outward religious rites. Young men will salve their consciences for a day of Sabbath-breaking by an early celebration. In many cases these things are revivals of ancient Babylonish customs, passed into the professing Church in the worst and darkest days of its history. But their revival points to the strong religious yearnings of human nature, and the fascination which is exerted by outward rites in the stead of inward realities.

But "meats" can never establish the inner life. The most ardent ritualist must confess to the sense of inward dissatisfaction and unrest, as the soul is condemned to pace continually the arid desert of a weary formalism, where it comes not to the green pastures or the waters of rest. "They have not profited them that have been occupied therein."

Another obstruction to an established heart arises from the curiosity which is ever running after divers and strange doctrines. In all ages of the Church, men have caught up single aspects of truth, distorting them out of the harmony of the Gospel, and carrying them into exaggerated and dangerous excess; and directly any one truth is viewed out of its place in the equilibrium of the Gospel, it becomes a heresy, leading souls astray with the deceitfulness of the false lights that wreckers wave along the beach. And when once we begin to follow the vagaries and notions of human teachers, apart from the teaching of the Spirit of God, we get into an unsettled, restless condition, which is the very antipodes to the established heart.

There is only one foundation which never rocks, one condition which never alters. "It is good that the heart be established with grace." Primarily, of course, the established heart is the gift of God. "He which stablisheth us with you in Christ is God." "The Lord shall establish thee an holy people unto Himself." "The God of all grace make you perfect, stablish, strengthen, settle you." We need therefore to pray to Him to give us the heart established in grace. But there are certain conditions also indicated in this context, with which we do well to comply.

I. WE MUST FEED ON CHRIST.—The very denial of the tenth verse proves that there is an altar whereof we have a right to eat. Not the Jews only, but Christians also, lay stress on eating; but, ah! how different the food which forms their diet. In the case of that ancient system out of which these Hebrew Christians had just emerged, the priests ate a considerable portion of the sacrifices, which the people offered on the altar of God. This was the means of their subsistence. In consideration of their being set apart wholly to the Divine service, and having no inheritance in the land, "they lived by the altar." But we, who are priests by a diviner right, have left behind us the Tabernacle, with its ritual and sacrifices, and cannot feed on these outward meats without betraying the spirituality of the holy religion we profess.

Our altar is the Cross. Our sacrifice is the dying Saviour. Our food is to eat his flesh. "This is the bread which cometh down from heaven, that a man may eat thereof, and not die." "The bread is my flesh, which I will give for the life of the world."

Eating consists of three processes: apprehension, mastication, and assimilation; and each of these has its spiritual counterpart in that feeding upon Christ which is the very life of our life. We, too, must apprehend Him, by the careful reading of the Word of God. The Word is in the words. His words are spirit and life. We need not be always reading them any more than we should be always eating. But just as a good meal will go on nourishing us long after we have taken it, and indeed when we have ceased to think about it, so a prolonged prayerful study of the Word of God will nourish our souls for long afterwards.

We, too, must fulfil the second part of the process of eating by meditating long and thoughtfully on all that is revealed to us in the Word of the person and work of the Lord Jesus. It is only by allowing our heart and mind to dwell musingly on these sacred themes that they become so real as to nourish us. Better read less and meditate more, than read much and meditate little.

We too must assimilate Christ, until He becomes part of our very being, and we begin to live, yet not we, because Christ lives in us, and has become our very life. Our Lord told his disciples that He lived by the Father, and said that, if they desired to live in the same dependent state on Himself, they must "eat Him" (John vi. 57). In Christ's own case his being had reached such a pitch of union with his Father's that to see or hear or know Him was to see and hear and know God. And if we would only spend more time alone with Him in prayerful, loving fellowship, a great change would pass over us also, and we should be transformed into his likeness in successive stages of glory upon glory.

At regular intervals we meet around the table of the Lord to eat the bread and drink the wine. But our feeding on Him ought to be as frequent as our daily ordinary meals. Why should we feed the spirit less than we do the body? Alas! how we pamper the latter, and starve the former, until we get past the sense of desire. We spoil our appetite by feeding it with the cloying sweetmeats and morsels of sense. We are content to live as parasites on the juices of others, instead of acquiring nourishment at first hand for ourselves. What wonder that we are carried about by every wind of doctrine, and lack the established heart. And perhaps there would be nothing better for the whole of us Christian people than a revival of Bible study, a fresh consecration of the morning hour, a regular and systematic maintenance of seasons of prolonged fellowship with our Master and Lord.

II. IF WE WOULD FEED ON CHRIST, WE MUST GO WITHOUT THE CAMP.—In the solemn ritual of the great Day of Atonement it was ordained that the bodies of all the victims, which had suffered death as sin offerings, and of which the blood had been sprinkled before the mercy-seat, should be burned without the camp (Lev. xvi. 27). And in this mysterious specification, two truths were probably symbolised: first, that in the fulness of times, Jesus, the true sin-offering of the world, would suffer outside the city gate; and, secondly, that men must leave the principles and rites of earthly systems behind them, if they would realise all the blessedness of acceptance with God through the sacrifice of Christ.

If, then, we would have Jesus as our food, our joy, our life, we must not expect to find Him in the camps which have been pitched by men of this world. We must go forth from all such; from the camp of the world's religiousness equally as from that of its sensuality; from the tents of its formalism and ritualism, as well as from those of its vanity.

The policy of going forth without the camp is the only safe course for ourselves, as it is the only helpful one for the world itself. There are plenty who argue that the wisest policy is to stop within the camp, seeking to elevate its morals. They do not realise that, if we adopt their advice, we must remain there alone, for our Lord has already gone. It is surely unbefitting that we should find a home where He is expelled. What is there in us which makes us so welcome, when our Master was cast out to the fate of the lowest criminals? Besides, it will not be long before we discover that, instead of our influencing the camp for good, the atmosphere of the camp will infect us with its evil. Instead of our levelling it up, it will level us down.

The only principle of moving the world is to imitate Archimedes in getting a point without it. All the men who have left a mark in the elevation of their times have been compelled to join the pilgrim host which is constantly passing through the city gates, and taking up its stand by the cross on which Jesus died. Looking back on that memorable spot, we seem to see it thronged with the Apostles, martyrs, reformers, and prophets of every age, who invite us to join them. It remains with us to say whether we will linger amid the luxury and fascinations which allure us to the camp, or whether we will dare to take up our cross, and follow our Master along the Via Dolorosa, bearing his reproach. Ah! young hearts, secret disciples, halters between two opinions, the issue of such a choice cannot be doubtful! With the cry, Deus vult, you will join this new crusade, and take your stand with Jesus, at the trysting-place of his cross.

III. If we go outside the camp, we must bear his reproach.—It is related of the good Charles Simeon, of Cambridge, that, at the commencement of his career as an evangelical clergyman at Cambridge, he encountered such virulent abuse and opposition that his spirit seemed on the point of being crushed. Turning to the Word of God for direction and encouragement, his eye lighted on the following passage: "As they came out they found a man of Cyrene, Simon by name; him they compelled to bear his cross." The similarity of the name to his own arrested him, and he was moved to new courage with the thought of his oneness with the sufferings of Jesus. So is it with us all. If we are reproached for the name of Jesus, happy are we, and we should rejoice, inasmuch as we are partakers of Christ's sufferings, that, when his glory is revealed, we also may be glad with exceeding joy.

How marvellous is it to learn the closeness of the bonds by which we are bound to the saints of the past. When we are reproached for being Christians, we know something of what Moses felt when taunted in the royal palace of Egypt with his Hebrew origin, but "he esteemed the reproach of Christ greater riches than all the treasures of Egypt, because he had respect unto the recompence of reward."

IV. But whilst bearing Christ's reproach, we shall find the only continuing city.—It is very remarkable that, as we tear ourselves away from the gate of the city, and say farewell to what had seemed to be a symbol of the most enduring fabrics of earthly permanence, we are really passing out of the transient and unreal to become citizens of the only enduring and continuing city.

The greatest cities of human greatness have not continued. Babylon, Nineveh, Thebes, the mighty cities of Mexico, all have passed. Buried in mounds, on which grass grows luxuriantly; while wild beasts creep through the mouldering relics of the past. But amid all, there is arising from age to age a permanent structure, an enduring city, a confederation which gathers round the unchanging Saviour, and has in it no elements of decay. And ere long this city which hath foundations shall become evident to the eyes of men, as they behold the holy city, New Jerusalem, descend out of heaven from God.

THE PARIS EXHIBITION.—Strong efforts are being made to present the Gospel to the multitudes now visiting Paris. The Committee of the Religious Tract Society are earnestly co-operating. They have contributed to the cost of the hall in the Avenue Rapp, where evangelistic services will be held, and have provided large supplies of tracts to be given away here by the friends of the Paris Tract Society, the Depôt Central, the McAll Mission, and others. The Committee could do much more were help forthcoming to meet the needs of this peculiarly opportune moment.

MISSIONARY LITERATURE—The Religious Tract Society has recently entered upon publication work in some new languages. Help has been given to Bishop Crowther, of the Niger, for printing in the Idzo language, one of the numerous dialects spoken on the Niger. The Society had already aided the Bishop for the natives speaking the Ibo, Houssa, Nupé, and the Yoruba dialects. Primers, catechisms, and elementary schoolbooks have been prepared at the missionary press in Bonny. For another part of Western Africa a beginning has been made in the Bunda, or Angolese, Mr. Heli Chatelain having prepared the letterpress to illustrate some simple books on the Lord's Prayer and the Prodigal Son. The Committee have just received a specimen copy of the "Pilgrim's Progress" in the Amoy colloquial, making the eighty-third language in which John Bunyan's book has been issued.

MAJOR WHITTLE IN SCOTLAND.

The last week of the evangelist in the Highlands was spent as follows:—Dingwall on Tuesday, when there were many inquirers. At Nairn on Wednesday there was a large open-air meeting on the beach, the Major speaking. The word was with great power. A large meeting was held at 8 p.m. in Mr. Lee's church, which was addressed by Major Whittle and Dr. Moxey.

Next day (Thursday) was spent by the Major at Mrs. Brodie's beautiful home at Lentran, where he held a meeting in the hall she has recently built. The Holy Spirit carried home the message to many hearts. Several of the wealthy families in the neighbourhood were present, and received blessing. On the same evening Dr. Moxey preached at Forres, and next afternoon gave an illustrated lecture to children. Many little ones stayed to the after-meeting. In the evening, the Major addressed a large assemblage, and the workers had the joy of finding fruit from all three meetings.

Last Saturday a fresh mission commenced in Hawick, where the Major's work was signally owned of God eight years ago. After Hawick, Major Whittle has been asked to take part in the Mildmay Conference, and this will be followed by a fortnight's mission in Lord Radstock's Hall in Belgravia. Dr. and Mrs. Moxey accompany the Major, and Christian friends in London are cordially invited to help in the work.

On Sunday week, Dr. Pentecost called on Major Whittle, who was among the audience in Free St. Andrew's Church, Edinburgh, to engage in prayer. Those present will not soon forget the earnest petitions he poured out to God on behalf of his native land, in presence of the terrible floods in West Pennsylvania, with its thousands drowned and its tens of thousands mourning. Since the Major's mission in Edinburgh, a meeting has been held every Tuesday night, for converts and inquirers. Dr. Moxey addressed the gathering on Tuesday week. The hall was crowded, and a fine spirit was evident among the young converts.

"BETHESDA: A MISSING LINK."—In a booklet bearing this title Mr. L. K. Shaw gives an account of a Home for Crippled and Incurable Children, just established in George-street, Cheetham-hill, Manchester, under the management of the Committee of the well-known Boys' and Girls' Refuge, Strangeways. Answering a very pressing need, this institution indeed supplies a missing link in the chain of charities with which Mr. Shaw's name is so intimately and actively associated. It is believed that there is no similar Home in the North of England. In addition to good nursing and loving care, Bethesda will afford its poor little inmates the appliances that may be necessary for successful treatment. The accommodation is for twenty boys and twenty girls. About £1500 remains to be raised to clear the undertaking from debt.

A CHINA MISSION MAIL BAG.—Mrs. M. F. Barbour has issued, in the form of an occasional paper (A. Stevenson, Edinburgh. 3d.), several letters from missionaries of the English Presbyterian Church in China. After affording us an opportunity of entering into the rejoicings and difficulties of the workers abroad, Mrs. Barbour, who has long and gladly helped to "hold the ropes" at home, contributes a brief review of the past. She says: "There has been no pause in the progress of this work these forty-two years. Each mail has brought report of some baptism. The boys who gave their hearts to Christ have gone from school to the little colleges at Amoy and Swatow. From college they have gone to preach at the missionary's side. They have then been placed at work alone with a knot of converts on the hill-side among the swarms of village heathen." In some closing sentences we read that of late the labourers have outrun the funds available for their support. Collecting cards on behalf of the work may be had from Mrs. Barbour, whose address is 11, George-square, Edinburgh.

MY PRAYER.

By Rev. M. G. PEARSE.

I kneel to praie
But know not what to saie;
I cannot tell
What shall be ill or well;
But, as I look
Into thy face or Book,
I see a love
From which I cannot move,
And learne to rest
In this: Thy will is beste.

So would I praie:
Onlie have thine own waie
In everie thing,
My all-wise Lord and King:
Grant me but grace
In all to give Thee place;
This libertie
Alone I ask of Thee;
This onlie gift,
Have thy way perfectlie.

THE "ONE TUN" MISSION.

Mrs. Barker Harrison, who founded the "One Tun" Ragged Schools and Mission, after being engaged in service for Christ, amongst the poor of Westminster for thirty-one years, was called to her rest a few months since. At the time of her death, there was some fear that the work would have to be given up; but, mainly through the help given by the Baroness Burdett-Coutts, who has from the first taken a deep interest in the Mission, it has been kept on, and it is hoped that workers will be raised up still to continue it, with the aid of the Lord's stewards.

The work is many sided, and at the thirty-second annual meeting held last week, Mr. J. Payne, the superintendent, gave some interesting details concerning the various methods employed by the workers to impart to old and young within their reach the truth which is able to make wise unto salvation. The Bible-class conducted on Sunday afternoons by the blind Scripture-reader, Mr. E. Bayliss, is attended by large numbers of men from the lodging-houses which abound in the neighbourhood, and many of these casuals have expressed their thankfulness for being able to get a couple of hours of such quiet once during the week, which they say is like a heaven upon earth.

The Baroness Burdett-Coutts was on the platform at the meeting, and, besides distributing the prizes to former scholars, who are now out in life and have kept their situations above twelve months, spoke a few kindly words to the children and their friends present. Lord Radstock, Revs. Herbert Rowsell, and G. S. Whitlock, Messrs. A. J. Woodhouse, R. J. Curtis, F. Rose, and C. Wakely, also addressed the company, who were delighted during the evening with the singing of a number of the younger children belonging to the schools.

A NOVEL SUNDAY-SCHOOL GATHERING.—On Monday evening, May 27, the teachers of Melbourne Hall Sunday-school, Leicester, were invited—quite unexpectedly—by the parents of the scholars to take tea, and spend the evening with them. This was heartily responded to by the teachers, who thoroughly enjoyed the ample provision made for them, and still more appreciated the kind thought which prompted it. The tables were prettily decorated with plants, &c. The parents themselves waited at the tea. Afterwards a meeting was held, presided over by Rev. C. B. Sawday, and addressed by parents and teachers. Several suggestions were made, helpful to Sunday-school work, and it was felt that a profitable and enjoyable evening had been spent, which might be imitated with advantage in other towns.

Demoniacal Possession.

[The following article, which expresses our own views, is contributed by Rev. Dr. S. C. Bartlett to the New York Independent.]

(1) THE Evangelists steadily and abundantly distinguished between demoniacal possession and all forms of mere disease—although sometimes both occurred together. Thus, Matt. viii. 16, He "cast out the spirits, and healed all that were sick"; Mark i. 32, "brought all that were diseased and them that were possessed with devils"; Luke iv. 40, 41. Again, Matt. iv. 24, "brought unto Him all sick people that were taken with divers diseases and torments, and those which were possessed with devils, and those which were lunatick, and those that had the palsy." Here the "lunatics" (selēniazomenous) are specially distinguished from the demoniacs. "Which had been healed of evil spirits and infirmities" (Luke viii. 2). In Matt. ix. 32, 33, the possession is kept distinct from the dumbness with which the demoniac was afflicted, which was also cured. Christ "called his twelve disciples together, and gave them power and authority over all devils, and to cure all diseases" (Luke ix. 1). The same statement is found in Matt. x. 1. (In all these instances the word "devils" represents the Greek daimonia, demons or evil spirits, always distinguished from the one diabolos, or prince of evil spirits.) In Mark vi. 12, "they cast out many devils, and anointed with oil many that were sick, healing them." So also Mark iii. 15; Luke vi. 17, 18. It is the standing distinction.

(2) The Evangelists make this uniform distinction still more definite and emphatic by their constant assertions that the actions and utterances in demoniacal possessions were those of the evil spirits, the daimonia. They refer to them as actual agents in the cases. Such statements are almost too abundant to call for quotations—"The unclean spirits cried, saying," &c. (Mark iii. 11); "The devils besought Him" (Matt. viii. 31); "When the unclean spirit had torn him [the man], and cried with a loud voice, he came out of him" (Mark i. 26; Luke iv. 35). In this instance, while Luke says "the man had an unclean spirit," Mark strikingly describes him as being "in" (en) an unclean spirit, as though enveloped by it, completely under its dominion. We read again: "The spirit tare him," "threw him down and tare him," "cried, rent him sore, and came out of him," (Mark ix. 20—26; Luke ix. 42). "Mary Magdalene out of whom went seven devils" (Luke viii. 2). "And he [the spirit] came out the same hour" (Acts xvi. 16). "And the evil spirit answered and said," &c. (Acts xix. 15).

If it be said, as it is, that these disciples then

of their contemporaries, it must be remembered that their narratives were written near thirty years later, and as many years after the promise that the Comforter should "guide them into all [the] truth" (John xvi. 14), and after the recorded fulfilment of "the promise of the Holy Spirit." (Acts ii. 33.)

(3) Some of the facts recorded are not compatible with any theory of mere disease, bodily or mental. One of these insuperable facts is found in the case recorded by three Evangelists (Matt. viii., Mark v., Luke viii.), where the devils asked and received from Christ permission to pass from the demoniac into the herd of swine, and are declared to have done so, with the results there set forth. It is said that the elder Hosea Ballou on one occasion, when in a country town of New England, had devoted a whole discourse to showing that there was no devil nor evil spirit (daimonion); after returning to his host's, he was asked by a bright young farmer: "Mr. Ballou, how do you get along with the devils going into the herd of swine?" Mr. Ballou replied (so a minister of his own denomination has reported it): "I was always sorry they put that in." Well he might be; it is decisive.

Another recorded fact which the disease theory will not explain is the habitual assertion of Christ's divinity by these spirits, and the Saviour's recognition of the fact, while not only the multitude, but his own disciples failed as yet so to know and characterise Him. Thus (Mark i. 24; Luke iv. 34): "I know Thee who Thou art, the Holy One of God." "Thou art the Son of God" (Mark iii. 11). "What have we to do with Thee, Jesus, Thou Son of God? Art Thou come to torment us before the time?" (Matt. viii. 29). So in the two parallel passages: "And devils also came out of many, crying out and saying, Thou art the Christ of God" (Luke iv. 41). "And unclean spirits, when they saw Him, cried, saying, Thou art the Son of God" (Mark iii. 11). That this was a genuine recognition, so understood by the Saviour, appears in this same passage; for "He straitly charged them that they should not make Him known." So, very distinctly (Mark i. 34), He "suffered not the devils to speak, because they knew Him"; and (Luke iv. 41), "He, rebuking them, suffered them not to speak, for they knew that He was Christ." Epilepsy, lunacy, insanity, do not meet these several facts of record.

Alford has also well called attention to indicated in some of these cases, the utterance seeming to come now from the man and now from the evil spirit—a point on which I will not enlarge. The narrative in Acts xix. 13—17, presents the distinction between "the evil spirit" who said, "Jesus I know, and Paul I know," and "the man in whom the evil spirit was," who leaped on the sons of Sceva and overcame them.

This point is still further made clear by the recorded conversations which in several of these cases are affirmed to have been held with the evil spirits, not with the man thus possessed. (See Mark v. 1—21, and parallel passages.)

(4) The Saviour habitually and constantly treated cases of demoniacal possession as realities; not as mere diseases, but as the utterances and acts of evil spirits in the man, but distinct from him. He is declared to have gone about "casting out devils" abundantly. All his acts and utterances on these occasions so fully recognise the fact, with never an intimation to the contrary, that if it were not a fact, it would certainly be difficult to acquit Him of ignorance or the deliberate fostering of delusion. He is not only described as "charging," "rebuking," "commanding," and "casting out" the unclean spirits, but his direct addresses to them are recorded. Thus (Mark v. 8—12; Matt. viii. 29—32), "He [Jesus] said unto him, Come out of the man, thou unclean spirit. And He asked him, What is thy name. And he [the unclean spirit] answered, My name is Legion: for we are many. And all the devils besought Him, saying, If Thou cast us out, suffer us to go away into the herd of swine. And He said unto them, Go." Again (Mark i. 26; Luke iv. 34), He directly addressed the unclean spirit: "Hold thy peace and come out of him." Was this all a show and a pretence on his part? He went farther yet, for He deliberately argued with the Jews on the assumption of the reality of demoniacal possession, affirming that his casting out devils by the Spirit of God proved that the kingdom of God had come unto them (Matt. xii. 23—27; Luke xi. 17—23). Not only did his enemies, the Pharisees, recognise the claim as actually made by Him, but the admiring multitude also said (Luke iv. 36), "What a word is this! for with authority and power He commandeth the unclean spirits, and they come out." By what arguments could we justify or defend the constant and active ministering to such a delusion—if it were a delusion?

It does not at all meet the facts of the case to say that this was the common belief of the time and that the Saviour did not deem it important to spend his strength in correcting it. For he did not simply leave it in silence even, but openly and actively, both in word and in deed,

GAVE DIRECT COUNTENANCE TO THE BELIEF.

Nor can it be alleged that He still had what might be called an esoteric view, a different doctrine for his disciples and Himself—if we could reconcile such a position with his character. For, furthermore,

(5) The Saviour, in his personal and private relations to his chosen disciples, still advanced the doctrine of demoniacal possession. Here, at last, in dealing with his commissioned Apostles, the authorised and trained teachers of his Gospel, was the opportunity to disabuse them of any gross delusion. Did He do so in regard to this belief? On the contrary, He confirmed them in it, both in official instructions and in private conference.

When, immediately after the transfiguration, He "rebuked" and cast out "the unclean spirit" that the disciples were unable to eject, after He had come into the house "his disciples asked Him privately, Why could not we cast him out?" Instead of correcting their notions in this confidential interview, he confirmed them by the emphatic remark, "This kind can come forth by nothing but prayer." (Mark ix. 20). When the seventy returned and said to Him with joy, "Lord, even the devils are subject to us through thy name," his answer was to the same effect, "I beheld Satan as lightning fall from heaven." We are further informed (Mark iii. 14, 15), that in the solemn act of calling and appointing the Apostles "He ordained twelve that they should be with Him, and that He might send them forth to preach and to cast out devils." Was He trifling with his chosen messengers?

For this accumulation of reasons, several of which would be sufficient alone, I do not feel at liberty to reject or question the reality of demoniacal possession in the time of our Lord. If I were at liberty to reject that teaching both of Christ and his authorised messengers, I should not know where to stop with my questionings and denials. The difficulty does not seem to me to lie in the interpretation or criticism, for I hardly see how it could be much clearer.

This being the case, one is no more bound to remove all difficulties from the recorded fact, than in many other matters in which whether difficult or not.

Still, in closing this brief exposition, it may not be amiss barely to notice two questions. First, how should it be that this condition of things should have been so common then, but wholly wanting now? I find no difficulty in supposing demoniacal possessions to have been permitted at that special time and country for a special purpose connected with the manifestation of Christ. He came, as is abundantly asserted, to "destroy the works of the devil" (1 John iii. 8), to bruise the serpent's head, to overthrow the kingdom of Satan; and these castings out of evil spirits were the visible token and assurance of the final result of the great conflict; just as the outward and visible restoration of the palsied man was made by Christ the proof of his inward healing, the invisible forgiveness of sins. The Saviour virtually implied this in his argument with the Jews when they charged Him with being in league with Beelzebub.

Second, how can such demoniacal control of a human being be reconciled with moral government? As well, perhaps, as the terrible dominion that certain forms of vice (e.g., intemperance) are suffered to gain over their helpless victim. It is a voluntary surrender, become at last nearly, if not quite, involuntary. So in the nervous diseases which in many cases are indicated as connected with the "possession," we may possibly see indications of a past career of vice and sin, a voluntary surrender to the powers of darkness, pursued till the body was hopelessly wrecked and the soul hopelessly enthralled. This supposition is but a theory, but it would offer a more or less satisfactory solution.

FROM SOUTHERN SEAS.

THE writer of the following interesting notes receives a copy of this paper through the kindness of a home reader. He writes to express his thanks, and adds:—

"The blessed work in which we are engaged in this group of islands is still in a fairly prosperous state. Occasionally we have specially encouraging tokens of the Master's presence with us, and evidences that we do not labour in vain. One such was mentioned to me some while ago by one of our native catechists. He had been called to see a foreign native who was very ill—dying, in fact—and who was entirely ignorant of Christianity. The Christian teacher read and explained to him the precious invitations of Jesus, and urged him to accept the Saviour, who was able and willing then to receive him, and speak peace and pardon. Eventually he had the satisfaction of leading the man to the Cross. The wanderer from the distant island home was now happy in the prospect of soon reaching the land where there are no strangers—the land whose inhabitant shall not say 'I am sick.' Raising himself on his mat, his eyes brim-full of tears, he exclaimed, 'I have found Jesus. I am going to the land of rest. I see the land; to-day I shall enter the rest of heaven.'

"This took place in a mountain district of Fiji, whose people twenty-three or twenty-four years ago were all heathen, and who, when I visited them then for the purpose of urging them to embrace Christianity, plotted to kill me and my companions. One of the chiefs, whom I have since baptized, pointed out to me last September the spot on which I sat facing another chief, who had his clubs at hand awaiting the signal which was to be given for the attack to be made. He who was to give the signal since stated to our teachers that he tried to give the signal but could not, and he now knows that he had been restrained by the hand of God. In the village where we were to have been killed and eaten I have preached many times since, and baptized scores of its people. Last September I baptized thirty-four adults there after preaching in their large and beautiful church, built entirely at their own expense. With grateful hearts we may well exclaim, 'What hath God wrought!'"

☞ THE NORTHFIELD CONFERENCE.—The correspondent who sent to us an announcement of this Conference in August, writes to say that he was mistaken in stating it would extend over the whole month; it will be held as usual during ten days.

LONDON FEMALE PENITENTIARY.—The eighty-second annual meeting of this Christian agency for the reclamation of betrayed and fallen women, which has recently been affiliated to the Guardian Society, was held at the Training Home, 191, High-street, Stoke Newington, N., last week. The secretary, Mr. W. E. Page, reported that during the year ninety-one fresh cases were admitted to the Homes, and fifty-eight, after having received the usual industrial training, in most instances extending to eighteen months, have been placed in comfortable situations or restored to their friends. The present number of inmates of the two Homes is seventy-five; accommodation is provided for one hundred, but, were the necessary funds forthcoming, room could be found for fifty more. The meeting was addressed by Mr. F. A. Bevan (who presided), Revs. Dr. Edmond, Z. T. Dowen, and W. D. Walters; Mr. J. D. Lamont and Dr. Reilly.

BIBLE TRAINING IN CHICAGO.

AN INTERVIEW WITH MR. MOODY.

QUESTION.—We see by reports that you are to return to Chicago in September?

Answer.—Yes; I expect to come back then.

Q.—What do you propose to do at that time?

A.—We shall start off with a ten days' Convention. This will be followed up by meetings similar to those we have just had.

Q.—Whom do you intend to have as instructors?

A.—The instructors are not all of them fully engaged; but I expect Dr. Monro Gibson will be at the Convention in September. He will also be with me in Northfield in August.

Q.—Where do you expect the students to come from?

A.—From all over the world. I have nineteen nationalities in my School at Northfield. I expect them from all countries. This Institute has people from twenty-six States.

Q.—After they are trained, where will they find employment?

A.—There is plenty of work for competent persons who can set themselves at work. There are plenty of people willing to do something, but what the Church wants is leaders.

Q.—How do you intend to support such a work?

A.—By volunteer contributions from those who believe that this kind of work ought to be done.

Q.—Has the recent experiment in your Institute been satisfactory?

A.—Very.

Q.—What plans have you for the work this summer in Chicago?

A.—We are going right on with the training-class, and propose to have three tents open. We shall have children's meetings. During the summer the children are out of the public schools, and on the streets. For years I have been trying to find a man to labour for the children, and especially boys, and I think I have him, and have sent for him to labour in Chicago this summer.

Q.—Will you pursue the same course in your School in reference to study and work that has been pursued in your Institute?

A.—Yes. I do not believe we will ever reach these non-churchgoers until we have practical men and women to do it. The only way for a man to learn to swim is to jump in and swim, and the only way to learn to do this work is to do it.

Q.—What kind of men are you aiming to bring into your School?

A.—Young men. A good many men wake up to Christian work too late to get a college education; but a little practical training would enable them to be very efficient in some kinds of work, their business training being a good preparation for this.

Q.—Do you want single men?

A.—We prefer them, but of course when a man and wife who want to go into Christian work come, we won't refuse them, provided they have qualifications for this work.

Q.—Are you going to do anything with music?

A.—I am already trying to make arrangements with a gentleman to take charge of this department, to train the voices for Gospel singing.

Q.—Have you located your School?

A.—Yes. We purchased some property for the Women's School, and intend to erect a building for the Men's School.

Q.—Have you secured instructors?

A.—Arrangements are already in progress for this.

Clothing for Friendless Girls.—Miss OKELL appeals to our readers to send cast-off clothing for the many ragged friendless young girls who find their way to the Lady Ashburton Home under her charge. Boots, and print for dresses, would also be very gratefully received, and should be addressed to Miss M. L. OKELL, Hertford-place, Globe-road, Mile End, E.

GLASGOW BOYS AND GIRLS.

A NOTED evangelist once said, "If I had to begin work over again, and had the needed gifts, I think my work would be among the children." In these days, there is no lack of children's work of all kinds; but of workers specially set apart for Gospel work for boys and girls there are none too many. There is teaching in great abundance; is there as much soul-winning as there ought to be?

For some years, in America, Dr. Pentecost has realised the need of special children's work in connection with the different missions he undertakes. Among his best workers were two sisters, the Misses Tyson, well fitted by birth, education, and, above all, by the enduement of the Holy Ghost, to win young lives for Christ. One of the sisters, Miss Bessie Tyson, came to Scotland in autumn, and, after conducting meetings in Helensburgh and the Vale of Leven, she came to Glasgow just at the Christmas holidays, on the invitation of the West-end Christian Union. Meetings were fixed for her in Kelvinside, and the question was asked: "Will the children come?" An answer was given, "Yes, perhaps, if there is no skating." There was skating; but, notwithstanding, the children came, and that in goodly numbers. Miss Tyson gathered round her a number of earnest school-boys, drawn from the school-boys' meeting, and was helped in her work by a number of ladies, who loyally supported her.

Her methods are simple, direct and gentle, entirely free from over-pressure. The mainstay of her meetings are her blackboards, of which she uses two or three at a time. By aid of coloured chalks she produces clever pictures, which at once attract attention. Bit by bit, as the lesson is unfolded, and the facile fingers fill in the detail of picture or wording or text, the mind is gained, and, sometimes all unknown, the heart is reached. With all who use object-lessons, the difficulty often comes, "I get the attention and the understanding, but I miss the heart"; not so with Miss Tyson. A marked feature of her work is the real conviction of sin in the young heart, and the ready acceptance of the Saviour as the Lamb of God to take it away. Behind her blackboards are the Word of God and the Holy Spirit, and the result of her work has been many a boy and girl led to Jesus. A fortnight of evangelistic work was followed by a few meetings for building up the young Christians. Miss Tyson sees the need of careful following up, and at the close of the meetings made arrangements to have this looked to.

At the end of five months those who have led the work can testify to its solid character, and have cause for deep thankfulness to God for all his goodness. A branch of the Scripture Union was formed, numbering about 150 members; four or five weekly and fortnightly meetings are being held for Bible study, once a fortnight on Sunday evenings the boys meet alone, while on the alternate Sunday there is a large general meeting of both boys and girls. As a thanksgiving for blessing received, the children interested collected upwards of £57 for the Glasgow Fresh-Air Fortnight Scheme for sending their poorer brothers and sisters to the country for a holiday, while a few Sabbaths ago they gathered together in a praise-meeting to give praise to God.

From Glasgow Miss Tyson went to Cardross, but, returning again, she conducted another series of meetings in Water-street Mission-hall, and another in Free St. George's Church. From there she went to Rev. W. Ross's Cowcaddens Free Church, then to Kilbarchan, to Lansdown Mission-hall, and last to Paisley. Blessing has followed wherever she has gone, and she has sought to leave behind her, in each centre where she has worked, meetings where those who have been blessed can be cared for and helped.

For the Young.

THE FACE IN THE LOOKING-GLASS.

A MISSIONARY STORY.

A MISSIONARY sat one hot summer afternoon beneath the verandah of the mission-house, reading, when, suddenly looking up, she was startled to find herself being intently regarded by a pair of eager eyes, belonging, it seemed to her at first, to some sort of monkey or other animal. But it was no monkey, for the owner of the eager eyes began in an equally eager voice, and in broken English, "Lady, tell poor black girl about the good God, of whom you've come over the great sea to teach," and the face was upturned to the missionary with a wistful, yearning look.

The lady looked curiously at the strange figure before her. Well might she have taken the girl to be an animal rather than a human being. Imagine, if you can, a little squat figure, with filthy rags of clothing hanging to it, face and hands encrusted with dirt, and the unkempt, matted hair hanging down all round so thickly as to really give one the idea of a wild creature of the woods.

And yet within the dark heart of this heathen child was a deep longing, so real and so earnest that she had overcome fear and timidity, and had come from her unclean dwelling to know more from the lips of the missionaries of the Lord and Saviour of whom she had heard rumours from those who had come under their teaching.

"Do tell poor heathen about the great God," she said again; for the missionary had sat without making reply to her first appeal. She had been thinking how and what she should answer.

At length she said, "Come to me to-morrow at this time, and you shall know what you wish." The child looked her thanks, and then, like a veritable thing of the woods, bounded away, and was quickly out of sight. The missionary sat there lost in thought, and soon from her heart came the cry, "O God, give me the soul of this poor heathen; teach me what I shall say to her, help me that I may reach her understanding."

Next day the missionary awaited within the house the coming of the heathen child. At length she saw the little form slowly and timidly approaching, and could see that the child was surprised and disappointed at not seeing her beneath the verandah. She sent the native servant forth to meet the child, who told her that her mistress was within and awaited her there. The little form drew near to the house and entered, following the servant. The missionary called the child to join her in an upper room, and she quickly ascended the stairs to the place whence the voice proceeded.

On her way she had to pass through a room in which hung a large mirror. The lady suddenly heard a loud piercing scream, and the girl rushed breathless into her presence, nearly fainting with terror, and at length gasping, "Why didn't you tell me?" as she pointed to the stairs up which she had just come. Then slowly she explained, when the missionary had soothed away her fear, how that she had seen in the room below, as she passed through, a terrible-looking wild beast, which approached her and seemed ready to spring upon her. "But there's no wild beast there," said the lady. "You surely are mistaken." "No, no," pleaded the girl, "don't go," as the missionary descended the stairs to ascertain the cause of the child's terror; but, finding she still went down, the child, for very fear of being left alone, followed her.

"Where?" said the missionary, on reaching the room, and looking round. "Where is that which so affrighted you?" "There, there," said the girl, pointing to the mirror, wherein were reflected her own face and form. "But that's yourself there," said she, "and not a wild animal at all." "Me!" was the surprised answer. "Yes, that's your own face there."

The child wonderingly drew near and gazed at her form in the glass, and when the truth dawned upon her, said slowly, "Dirty! horrible! ugly!" and then, turning to the missionary, "I'd like to be clean, lady."

When soon afterwards, trim and clean, with the long-unkempt hair nicely braided up, and in place of the rags of clothing, a pretty dress that the mission people had given her, the girl again stood before the mirror, she drew herself up, and with pleased beaming face kept repeating, "Clean now, pretty now, neat now!" "Yes," said the lady, who was an amused spectator of it all, "but only outside." Then, drawing the child gently towards her, she told her, with love in her tones, of the spiritual deformity and defilement; to all of which the child listened with earnest attention. When the missionary had ceased speaking, the girl, with tears in her eyes, said the old words, "I'd like to be clean, lady." A few days had passed, and the girl had had many long and happy talks with the missionary, when one afternoon she cautiously, almost with awe in her face, crept up the staircase once again, and stood in front of the glass which had before been such a source of terror. The missionary, with joy and thankfulness to God in her heart, for the wondrous way in which He had brought this little one to Himself, watched. Looking at her face and figure, now so bright and clean, she repeated: "Clean, pretty, neat"; and then, whilst heaven itself seemed to be reflected in the sweet face, "and cleansed inside too!"

My little tale is told. Have you caught its meaning? Have you seen yourselves in God's looking-glass—his Word? Have you been troubled and made wretched by the sight? Can you say to-day with the heathen child, "I've been cleansed"? If not, come at once, and let your prayer be "Lord, show me myself." When that is answered, as it soon will be, let this prayer go up to Him, "Lord, show me Thyself," and the look of faith at Him shall save you.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—The following are the portions for the ensuing week:—Sun., June 16, 1 Cor. xvi. 1—24; Mon., June 17, Ps. cxviii. 1—14; Tues., June 18, Ps. cxviii. 15—29; Wed., June 19, 1 John i. 1—10; Thurs., June 20, 1 John ii. 1—14; Fri., June 21, 1 John ii. 15—29; Sat., June 22, 1 John iii. 1—12.

CHILDREN'S SPECIAL SERVICE MISSION.

Messrs. H. Hutchinson, Clifford H. Nash, and Alfred Armitage, Skating Rink, Croydon, June 15—24. Mr. Josiah Spiers, South Creake, near Fakenham, Norfolk, June 14—24. Mr. H. Hankinson, Watton, Herts., June 19. Mr. E. Arrowsmith, Hexham, June 29 to July 2.

MR. E. H. SOPER, Brazil missionary, is now in England. He expects, as soon as health will permit, to visit some of our large cities and towns for the purpose of lecturing on Brazil, and to secure help for his work there. He would be pleased to hear from any who are interested in the work of Christ in that land, and may be addressed at Victoria-road, Woolstone, Southampton.

WORKING GIRLS OF LONDON.—Mr. John Shrimpton, honorary director of the Homes for Working Girls in London, has issued three seasonable appeals to the benevolent public. In the first place, he points out the desirableness of a gymnasium in which the many stay-at-home girls in the West-end Homes might find exercise and recreation after their daily task. Secondly, he pleads for a present to the charity in the form of a Recreation and Rest Home, by the seaside, at a suitable distance from London, in which girls may occasionally stay for change and refreshment in life's path. Lastly, it is hoped that country and suburban friends will, as in past years, kindly invite residents of the various Homes to their residences, giving them free access to their meadows and grounds, and generously providing meals for the day. Others have kindly borne the expense of sending a number of girls for "a day at the seaside." Communications to Mr. Shrimpton should be addressed to 2, Westminster-chambers, London, S.W.

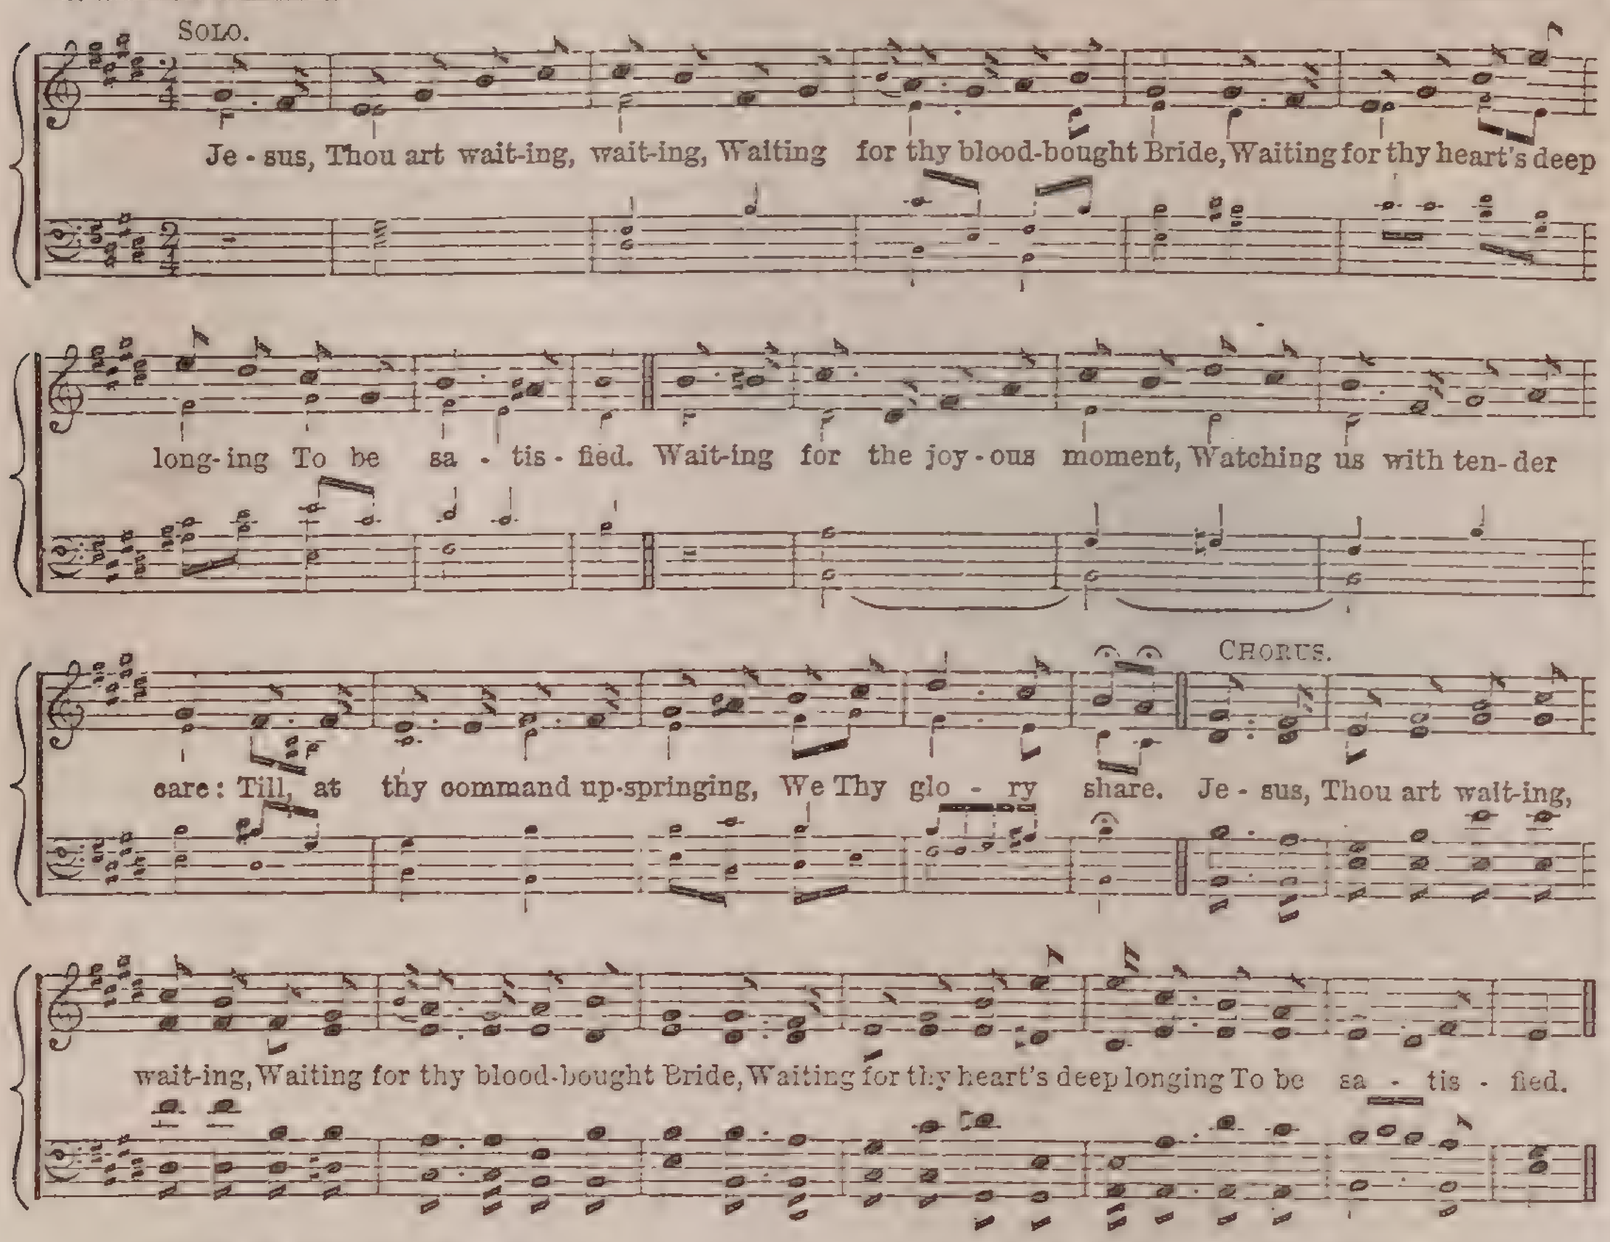
CHURCH PAROCHIAL MISSIONS.

THE annual meeting of the Church Parochial Mission Society, held a few days ago at Willis's Rooms, was presided over by the Dean of Chichester (Dr. Pigou). A cheering report was read by the secretary, Rev. Herbert Muir. It stated that the work accomplished exceeded in quantity that of any previous year. The receipts amounted to £4290, which was less than the expenditure by about £80.

In the course of an address full of sympathy, the CHAIRMAN maintained that conversion to God is something different from the hysteria which some people, by mistake, seem to associate with mission work. He maintained the distinction between the excitement which produces only barren results, and that deep emotion of the soul which is wrought by the Spirit of God in changing the whole current of men's lives. Yet he did not know that it would do men much harm to be a little excited in regard to the deep questions of spiritual life, especially as no serious exception is taken to the excitement of the stock exchange or the racecourse.

Rev. C. GREEN, vicar of New Beckenham, referred to the time when, in the language of the present day, missioners had to undergo "an episcopal boycott." Now, the Mission numbers the bishops among its friends. Rev. R. CATTERALL, diocesan missioner for Manchester, pointed out that, of the associations connected with the Church, some are aggressive, some pastoral, and some educational. He maintained that if there is one movement more than another needed to-day, it is the aggressive movement, which the Society represents.

Mr. EDWARD CLIFFORD told the story of his recent visit to Father Damien and the lepers of Molokai. Having also been to India, he referred to what he saw at Agra—poor lepers full of spiritual joy, and singing the praises of the Lord Jesus Christ. They repeated the last words of his speech with the greatest enthusiasm, "Victory to Jesus!" What was the secret of their rejoicing? Simply that an evangelist had been there about a year, and told them about Jesus Christ, and their lives had thus become changed from misery to glory.



Rev. W. HAY AITKEN, general superintendent of the Mission, in a vigorous address, alluded to the fact that this was the twentieth anniversary of mission work in the Church of England. He remembered with what fear and trembling that first London Mission was started on in 1869, when he was curate to the saintly Pennefather. The most casual observer could not question that so far there had been steadily maintained and decided progress. On the subject of conducting evangelising work in the Church of England, they had learned more in the last twenty years than in all the preceding years from the time of the Reformation. Mr. Aitken concluded with an earnest appeal on behalf of the Society; he asked those present to help the great work forward, not only by their subscriptions, but, like the importunate widow, by giving their vicars no rest till they consented to have missions in their parishes.

SPANISH EVANGELISATION SOCIETY.—Mrs. Peddie, secretary and treasurer of this Society, recently sent us particulars of the work in the Vega of Granada. The schoolmaster at Escornaz (a village of the Vega), to whom she referred, died some weeks ago. Through his labours hundreds of children have been taught to read, and trained in the knowledge of the Scriptures of truth. Happily a successor has been found on the spot. His name is Santiago Lopez Garcia. He is a native of the neighbouring village of Asquerosa, from which many come to hear the Gospel in the mission-house at Escornaz. There is a splendid field in the Vega for evangelistic effort (writes Mrs. Peddie). The people will come long distances to hear the word of God when an evangelist visits them. The Society aims at placing an itinerant missionary there to evangelise in the towns and villages of that populous valley.

"Waiting."

"Waiting for the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ."—1 COR. i. 7.

S. TREVOR FRANCIS. LIVESEY CARROTT.

Jesus, we are waiting, waiting,
Waiting, blessed Lord, for Thee,
Waiting for the calling upward
With our Lord to be.
Long and lone has been the pathway,
Oft our hearts have failed with fear,
But the guiding star of morning
Tells us Thou art near.

They are waiting, waiting, waiting,
Loved ones who have gone before,
Waiting for the sweet home-bringing;
Parting nevermore.

Oh, the joy, the bliss, the rapture!
All our tears and sorrows past,
Singing with triumphant praises,
"Safely home at last."

Keep us, blessed Jesus, waiting,
Clinging to thy precious word;
Every footstep of the journey,
Waiting for our Lord.
Waiting till, within the mansions,
We behold thy glorious face;
Singing all the wondrous story
Of thy matchless grace.

CHILDREN'S SPECIAL SERVICES.

THE widespread interest in the operations of the Children's Special Service Mission generally ensures a large audience at the annual meeting. On Tuesday last week, however, the gatherings in the Exeter Lower Hall were not so large as on previous occasions: some friends who would have attended kept away from a settled conviction that there would not be room for them if they presented themselves at the doors for admission. The chair in the afternoon was occupied by the president, Rev. E. A. Stuart, and the proceedings were interesting and encouraging.

Not all the friends of the Children's Scripture Union and the well-known seaside work, are acquainted with the more general operations of the Mission. So, after sketching the rise and progress of special work among children during the past twenty years, Mr. T. B. BISHOP, hon. sec., in his customary statement, confined his attention to an account of all-the-year-round mission efforts among the young. The magnitude of the various undertakings of the Mission is indicated by the fact that the money turned over last year reached the total of £10,000. Over half this sum was paid to printers for magazines, tracts, and picture leaflets. Mr. Bishop asked for the prayers of the meeting that God will continue to bless the work, both at home and abroad.

The CHAIRMAN opened a hearty address with some remarks on the increasing importance of the foreign work of the Mission. Christian people going abroad will do well to procure from its depôt tracts and picture sheets in the language of the country they intend visiting. Enlarging upon the seaside missions in which so many friends of the Society engage during the summer months, the speaker pointed appropriate lessons in contrasting the conduct of the Prophet Jonah, who went to the seaport Joppa to escape from God's work, with that of the Apostle Paul, who, on leaving Tyre, "kneeled down on the shore and prayed," in the presence of converts and their wives and children. In some other remarks, Mr. Stuart urged the great need for all Christian effort being undertaken in dependence on and with the help of the Holy Spirit. He dwelt upon the functions of the Spirit in the work of regeneration, and concluded with some words of encouragement to those who seek the salvation of the young.

Dr. ALBERT CARLESS told of the joy with which he had engaged in children's meetings on Ilfracombe beach and elsewhere. He spoke against anything like pressing children to come out on the Lord's side; the Holy Spirit must be allowed to do his own work. Children need to be taught the reality, love, and kingship of Jesus, and their hearts will then respond to the message of the Gospel. Mr. MARTIN J. HALL, who followed, mentioned some of the many testimonies he had received from parents and others, who had witnessed or experienced blessing from the Mission. Boys and girls have given their hearts to Christ, and been lights in their homes and schools.

Mr. E. J. KENNEDY, who has done much work among children, spoke of the great responsibility of the Church in regard to the young. Remarking that whilst addressing children on the beach, seaside preachers are often at the same time being listened to by older people on the cliffs, he told of some of the cheering results of his own efforts. At Bridlington he once spoke on the sands from the words, "Come, for all things are now ready." An old lady at her window heard, and, kneeling down, she sought and found the Saviour. A young man addressing him subsequently in Exeter Hall, said he heard the same address; that very night he "came" to Christ, and intended entering the ministry. Later on, after he had addressed undergraduates at Cambridge, another young man informed him that he also heard the word, and believed, with the result that, with his brother, he was preparing for the work of the ministry. "God giveth the increase."

Mr. JOSIAH SPIERS also spoke. He emphasised the importance of after-meetings, prayerfully conducted, without excitement, and told stories of little girls and boys having their loving hearts set upon Christ through attending meetings held under the auspices of the Mission. The evening meeting was presided over by Mr. S. Gurney Sheppard.

GENESIS VINDICATED.

IN the pages of Hebraica, an American quarterly in the interests of Semitic study, edited by Professor W. R. Harper, of Yale University, a very thorough discussion is in progress on what is now generally known as the Pentateuch question. The latest issue contains an article by Professor W. H. Green, of Princeton Theological Seminary, answering in a masterly manner the criticisms of those who analyse the Book of Genesis with results prejudicial to or subversive of its credibility and inspired authority. The tactics of the analysts are exposed in all their contemptible nakedness, and their principal conclusions shown to be both arbitrary and mutually destructive. Having disposed of theories founded largely on subjective fancy and supported by what is correctly styled "critical legerdemain," Professor Green triumphantly vindicates the soundness and integrity of the written Word. Not reading into the Scriptures what is not there, this eminent Hebraist is able to grasp the true meaning and plan of the writer: this is the secret of his success, while neglect to take the same course is certainly the cause of the failure of many whose destructive criticism he counteracts. In closing, he thus tersely refers to the preference some modern scholars give to the hazy statements of the ancient inscriptions over the plain record of Holy Writ:—

"There are striking points of correspondence between the Deluge tablets and the Bible narrative, which have their interest and importance. But only he can consistently maintain that the latter is borrowed from the former who fancies that genuine coin is an attempted imitation of the spurious, and that pure drugs were originated as rivals of the adulterated article."

On the discriminating manner in which the Divine names are employed in the earlier chapters of the Bible, Professor Green is very clear. He says:—

"Elohim is the more general and, so to speak, abstract designation of God, as the Creator and providential Governor of the world at large, and of the whole collective mass of mankind. Jehovah is his personal name, and that by which He has made Himself known when entering into close relations with men, and particularly the chosen race, as the God of revelation and the God of grace."

Careful readers of the Old Testament cannot but allow that the use of Lord (Jehovah) and God (Elohim) is regulated by a propriety which cannot be accidental. It is well, at the same time, to bear in mind that in the New Testament a like propriety, often easy of detection, governs the use of the names Jesus (Saviour) and Christ (Anointed) as employed to designate our Blessed Lord. The English agents of Hebraica are Messrs. Trübner & Co., 57 and 59, Ludgate-hill, London, E.C.

TRACTS WANTED FOR INDIA.—There is special need of Gospel tracts and of Gospel temperance tracts for our work in India. Through The Watchman Book Repository, we have good facilities for issuing such tracts where they will be well used. Gifts of tracts, or of means to purchase them, may be sent to WALLACE J. GLADWIN.

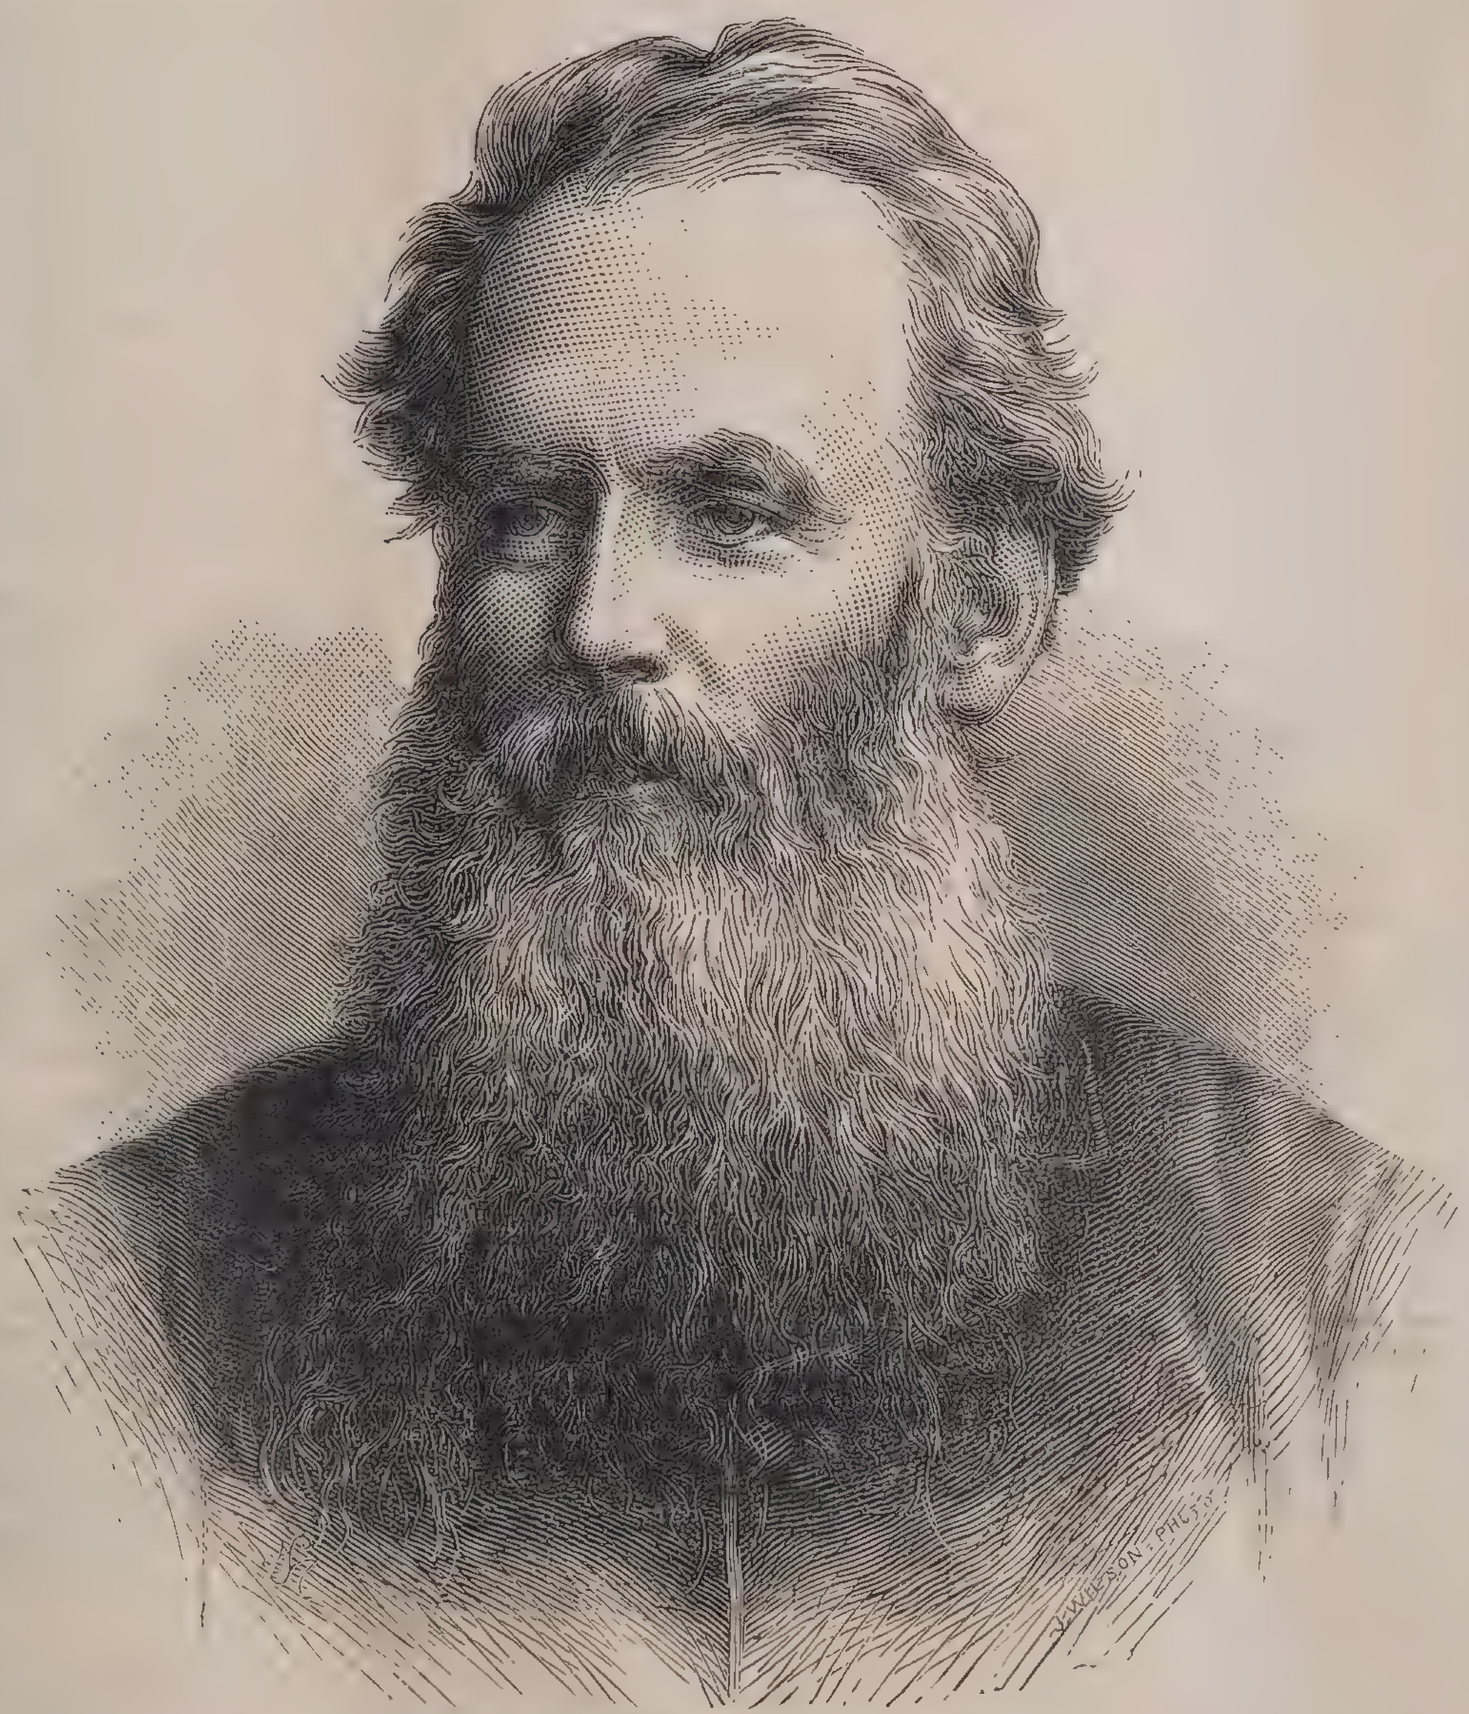
REV. JOSEPH ODELL,



Of the Primitive Methodists' Evangelists' Home, Birmingham.

ENTHUSIASM has been defined as "God-inspired zeal." In this respect it differs essentially from fanaticism, and cannot properly exist apart from true religion. The subject of this sketch is a true enthusiast, one who delights in holy daring—attempting great things for God. There is every reason to believe that God has raised up our brother for special and remarkable service as a leader and inspirer of men. Like the Apostle Paul, he has counted all things loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus his Lord; and the supreme ambition of his soul is to glorify Christ, and the ruling passion of his life is to win souls to God.

JOSEPH ODELL was born at Dunstable, Bedfordshire, in 1846, and was brought up to worship in the Primitive Methodist Chapel. At the age of fourteen, while visiting the village of Standbridge, he was converted. As he was brought to God in the midst of a great and glorious revival, it is no wonder that revivalism permeates Mr. Odell's very soul and impregnates all his ministry. This is so in the very fitness of things, and thus, when found in the midst of true revival work, he may appropriately be said to be breathing his "native air."

For a short season young Odell's spiritual sky was somewhat overcast; but when, in his seventeenth year, he gave himself up to God in fu surrender and entire consecration for service, the sun of righteousness burst forth once more in glory on his soul. Speaking of that act, he says: "I deliberately and intelligently, with the most solemn recognition of my obligations to God, gave my entire being to Him." His call to preach seemed to come with this full consciousness of spiritual life. What he realised in himself of the Holy Ghost, he desired to bear witness of to others. He says: "I don't know how I began to preach, only I am sure I never learned how. I just did it. It seemed to me as flying to the bird, or swimming to the fish; how could I help it?" For such men spheres are always waiting, and soon we find our friend taking a painful farewell of his beloved father, who had come to London to see him off to Torquay on the Lord's work of saving souls. Having proved himself worthy "on supply," he was appointed, in the summer of 1866, as a Primitive Methodist minister to Abergavenny. For sixteen months he gave himself with "blessed abandon" to the work, pleading with God in private, preaching to men in public, visiting the houses and missioning the streets of the town. Up to this day fruit is being borne from that early seed-sowing. Among the gracious results of his mission was found the memorable conversion of "Phipps, the blacksmith." This took place in a field where they knelt together in prayer, and from that day Phipps became a Christian and a total abstainer.

The next removal of his ministry was to Hammersmith, afterwards to Croydon, and then to London. In all these places he saw much fruit of his earnest labours.

(From Photograph by Mr. J. Wilson, Leicester.)

Before leaving Hammersmith Mr. Odell had the painful experience of losing his superintendent, Rev. W. Baitson, by death. The dying charge of that saintly man was, "Preach holiness, preach holiness." This we believe has become as "letters patent" in the ministry of Joseph Odell. His appointment to the Hackney-road district was a special one in connection with, and by urgent request of, Rev. James Garner. Here he laboured indoors with three meetings in line, outdoors, in all weather, with mobs and frequent opposition. This was just before Rev. William Cuff took up residence in Shoreditch, and from Kingsland-road to Cambridge Heath, from Stoke Newington to Hoxton the masses were attracted and saved, blessing God for Mr. Odell's ministry. A noble band of young men, now able Christian workers in the district, constituted an item in the success. It is no matter of surprise that with such strain of exertion there should come a breakdown. Turning the Sabbath into one prolonged meeting, and making the whole week to run over with work, physical strength and endurance at last failed. He fell sick; but, thank God, not unto death. Upon recovery he was sent to Gravesend, where the work of the Lord prospered in his hands. The employers of labour in large firms, seeing the moral reformation in many of their worst men, encouraged Mr. Odell, and largely helped his funds for the work.

Subsequently, acting on instructions from the Connexional authorities, Mr. Odell visited America to rally a distressed and dying Church. His mission was to Brooklyn, where, in the course of three years, the membership rose from ninety to three hundred. Here the financial strain greatly added to the burden of ministerial work, and proved almost too much for him; but conversions took place, among which were found many who were willing to help, and right manfully they did it. The severe struggle of that time blanched the youthful locks, so that on his return Mr. Odell bore a much changed appearance. Speaking of that time, he says: "Many a Sabbath day I have crept into that Brooklyn church at three, four, and five o'clock in the morning, and knelt and pleaded on the spot where I would stand to preach at eleven. How I needed help! The church seemed cursed with the blackest scandal. After two years of loneliness and toil, harvest came." Ministers of other denominations came to see and encourage the wonderful work, among whom were Dr. Duryea, Dr. Cuyler, Dr. Tyng, and the late Rev. H. W. Beecher. Here, as in all other spheres, the temperance banner was boldly and enthusiastically unfurled. An association was formed in Brooklyn called "The Odell Temperance League," in which hundreds of members were enrolled. Active steps were also taken to stop the liquor traffic, and in twelve months four of the drinking saloons of the neighbourhood were shut up. In each case Mr. Odell had himself to appear before the Commissioners of Licence; by argument and appeal he defeated the applicants, and closed the houses. He says of it himself: "It was an unusual thing in the court to witness what I witnessed—the Commissioners rising from their seats and turning towards the windows to wipe the tears from their eyes as they had been touched with the story of the wife's plea and the child's prayer that no drink should be sold." While in America, our brother conducted revival services in various parts, specially in Dr. Tyng's church and in the great Tent Mission. Among others with whom he laboured was the well-known "Uncle John Vassar."

On his return to England, Mr. Odell laboured most successfully in the town of Leicester for five years, and four years ago he removed to Birmingham, where his work for God has been attended with remarkable blessing. Empty chapels have been filled and kept full. Hundreds of conversions have taken place. Blessed with a strong constitution and a wiry frame, upon which the invisible spirit of the fiery cup has never been permitted to play or even to breathe, Mr. Odell has been able to accomplish a vast amount of work for God which will never be known until the eternal morn appears. While not unconscious of human weakness and difficulty in relation to Christian endeavour, his invincible faith in the promise of God mounts above all, saying with the late H. Martyn, "How easy for God to do it!"

Mr. Odell has now reached what seems to be his true sphere and calling, in becoming the founder of "The Evangelists' Home," Highgate Park, Birmingham. He is possessed of the ability not only to inspire, but to infuse his own enthusiasm into the hearts and lives of others. In a circular he says:—

There is a very general demand for evangelistic labour. This demand is most imperative where the means of supplying it are the scantiest. There are rural circuits with many chapels and only one minister. The chapels are unused except on Sundays, being sometimes closed for three weeks out of four. The minister is depressed and dragged down by overwork, and defeated in his purpose to make his circuit a living and successful part of our Connexion. These circuits must be helped, the ministers cheered and strengthened, and the work of God pushed forward. This will mean busy scenes in village chapels, bright and beautiful services, and blessed conversions amongst the thousands of the youths and maidens of these rural districts.

The towns and cities will gain immensely. In summer our evangelists will do street preaching and hold tent services; while conversions and consecration in the country will mean—as has been proved in the past—a new leaven and increasing life in our town churches. N.B.—The principle of this Home is: "Pay as you go." No debt! No doubt! No defeat! What our friends cannot supply, what we cannot find, what our heavenly Father does not send, we can and we will do without.

The plan and work of the Home have already proved eminently successful. Although only started last October, there are now twenty young men on the staff. Their work has been wonderfully owned of God, and many hundreds, under the labours of these evangelists, have been brought to the Saviour.

In concluding this notice of an interesting career and an important work, we would express the earnest hope that God will bless Mr. Odell in the superintendence of the Evangelists' Home, and bless the agents of the Home to the people among whom they go to labour.

MRS. MUMFORD'S SCHOOL.

Your readers may be interested to know that after the departure from this life of my venerable and beloved husband, Rev. Asa Mahan, I decided to join my friend, Mrs. Mumford, in her mission work in Philippopolis, Bulgaria. I arrived here on May 25, and received a most cordial welcome to Bulgaria. The city contains about 50,000 inhabitants, but it is laid out much as though a person threw nuts hither and thither, built a house wherever a nut fell, and then made the streets to wind around the houses. Sometimes the streets are little more than a narrow, crooked alley, walled up on either side. When I reached the mission premises, however, I found the location a most charming one, overlooking the whole city, the river Maritza, and the green fields beyond. We can discern the Balkan mountains in the distance, and upon clear days see them with distinctness. In this picturesque and lovely spot, God willing, I expect to fill out my life's work in doing whatever the Lord of the vineyard shall appoint me to do.

Mrs. Mumford is doing a good work in giving a Christian education to a class of girls who otherwise would not be able to obtain one. I had thought that it was time this institution should become self-sustaining, and probably others entertained like sentiments. Since my arrival, however, I have ascertained the reason why it is not so. The school is largely composed of the daughters of the cultivators of the soil and shepherds, who constitute nine-tenths of the population, and supply the market with meat, fruit and vegetables, at very low prices. It is therefore no marvel that a people oppressed by poverty, caused by unproductive labour, should be unable to educate their children; especially their daughters, who are regarded as inferior to their sons, and almost needing no education. But their elevation and conversion to a pure Christianity is the future hope of the nation, hence the necessity of this almost free mission school for pupils, who are hungering for, and struggling to obtain, a secular education.

THE CHRISTIAN LIFEBOAT CREW had a profitable meeting last week. One friend gave a thrilling account of the death of his youngest son, who had been present at the last crew meeting held in the fo'c'sle. A letter was read, asking help in a new effort about to be made in Canning Town. A spirit of earnest prayer pervaded the meeting.

THE OLD CATHOLIC CAUSE is making considerable progress in Bohemia. Hundreds of persons have joined of late, and it is said that thousands are ready to take the same stand as soon as churches are provided. A fund is being raised by the Anglo-Continental Society towards the Austrian Old Catholic Bishopric.

Believers' Meetings, Dublin.

TUESDAY MORNING, JUNE 4.

MR. ALEXANDER STEWART, Glasgow, spoke on the Lord Jesus Christ as seen in the Gospel of John as the Revealer of the Father. In Gen. i. 26, God said, "Let us make man in our image, and let him have dominion." That purpose has not failed. In the end of the Book the Lord Jesus is seen as God's King. That is the string on which the whole Book is strung. Man lost the image of God, and the representatives of God by heathen nations show how false is their idea of Him. But Englishmen in the nineteenth century, if they do not know God, have no better conception than that of Rom. i. Men could not climb into God's light, but God could come into their darkness, therefore, John i. 18, He is revealed as Father, Lamb, Dove. Compare these words with the monsters of idolatry. Jesus revealed the Father when He blessed children, and wrought his works of mercy, and spoke his words of love. Observe the three questions of Thomas, Philip, and Judas in John xiv., and the answers of Jesus. There is a way to God: I am that way. Not only may you go to Him, He comes to you, in my person. Not only am I come, but I will manifest myself. Dangerous is the state of any Christian to whom Jesus does not manifest Himself. As we look on Him, we are changed into the same image. This is to have the purpose of God wrought in you. Very appropriately the verse was sung,

The bride eyes not her garment,
But her dear bridegroom's face:
I will not gaze at glory,
But on my Saviour's face.

Mr. J. MCVICKER spoke of the manifestation of Christ in John as the Life of the believer. This Gospel is one of life from beginning to end, e.g., i. 4; iii. 14, 16; iv. 10; v. 24; vii. 37, 38; xx. 31. Christ is the life of his people on earth. What attainment is beyond our reach? What obstacle too great to overcome? The Holy Ghost has come to make objective truth our subjective experience. "I in them, and Thou in Me." Here is Christian unity, not in doctrine or in a hierarchy, but in one person. Words cannot express what Jesus is to the least instructed saint. If I have a few thousand pounds, shall I be afraid of Jesus Christ coming into my heart to use it? He wants our hands and feet to use for God. He shed tears at Lazarus' grave; He sobbed and wept over Jerusalem. If Christ by his Spirit comes to dwell in our hearts, the weakest may be as David. Lord Jesus, Thou hast come to dwell in me: satisfy thy heart by doing thy best in me. Hymn:

Unto the Lamb that once was slain
Be endless honours paid.

An address by Dr. MCKILLIAM followed, but we are not able to reprint it in our present issue.

The meeting was closed with prayer by Pastor HUGH D. BROWN.

In the afternoon an instructive Bible-reading by Mr. DAVID BARON on Ps. xxxii., which, from comparison with Lev. xvi., he thought was written on the great day of atonement. Three distinct experiences of the sinner saved by grace. Ps. xxxii. 3, 4—conviction; 5—confession; 6, 7—salvation. Selah—pause—closes each. In 7 God sings songs of deliverance, such as Isa. xliii. 25, xliv. 3, &c. In 21 three ascending stages of joy.

TUESDAY EVENING.

Rev. Dr. ELDER CUMMING spoke of (1) The Christian in Christ Jesus; (2) The place the Christian occupies in the heavenlies; (3) The Christian's walk. In Eph. the phrase "in Christ" occurs sixteen times, and means the Christian's standing and his experience. In ii. 21 the living stones are fitted together in Christ; each not only cut and polished and built into the temple, but fitted into those nearest it. All our blessings are as the heavenlies, and we must dwell there in order to enjoy them. Until the Christian is living in the heavenlies he is not possessing all his spiritual blessings in Christ. And there are temptations from wicked spirits are only known to those who live there. As to the Christian's walk—he is to walk in wise watchfulness, circumspectly; in wisdom; in light; in love, even to his enemies; in the Spirit. I cannot take one step of that walk; but come, Lord, dwell in me, and walk in me.

Major WHITTLE spoke on the Christian life, its foundations, hindrances, and helps. Faith in Christ Jesus is the foundation. In Scotland a woman found peace from John iii. 16. Her little boy asked why she looked so happy? "Why, I have eternal life." "How do you know?" "It's here in John iii. 16." In the morning all her joy seemed gone. "Mother," said the boy, "what's the matter?" "Oh, I have not got eternal life, and I thought I had." "But you told me it said so in John iii. 16. Has the verse changed?" "I'm afraid it has." "Why, mother, let us look, I'll fetch the Book. Yes, here's the verse, it hasn't changed a word. It's the same as it was last night. If you had eternal life by believing in Jesus Christ last night, you must have it now." A young lady said if she got the lowest place in heaven she would be content. "Yes, miss," said a lowly child of God, "but would it content Jesus? He wants us to bear much fruit." The hindrances to Christian life mentioned were self-pleasing, formalism, fashion; and the helps were following Christ fully, bearing his reproach, the fellowship of saints. O young men and young women, what a day it is to be out and out for Christ. Now let us drop everything else, and be fervent in Spirit, walk in the Spirit, and not fulfil the desires of the flesh or of the mind. And whatever trials may be coming, let them bring saints together, let us love all who love the Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity.

Pastor W. FULLER GOOCH spoke on "Walking in the Spirit," which he defined to be a walking in conscious possession of the life He begets and imparts; in the constant fellowship of the Spirit; in accord with his nature as the Spirit of Holiness, and with his dictates in the Word; and in absolute self-distrust and dependence upon the power of the Spirit. Illustrations of such a life were drawn from the character of David as "the man after God's own heart," and from the training of Moses to be the leader of Israel.

The meeting on Wednesday morning was chiefly devoted to a consideration of the Epistle to the Ephesians, and was addressed first by Dr. NEATBY, of London, who dwelt on ch. i. 3. He showed that through our oneness with a risen Christ, we are already blessed in Him, and set in this world in all places which as man he filled. Is He a Son, I am a son; my Saviour, my Lord, my God is Son of God, and has sent me a message that He is ascended "to my Father and your Father, to my God and your God," a truth to which we are here immediately directed. The verse, however, is not so much an unfolding of truth as an outburst of praise, to be approached in a worshipful spirit. The blessing is ours, the true Christian walks about among and enjoys new things eye hath not seen nor ear heard, and dwells in the heavenlies where Christ is. A Christian is a Christ's one. We hear of a Christianity without Christ, I would rather have Christ without Christianity. Christ is here looked on as the Man, having a God whom He knew, served, and obeyed. We are chosen in Him, not merely a question of election, it is a question not so much for the head as the heart. We are chosen that we may be holy as Christ was, and this should be our aim at all costs, to have a heart God can look upon with some degree of delight. The Christian is to express what the Father is. God was also the Father of Christ, and is truly our Father in the same way and measure. Strange that a Christian should be weighed down with care and burdens if God is our Father and thus loves us. God help us to leave to-morrow, and even to-day, in his hand. Adoption is, "unto Himself," a something precious in his sight. He might have given us blessing, yet not made us children. He need not have made us sons, but has done so simply according to his own will, that He may delight in us as precious in his sight. Salvation is, therefore, to be valued not mainly as a deliverance from wrath, but as conforming us to the image and will of God.

Rev. J. WILKINSON, of the Mildmay Mission to the Jews, followed, pointing out some of the conditions of blessing such as we crave, and such as are provided for us, being enjoyed. We must keep ourselves in the right direction for blessing. Faith in God's being and gracious character must be in exercise; we must remember that every good gift and every perfect boon cometh down from above, and so we must be constantly looking up for their bestowment. Two passages, one in the Old and the other in the New Testament, often overlooked, must also be kept in mind and acted upon. The first, Mal. iii. 10. By bringing tithes and offerings into God's house prove whether He will not pour out a blessing, not as often understood and translated, so that there is no room to receive it, but, as the Hebrew is, until there is no more in heaven to give. The other passage is in Luke vi. 38, "Give, and it shall be given unto you," &c., a promise literal in its character, and needing to be learned in these days, and one on compliance with which much depends as to Divine bestowments on the soul.

Mr. MARSH, of Sunderland, then spoke on the seven leading themes of the Epistle to the Ephesians. The Purpose of God in the believer, to make him holy. The Person of the Lord Jesus, we have the expression "in whom" seven times. The Person and Power of the Holy Spirit. The Position of the believer as in Christ. The Possessions of the believer. The Practice of the believer, and, lastly, the Panoply of God. A note on the aspects of the teaching of this Epistle was also given, showing that we have the Divine Counsel in chap. i. 3—18; Divine Observation, i. 19—22; Divine Mystery, iii. 1—13; Divine Love, iii. 14—21; Divine Unity, iv. 1—16; Divine Model, iv. 17—vi. 9; Divine Armour, vi. 10—20. The Believer's Portion in Christ was defined as purchased, secure, full, and eternal.

In the afternoon a specially instructive address was given by Dr. Elder Cumming, of Glasgow, on "Some special features of the Gospel of John," many brethren taking part in the helpful discussion which followed.

WEDNESDAY EVENING.

The evening meeting was occupied by addresses on The Atonement. Mr. HY. FIGGIS, of Dublin, spoke of this as the foundation truth of revelation, dwelling at some length on the prevalence of effort to set aside its true character, and essential necessity. Speaking of its negative aspects, he said it was not at-one-ment, not the heathen notion of appeasing God, or reconciling God to us; not a moral change within us, this being its results; nor an effort on man's part reaching after God. The Atonement is guilt expiated by sacrifice, borne away, lifted off by the vicarious death of the Lamb of God. There are two aspects of atonement, one in which it is already done, "Ye were reconciled to God by the death of his Son," the other in which we need to be practically moved and operated on by it. This was emphasised by reference to 2 Cor. v. 20, which the speaker considered to be intended in its application for believers.

Dr. PENTECOST followed with a stirring address on redemption as found in 1 Peter i. 18—20, Eph. i. 7, illustrating the subject by references to the Goel of the Old Testament appointment, and other prominent types of the Redeemer's work. Christ's resurrection was God's receipt in full for the price that Jesus paid. A law fulfilled on one side, and cancelled on the other, can never operate against the sinner who believes on Christ. On the ground of what He has done, and on that alone, we should be presumptuous if we did not as believers affirm our salvation, and we are bound to rejoice in a complete and accomplished redemption as our blessed portion in Jesus.

Mr. SHULDHAM HENRY then spoke to the unsaved, whom he described as the servants of sin, slaves of Satan, and subjects of the king of terrors, earnestly pointing them to the cross of Christ as the only means of deliverance, and of pardon such as God is ready to bestow.

PRESENT-DAY DARKNESS.

IT is written, "Nevertheless, when the Son of Man cometh, shall He find faith on the earth?" Surely, in these sad days of unbelief, we are forced to the conclusion that the coming of our Lord is very near, and it seems the only bright hope left, as every ray of Gospel light is being shut out by so many ministers in the pulpits of our land, and the teaching of the students for the ministry left in the hands of two men, about whom a great deal of "suspicion" prevails, specially regarding the latest appointment, Years ago I told a D.D. that such preaching as his forced serious men to join the lapsed masses, and now the term is applied in the public prints to "lapsed ministers," who have gone off the lines of Gospel truth.

Lately one of the professors was asked why there was so much "suspicion" and "dubiety" about another D.D. As he must have the command of the English language, and have facility of expression, so the notorious minister must have himself to blame, when the Christians in Scotland "misunderstand" him, as they are coolly told. Again, it is maintained that the suspicious party is dealing with, or seeking to gain, sceptics into the Church. But the question arises, Will he make more sceptics for every one he unmakes? I fear the balance will be on the wrong side!

Again, on the other hand, a new thing in the spirit of ritualism has sprung up, two new churches opened, and at the dedication services of the first 150 ministers marched in clad in "gowns" and "hoods," while forty-seven went stepping in to the second, all in same fashion. What can this mean? Unless it is intended to coerce the people, and say in effect, "These be thy gods, O Israel!" Very hard things have been said, and one minister, well known to both the ministers of the said new churches, told me it was just "millinery" and "ridiculous!" But why should anything be put between the Lord Jesus and the sinner when preaching the Gospel of his grace?

LONDON AGED CHRISTIAN SOCIETY.—Mr. F. A. Bevan presided over the sixty-third annual meeting of this Society, held a few days ago in Exeter Lower Hall. There are now 180 pensioners on the books, ranging in age from sixty-five to over ninety. Each receives an allowance of ten shillings per month; the total amount paid during last year was £1051, the cost of management being £125. But for legacies falling in, the year would have ended in debt. The Chairman pronounced the work of the Society a good one, saying that it must be specially dear to the Lord, as it follows his own example and the precepts He gave to his disciples. The customary address to the pensioners was delivered by Rev. S. L. Dixon.

A HOME FOR GIRLS.—A correspondent who has recently visited the Ripon Home for Girls writes:—"In the schoolroom the children were busy learning knitting, sewing, reading, writing, and arithmetic. A short Scripture lesson is given to them every morning. All the work of the house is done by the children: they are taught to make bread, bake, cook, wash, clean, make their own underclothes and dresses, in fact, everything they wear, save boots and shoes. The children are taken into the Home at the age of 7, and kept till ready for service, when situations are found for them. All looked healthy and happy. This useful, practical training (including clothing) is given for the small sum of £11 a year, the remainder being made up by voluntary contributions."

THE OPIUM TRAFFIC.

THERE was a representative gathering at the Westminster Palace Hotel, on Wednesday morning, last week. The President and Executive Committee had invited friends connected with many social and religious movements to consider how interest in the Society for the Suppression of the Opium Traffic, might be extended. After breakfast, Sir J. W. PEASE took the chair, and a report of the year's operations was read by Mr. E. A. Williams. About 13,000 publications bearing on the opium question have been issued, and many meetings have been held throughout the kingdom. The report dealt exhaustively with the growth of the trade in China. It was shown that, in 1863, there was little opium grown in the provinces of China; but, in 1887, large quantities were reported in China Yellow Books as having been produced. China at one time fought against this degrading vice being forced upon it, but to-day it is lax, because of the interest in home-produced opium. The Society of Friends, which was well represented at the breakfast, has taken the question in hand, and is actively agitating to secure a public sentiment in favour of the abolition of the traffic.

The Chairman stated that retribution must come upon us as a nation for wickedly forcing the opium on the Chinese. The curse of the opium habit is felt to-day in California amongst Europeans, and it is cursing our kinsfolk in the Australasian Colonies. Dr. Norman Kerr discussed the difference between the physical effects of alcohol and opium. Opium may not have the same coarse results physically, but has a more terrible effect mentally and morally. If we had desired to destroy the moral, physical, mental, and commercial life of the Chinese, we could not have done it more effectively than by forcing opium upon that nation.

Rev. J. McGowan (of China) said that in the course of a long experience he had never met a single moderate opium smoker. It saps a man's honour, affections, truth, honesty. The speaker gave some experiences of work in the far interior, and empathically asserted that the Gospel alone could save an opium smoker. Rev. F. W. Ballermade an important reference to the inseparable connection in the native mind between the opium traffic and the English. There is no native name to signify what opium is, and it is called "foreign dirt," "foreign medicine," "foreign smoke." Professor Legge, Mr. George Gillet, and Surgeon-Major Pringle, also spoke to a resolution calling upon all Christians, and especially ministers of the Gospel, to aid in arousing the national conscience to the enormity of Britain's sin in the matter.

CAGE LANE MISSION, PLUMSTEAD.—Miss Russell's Mission has for some years been doing a great work amongst the arsenal men, and she has a large staff of zealous workers. The services, conducted on undenominational lines, are so largely attended that the trustees have resolved to increase the accommodation. It is estimated that a new building, to hold 800 people, will cost £1200. Miss Russell's address is 1, Thames View-terrace, Plumstead.

DEPTFORD MEDICAL MISSION.—The parish of Deptford contains a population of more than 90,000 persons, and is one of the poorest districts in the Metropolis. The religious and moral condition of many of the inhabitants is, moreover, more distressing than their poverty. With the purpose of carrying the Gospel into the homes of the people, a Medical Mission has been established, under the direction of Dr. F. A. Pring, who has had large experience in this special work. Not only will the poor be attended at the Mission dispensary, but those who, owing to sickness, are unable to visit the Mission-house, will be seen in their own homes. Nurses and ladies will seek to supplement the kindness, and to spread a knowledge of the Gospel. The initial expenditure in connection with the Mission will amount to over £600. The council of the Mission includes some well-known names. The address is 188, High-street, Deptford, S.E.

Letters to the Editor.

IMPURE PICTURES.

DEAR SIR,—I was glad to see in a recent issue your protest against the exhibition of those pictures at the Royal Academy which offend every lover of purity. It seems like a contradiction of the precepts of personal holiness to know that clergymen, ministers, men of high repute in the religious world, and godly women too, crowd these saloons where hang these detestable exhibitions of impurity. So long as members of the Church of Christ patronise the indecent, so long will men of the world produce it. If every Christian man and woman would take a stand and avoid as a path of sin every gallery of art where are nude portraits, such conduct would banish this crying evil from our midst.

It must be the want of thought and prayer on the part of God's people which allows them to frequent such places. If they would only consider the cost of each one of these pictures, they would surely shrink from finding pleasure in such picture galleries. These portraits, from the necessity of the case, can only be painted by the repeated committal of gross and repulsive sin, the details of which it would be wrong to describe. How can it be possible for any saint to walk in a perfect way, and yet frequent such places?

God's curse will not only fall on the artist who debases his art, and on the hapless woman who sacrifices body and soul, but also on those who pander to the lustful by patronising shamelessness.

—Yours truly, E. E. FISK.

MISSIONARY LIFE.

DEAR SIR,—Allow me to confirm the testimony of Miss McInnes (in your issue of May 31) as to the "simplicity of life" and devotion to their great work of Indian missionaries. During more than thirty years my husband (General Colin Mackenzie) and I were intimately acquainted with missionaries of every denomination in Bengal, the Punjab, the Dekkan, Bombay, and Madras Presidencies. We have stayed in their houses, lived close to them for many months, have known the details of their expenditure, and I can bear unqualified testimony to their self-denying economy and simplicity of living, and to the riches of their liberality to the poor in times of famine.

Nothing can be more unjust or unfounded than to charge them with "self-indulgence," "luxury," or "worldliness" of any kind. The "gulf" between them and the "station people" is the gulf between the Church and the world. Men like Dr. Duff, or Mr. Hislop, of Nagpur, may occasionally be sought after by high officials for their knowledge or their gifts, but very few civil or military officers, and still fewer ladies, ever visit a missionary's family, unless they are one with them in the faith. Missionaries are not "in Society." They have neither time nor inclination to be so. I never met a missionary at Government House. I never heard of one staying with a Governor, except Mrs. Ingalls, of the Burmah Mission, with Lord and Lady Lawrence.

At the same time, their own houses were always open to any who seek their society. Their hospitality generally taking the form of evening tea.

They were universally respected by the natives who knew them, and by all but those Europeans who kept aloof from them.

I have not spoken of the real hardness they endure in teaching, bazaar preaching in the hot winds, and in itinerating often on foot. As one instance, all the Basel missionaries engaged in the revival among the Julus in 1870-71 were invalided from the hardships they went through.—Faithfully yours, HELEN C. MACKENZIE.

HOME TEACHING FOR THE BLIND.—The thirty-third annual report of the Home Teaching Society for the Blind states that at the present time seventeen teachers are engaged in daily house-to-house visitation in London and suburbs. The Society was instituted for the purpose of searching out the blind, and teaching them to read the Holy Scriptures and other suitable books in Moon's raised type. This purpose being constantly kept in view, the teachers are welcomed right heartily alike in the houses of the well-to-do and the poor. The Society keeps up libraries at eighteen centres. The secretary is Mr. Ralph Tait, 31, New Bridge-street, Blackfriars, E.C.

EXAUDI, DEUS.

WHEN tired and restless in the night,
Awake I weary lie,
And, longing for the morning light,
I count the hours go by.

Dear Lord, within the silent room,
Thy presence let me feel;
And let thine eyes beam through the gloom,
And love Divine reveal.

If Thou do but consent to stay
A little while with me,
The watch will be as glad as day
When it is shared by Thee.

As in the dusky eventide,
That o'er Emmaus fell,
Thou didst with Cleopas abide,
Enter, and with me dwell.

I fain would touch, in utter need,
Thy garment's trailing hem,
Thy death for me I humbly plead,
Thy thorny anadem.

A MISSION IN ABYSSINIA.

THE Swedish Evangelical Society has five male missionaries, three ladies, and several native evangelists at work in Abyssinia. They have at Monkullo a church, an asylum with 110 children of both sexes, a medical mission, and a printing press. The church is attended every Sunday by from 200 to 300 persons, Gallas, Abyssinians, and Mohammedans, of whom ninety are communicants. The Mission has also begun an evangelical mission amongst the Italian soldiers, for whom two reading-rooms have been opened, the one in Monkullo, and the other in Arkiko. Two converted Abyssinians are studying at Dr. Comandi's institution in Florence, in order to qualify themselves to act as teacher-evangelists, both amongst the Abyssinians and also Italians.

The Society is endeavouring to raise funds for building a mission-hall, a reading-room for the Italian soldiers, another room for the natives, and two rooms for the evangelists' residence. The sum required will be about £1000. The Swedish Mission Board are quite unable at present to give larger assistance to mission work in Africa. The temptations which surround the Italian soldiers are immense, and the call is loud to assist these Swedish brethren in their efforts to carry war into the enemy's camp.

HOLIDAYS FOR POOR CHILDREN.—An appeal is issued by the Children's Country Holiday Fund, which sends ailing children from the London schools, to enjoy a fortnight's holiday in the country. Last year 17,636 children were sent from all parts of London. This year more ought to be sent out of the 600,000 children attending school. Ten shillings will give one child a fortnight's holiday. Hon. Alfred Lyttelton, 10, Buckingham-street, Strand, is treasurer.

STATE REGULATION OF VICE.—A committee on this subject reported on Friday week to the General Assembly of the Free Church of Scotland. It was shown that old ways still find some countenance in India. The repealing policy steadily pursued by Lord Knutsford in the Crown colonies was warmly acknowledged. With reference to Cape Colony, Queensland, Victoria, New Zealand, Tasmania, and Canada, it was announced that a circular and copy of Principal Rainy's important statement on the subject had been sent to above 6000 ministers of religion in those colonies, with a view to their being stirred up to put themselves at the head of movements for the repeal of any measure providing for the regulation of vice. The convener of the committee, Rev. J. Dymock, of Kemnay, was appointed to represent the Free Church at the Triennial Congress of the British, Continental, and General Federation for the Abolition of the State Regulation of Vice, to be held in Geneva, from September 10 to 14.

RESCUING THE CHILDREN.

THE National Refuges for Homeless and Destitute Children, with their valuable allied agencies, including the training ships Arethusa and Chichester, are centres of a truly important and growing work. In the six Homes and two ships a thousand boys and girls are at present being supported and trained to earn their own living. Already nine thousand have left for situations at home and abroad.

The forty-fourth annual report, presented at the meeting held on Thursday last in Exeter Hall, was a document of considerable interest. The letters received from "old boys" were very cheering. One related with joy that he had succeeded in passing an examination for the position of medical attendant in the Royal Navy Hospital, at Haslar. He wrote to Mr. Carr: "What I learnt while at the Twickenham Home has proved most useful to me. The question in religious knowledge was, 'Describe fully the meaning of the verse, "Thy word have I hid in my heart, that I might not sin against Thee."' When I read it, I remembered the explanation you gave us on the same subject one Sunday morning, four years ago, and I thought I could not do better than give the same outline, so I put down the following words: '"Thy word"—the best thing; "I hid in my heart"—is the best place; "that I might not sin against Thee"—for the best of purposes.' I was highly commended by those who saw my papers." What an encouragement to those who open up the Holy Scriptures to the young! Even after four years, the forcible instruction he had received came to the lad's mind! Another boy, writing from Canada, said: "I would be thankful if you would send me my mother's address, if you hear from her. It is terrible to have a mother, and not know what has become of her." Poor lad! A footnote states that the mother is a drunkard. It is clear that the boy's training has brought out the finer feelings of his nature. The financial statement of the Homes shows receipts amounting to £25,569, a goodly sum in excess of the disbursements.

Before the public meeting, a choir of 600 boys and girls from the Homes rendered a selection of melodies, Mr. J. Proudman being conductor. Lord HERSCHELL occupied the chair, and, in the course of a sympathetic speech, highly commended the work of the Homes, in which for twenty years he has taken a lively interest. At the outset he deplored the fact that, notwithstanding the large amount of effort put forth, hardly the outskirts of the evil have been touched. Referring then to the other side of the picture, he rejoiced that by such agencies so many children have been rescued from poverty, and misery, and vice. Having gone out into the world, the thousands of boys and girls have not only been better off than they would otherwise have been; but, on becoming heads of families, they exercise an influence receiving its high and noble character from the careful training they have undergone. So it is impossible to say to what limits the blessings of such work may extend. After speaking of the kindness which the poor show for the poor, the speaker called upon his hearers to have a like sympathy for the young whose lot is cast in evil surroundings. Turning then to the children on the orchestra, his Lordship in kindly terms urged them to make the best of their time while in the Training Homes, and thus to arm themselves for the battle of life.

Canon BARKER, in a vigorous speech, enlarged upon the decrease of destitution among the young, attributing the improved state of things to the operation of the Elementary Education Acts, by means of which parents have been compelled to discharge their responsibilities to their children. Rev. R. J. SIMPSON, who followed, admitted that the duties of parents have in this way been enforced, but maintained that in a sadly large number of cases children who cannot exactly be described as homeless are worse than destitute, as they are brought up in surroundings highly prejudicial to their moral and spiritual welfare.

Rev. J. JACKSON WRAY also delivered a hearty address, and spoke some earnest words of counsel to the children. In the course of the evening, James MacQueen, one of the crew of the Missouri, the ship which rescued the crew of the unfortunate Danmark, was introduced to the audience. The secretary of the institutions is Mr. William Williams, Boys' Refuge, 25, Great Queen-street, W.C.

EMIGRANTS AND LODGERS.

THE friends of the Blackwall Emigrants' Home and Victoria Lodging-house recently met at 41, Commercial-street, to praise God for another year of blessing. Six years have passed since the Emigrants' Home at Blackwall was opened, but no year has witnessed more decisions for Christ than the present. After a time of earnest praise and prayer, Mr. James E. Mathieson, of Mildmay, opened the meeting with a few words of encouragement. Mr. T. A. Denny and Mr. E. Trotter spoke of the progress of the work, its great need and the necessity which the committee felt for opening other lodging-houses similar to the Victoria Home. Mr. Wilké, the energetic and earnest manager, said that, while giving the numbers of those who had passed through the Homes, it was impossible to give statistics of conversions. Mr. Rivolta gave a graphic account of some of the scenes he had witnessed at the Emigrants' Home, and of cases he had himself come in contact with. They were among the most hallowed memories of his life.

The visitors then went down into the kitchen, where about 500 lodgers had been invited to a substantial meat tea. A Gospel meeting followed. A large number of men came upstairs into the hall, and listened with rapt attention to Mrs. Barney, of America, who spoke with much power and sympathy. Many hearts were touched as she related how strong, wild characters at the silver mines in the Rocky Mountains, and others in prisons, had been won for Christ. At the end of her too short message all hands went up with a request that she would come again shortly and speak to them. Mr. Howland, late Mayor of Toronto, followed with fresh and vigorous words as to God's ability to save. Many of the men remained for an after-meeting, and individual dealing went on to a late hour.

The 500 beds at the Victoria Home are almost nightly filled, and if another Home of 500 beds were opened the committee feel sure they too would be soon occupied. Since the opening of the Emigrants' Home some 65,300 persons of all nationalities have passed through it, and during the last six months of the Victoria Home 83,879 beds have been occupied.

Some £5000 would be required to open another Home. Mr. T. A. Denny, 7, Connaught-place, W., or Mr. E. Trotter, 5, Montagu-square, W., will be happy to give full particulars. Mr. Wilké will be glad to receive cast-off clothes or letters for hospitals and convalescent homes on behalf of his lodgers.

TORQUAY.—Mrs. George Brealey, 12, Elstow-terrace, Hatfield-road, Torquay, writes to tell of renewed strength and blessing on her work. The Home for friendless and fallen which she visits is now quite full. Many of the inmates, it is hoped, will go forth to a new life, as a work of grace has been going on in the hearts of several. Many are now awaiting situations, and ladies are invited to give a helping hand to those tempted and tried ones. Communications may be sent to Mrs. Brealey, or to the Matron, "Door of Hope," Upton, Torquay. Ladies' cast-off clothing would be very acceptable.

The Book World.

THE SERMON BIBLE: Psalm lxxvii. to Song of Solomon. 7s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton. The character of this work is indicated by its title. It is not a commentary, but an exceedingly wise and suggestive collection of sermon outlines, culled from the works of preachers well known, able, and devout. The outlines are brief, but full, and cannot fail to prove a valuable help to the student.

LES HÉROÏNES DE HARLEM. Messrs. Hachette & Co. have published an edition of this thrilling episode in the history of the Netherlands, by Madame de Witt, which should prove very useful to young people studying French. Carefully edited with grammatical and explanatory notes, and a French and English vocabulary by M. Paul E. E. Barbier, of the South Wales University College, it is calculated admirably to smooth the student's path. Several illustrations add to the attractiveness of the book.

EXODUS: "HANDBOOKS FOR BIBLE-CLASSES" SERIES. By Rev. Dr. Macgregor. 2s. Edinburgh: T. & T. Clark. The second part of this useful work comprises a sound and thorough treatment of chap. xv. to the end of the book. The first volume was devoted to the redemption of Israel, this to the subsequent consecration. The introduction, commentary, and notes on special topics are alike admirable, every page bearing witness to careful investigation and independent thought on the part of the author.

PATERNOSTER. By Gilbert Karney. W. Hunt & Co. These studies in the Lord's Prayer are affectionately dedicated to the congregation of St. John's Church, Downshire-hill, Hampstead, of which, until recently, the author was incumbent. The subject is treated in ten short chapters with excellent clearness, doubtful questions of interpretation being ever regarded as secondary in importance to the design of affording the reader practical spiritual instruction. We trust many will avail themselves of this manual, which forcibly presents much of the beauty and wealth of the prayer which our Lord taught his disciples.

WORDS IN SEASON. Short sermons for the times, preached from the pulpit of a country church. Edinburgh: J. Menzies & Co., 12, Hanover-street. Eighteen plain discourses, directing self-examination, and promoting earnestness of life. The author, who remains nameless, says in the preface that, were it not for the fact that a hall for Sunday-school and congregational purposes is much required in his parish, he would not have given these discourses into the hands of the printer. The object in publication is to raise money on behalf of the building fund. This endeavour is as praiseworthy as the sermons are distinctly practical and edifying.

IMPRESSIONS OF AUSTRALIA. By Rev. R. W. Dale, D.D. 5s. Hodder & Stoughton. Dr. Dale's articles on Australia, contributed to The Contemporary Review, have been revised and amplified, and are now given to the public in a substantial and well-arranged volume. The author, during his late visit to the Antipodes, kept his eyes and ears open to some purpose. Though he was but three and a half months in the country, he is able to present in these pages much general information as to the people and the land, and a great variety of specific fact about such important questions as education, politics, religion and morals, &c. Need we say that in the expression of his own views Dr. Dale is cautious and balanced and impartial as one would expect. He evidently has received a very favourable impression of the enterprise, the resources, and the prospects of the colonists, and this book is sure to win their acceptance.

THE BIBLES OF ENGLAND. By A. Edgar, D.D. Alexander Gardner, Paisley and London. This work meets a distinct want in the reading world. Many books have been published on English versions of the Bible, but few, if any, have set out with the precise object Dr. Edgar had in view in writing this "plain account for plain people." That object has been to point out the differentiation of successive versions, and the literary peculiarities which in each translation most readily attract the attention of common English readers. In this way an attempt has been made to show how dissatisfaction with one version led to the publication of another, and, moreover, as much of the history of each version is given as will indicate the persistent labour that for five hundred years has been spent upon the perfection of the English Bible. The entire performance is most praiseworthy, every page bristling with facts and incidents of lively interest to Bible readers. The extracts from the various versions, copious and wisely chosen, are in a high degree illustrative. It may be added that this volume will prove of great assistance to students of English literature, as a comparison of the ancient and modern versions of the Bible in English affords an excellent insight into the structure and history of the language itself.

THE DOCTRINES AND PRACTICES OF THE JESUITS. By Henry Charles Groves, D.D. 1s. Protestant Alliance, 9, Strand, London. A timely publication, in which the doctors of the Church of Rome tell their own story. It is made perfectly plain that the Jesuit order remains to-day the same as it was when first constituted, and that every doctrine and principle, every point of instruction and rule of life, which were set forth when the order was in the worst possible odour—when, indeed, the Church of Rome rose in revolt against it and cast it out—are held and acted upon, and promulgated at the present time. This book, to which the Bishop of Clogher writes a lucid introduction, should act as a solemn warning against one of the dangers of our day. We trust it will have a wide circulation, and that its contents will awaken among Protestants a determination to resist on all hands the working of the Romish leaven.

OUTLINES OF CHRISTIAN DOCTRINE. By Rev. H. C. G. Moule, M.A. 2s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton. This volume of the "Theological Educator" series is deserving of hearty commendation. Though making no pretensions to originality, and only professing to furnish "outlines," the book is remarkably comprehensive, and, from first to last, characterised by freshness of thought and expression. Decidedly evangelical in substance, and deeply spiritual in tone, the work will undoubtedly prove of great assistance to such as need succinctly written accounts of doctrines, both from historical and theological points of view. Mr. Moule writes as a Churchman, and his judgment may not on all subjects commend itself to members of other communions; but, while on great themes his book is always sound, on disputed questions it is not dogmatic. Sunday-school teachers and others requiring a systematisation of Christian doctrine cannot do better than procure these "outlines," which scholars generally will peruse with pleasure and profit.

WHY PRIESTS SHOULD WED. By Justin D. Fulton, D.D. John Kensit. There will, no doubt, be a difference of opinion as to the wisdom of publishing this book. And as the "Confessional" is unfit for any innocent female, because of the suggestions contained in the questions of the priest; so this book will appear objectionable for the same reason. Yet, in a greatly diminished degree; for the author has written with evident purity of motive, and has carefully expunged many passages from his quotations, which would have strengthened his case against the Papacy, but might have proved injurious to the reader. We are disposed to think that he has done his work well, and that his book ought to be read by those in danger of being enticed to the confessional, and by guardians of children who may be tempted to entrust the young to the care of Roman Catholic teachers. Silence upon the subject of Rome's crimes and immoralities has proved a mistaken policy. It is time that light were let in upon the convents and nunneries, and that the true character of the priests, resulting from the unnatural system of celibacy, were known. As an argument against celibacy Dr. Fulton's book is unanswerable.

Among Mr. J. Kensit's penny Protestant publications are FOXE'S BOOK OF MARTYRS, an abridgment of the large work of that title; and IS THERE NOT A CAUSE? a series of articles on the Lincoln case, reprinted from The English Churchman.

BREAN DOWN: Festivals and Events of 2000 Years, by Silver Spur. 1s. W. Mack. To dwellers in the neighbourhood of Weston-super-Mare this pamphlet may be interesting, though written in a curious rambling style. The historical associations are of wider interest than the chit-chat about past generations of squires.

HELPFUL THOUGHTS. By One who is Stepping Westward. 1s. 6d. Nisbet & Co. A wreath of fresh, devout thoughts gathered by a practised hand. The book is a nice gift for elder girls and scholars as they step out into the world for the first time. Illustrations, such as that from Niagara, indelibly stamp Scripture truths on young minds.

A SERVANT OF THE KING. By Anna Warner. 1s. Nisbet & Co. This is a worthy tribute to Rev. G. Ainstie, a missionary hero among the Choctaws, and afterwards a vigorous home worker in Minnesota. Cold, hunger, fatigue, threats never turned him aside from his Master's service one hair's breadth. His wife was no less devoted, and cheerfully "endured hardness" for the Gospel's sake.

DR. PARKER'S COMMENTARY.*

DR. PARKER finds congenial work in dealing with these Old Testament characters. His criticisms and comments upon their conduct receive additional value by their application to men to-day. No one expects to agree with everything he says; he has the merit of originality both in thought and in expression. But his readiness to detect the wrong and his severity in denouncing it, make all his writings to be interesting and profitable. We could sometimes desire a clearer statement of Gospel truth especially where his thought seems to lead up to it. Is not the close of the following quotation disappointing?

"God cannot cure sin. 'The wages of sin is death,' and God cannot alter that law. He would cease to be God if He could conjure with morality. Then must man die under his weight of sin? Yes, but he may die in one of two ways; in a way that is hopeless, or in a way that prepares for the incoming of the Son of Man with all the pathos, the majesty, and the glory of his cross" (p. 6).

The indefiniteness of the explanation of man's dying for sin disappoints us. Can any of his readers quite understand it? In a "People's Bible," the Doctor should put his thought upon this subject in such a way that the people can apprehend his meaning. To us this appears like a skilful avoidance of the doctrine of the atoning death of Christ.

But the work abounds in excellent passages. The thought of the following passage needs emphasising to-day:—

"Let a man lose his reverence for God, and his reverence for man, however much he may boast of it, will, in that measure, go down: the two commandments belong to one another, and are absolutely inseparable. Increase of true reverence towards God always means increase of real beneficence towards man, for there is a deep and mysterious sense, as well as a sense limited by the creation, that man is made in the image and likeness of God, so that when God is most feared, loved, and honoured, man is blessed by the increase of religious conviction and emotion" (p. 23).

The prayers, at the beginning of the chapters, are much too beautiful and ornate to suit us. Personally, we should find it difficult to pray in such a style; but, if they suit the Doctor, we feel that the ground is too delicate for criticism.

* THE PEOPLE'S BIBLE. Joseph Parker, D.D. Vol. x. 2 Chronicles xxi.—Esther. Hazell, Watson & Viney.

LEPERS IN BARBADOES.—A correspondent writes:—"I am acquainted with a brother in the Lord and his wife, both now over eighty, who for many years have laboured in Barbadoes in the work of the Lord, and specially in the Lazaretto. Amongst those meeting in the name of the Lord are many lepers; indeed, there is one gathering entirely of such. When last in England I had the privilege to meet our brother, and no one could be unmoved who listened to his simple accounts of the faith, joy, and at same time sufferings, of these dear people. I mention this to ask for praise for such work in saving souls, and prayer for this aged servant of Christ, that he may be sustained in his work and cheered by seeing yet many more souls, with such marred caskets of bodies, brought to Christ."

JAFFA MEDICAL MISSION AND HOSPITAL.—The report for last year of this interesting institution is a record of continued prosperity. The attendances of out-door patients reached the aggregate of 13,217, the highest number on any single day being 138. The in-patients numbered 511, two cribs and a cradle having been added to the 42 beds previously in use. In each case the large proportion of the persons deriving benefit were Moslems, but there has been a decided increase in Jewish patients. The Sunday-school and mothers' meetings continue to prove very useful. By means of the Mission thousands of Moslems have been brought under the hearing of the Gospel. On all sides there are reports of religious work being impeded; but, thank God, this goes on steadily. Anything that affects woman reckons for little in the eyes of the Moslem, and so the important work of the Mission, which has been so much blessed to the female portion of the community, excites nothing like hostility. The fact that it is carried on with tact and genuine friendliness to the people undoubtedly counts for much. The hon secretary of the institution is Miss Cooke, 68, Mildmay-park, N.

THE BIT OF BLUE.

OH, wherefore doff the bit of blue
Through careless want of thought,
While still the drink-fiend grins to see
The mischief he hath wrought?

We hear of eyes that gaze in vain
Through mart and crowded street;
They scan the coat, they scan the dress,
But fail the sign to meet.

The bit of blue has worked for good
In days that are gone by,
Has given courage to the weak,
And gladdened many an eye;

Has nerved the undecided one
To take a bolder stand,
And been to some in danger's hour,
A friendly, outstretched hand.

O sister, brother, pause and think,
Your former zeal renew;
And let not scoffers ask again,
"Where is the bit of blue?"

Hang out the little speaking flag,
A fresh crusade to make;
And count it joy to wear the blue
For Christ your Master's sake.

CANON HOARE.—We regret to hear that this venerable clergyman is very ill; it is feared that his life cannot be prolonged many months.

THE STATE REGULATION OF VICE.—The fifth part of THE DAWN, a quarterly record of the progress of the work of the British, Continental, and General Federation for the Abolition of the State Regulation of Vice, contains communications (some of them very important) from India, New Zealand, Holland, and other countries. It is gratifying to observe that much vigour continues to be thrown into the protest against principles of a demoralising character. The provisional programme of the Geneva Triennial Congress is given. Edited by Mrs. Josephine Butler, THE DAWN may be had, in London, from Messrs. Dyer Bros., Paternoster-square.

DOCTRINAL AND CONTROVERSIAL INDEX. By Rev. Charles H. H. Wright, D.D. 1d. J. Kensit. A compilation for the use of Bible-readers. Was ever such a body of systematic Scripture teaching compressed into so small a compass? Truth is clearly defined, and error brought to the light of God's Word. The work of a scholar of wide reputation, even on debatable points, this book sets forth no view for which strong arguments may not be adduced.

Evangelistic Notes.

Major W. E. Penn, evangelist, has recently held two weeks' evangelistic services at Trenton, Tennessee, U.S.A.

Cork.—The Christians have been gladdened here by a visit from Mr. Chas. Inglis who held a mission from May 29 to June 3. His Bible-talks at noon were very helpful. God owned him also in the Gospel meetings, for some professed to pass from death unto life, and backsliders were restored.

Albert Hall, Nottingham.—The spiritual part of the work is progressing well under the superintendence and Gospel preaching of Mr. J. Flanagan. His present term at the Hall has lasted for nearly a year, and during that time not a single Sabbath has passed without souls professing to find the Saviour. There are signs of a good work of grace.

The Bible and Gospel Van, with its workers, is now again in active service, in the busy Lancashire towns. We have been cheered with the attention and deep interest manifested by the crowds who stand to hear the Gospel and the ready way in which the Bibles and books have been bought by them.

J. WHARTON and L. WEAVER.

Dalmeny.—A three weeks' mission has been completed here, conducted by George Gray, of the Lanarkshire Christian Union. It was a time of refreshing from the presence of the Lord. A noteworthy feature of the visit was a two weeks' series of short addresses to the Forth Bridge men at their dinner hour. The Gospel message was listened to with interested attention by the men.

Devonport.—Mr. Henry Thorne has held a seventeen days' mission in the Public Hall, Devonport, under the auspices of the Y.M.C.A. The meetings have been well attended throughout, the people listening with attention to the Gospel message told out with much pathos and power. Not a Gospel meeting has passed without some cases of professed decision for Christ. The daily Bible-readings have been a source of much help and blessing.

Mr. Josiah Spiers has concluded a most successful fortnight's mission in connection with our church, St. Cuthbert's, West Hampstead. The attendance at the services was extremely good, and, what is better still, our hearts have been cheered by the evident reality of the conversion of considerable numbers of the children. As is usually the case, many grown-up people who accompanied the children have also received blessing.

WALTER J. WATKINS, Vicar of St. Cuthbert's.

Evangelistic Mission.—With the return of summer weather, the tents of this Mission are out in many parts of the country. At Syresham (Oxford) the evangelists report a very good start. On the 10th a move was to be made to Brackley for ten days' services. Another tent is pitched at Sutton (Cambridgeshire), and a third at Sutton (Surrey). Other tents will be immediately erected at Kentish Town-road and Upton Park, also at Brynmawr (South Wales), and in the Isle of Thanet.

North Camp, Aldershot. — Mr. Thomas Wales, of the Evangelisation Society, commenced a tent mission in the grounds of Soldiers' Home, on May 4. The mission will be continued to August 31. The militia, now in the camp on Cave Common, are brought into the meetings by the workers. Again, several thousand tracts, &c., have been distributed in camp. Small Gospel books, leaflets, &c., will be most gratefully received by Mr. J. Poate, Sherbourne-road, Farnborough, Hants.

A three weeks' mission at Tynecastle and Dalby-road, Edinburgh, conducted by Mr. M. Steedman, has been brought to a close. The first two weeks' services were in the mission church of St. Michael's parish, in charge of Rev. George Wilson (late of Cramond), and the last week's services were in the Dalby Free Church Hall, the charge of Rev. Alexander Roger. The services were well attended, and the tokens of the Divine blessing have cheered the hearts of Christians. It has been a time of refreshing for them, and we have grounds for rejoicing that the mission has been the means of bringing souls to the Saviour. One of the happy features of the mission was the cordial way in which the office-bearers and workers of the two churches co-operated in the work of the mission. Mr. Steedman is an evangelist of experience, and his bright, earnest, direct, and Scriptural addresses were most helpful to all who heard them.

Cycling Evangelists.—The members of the Whittington-avenue Y.M.C.A. have formed themselves into a Bicycle and Tricycle Mission Band, for the purpose of holding on Saturday afternoons open-air meeting amongst those villages around London that are untouched by the usual evangelistic effort. They have been very much encouraged in past service. They need helpers, and will be glad to hear from friends who will invite them to villages and help in the singing. As a rule there is no difficulty in securing an audience. Communications to Mr. C. J. Braddick, hon. sec. of the Cycle Branch, Y.M.C.A., Whittington-avenue, E.C.

Rev. W. Haslam's engagements are as follows:—Portman Rooms, Baker-street, W., at 3.30, June 14. St. John's Church, Chelsea, Saturday, 15, at 8 p.m.; Sunday, 16, at 11 a.m., 3 p.m., 7 p.m.; 17 to 19, 3 p.m. and 8 p.m. June 30, at St. John's Church, Hoxton, morning and evening.

THE OPEN-AIR MISSION.

FEW reports are more neatly presented to the public than that of the Open-air Mission, and the thirty-sixth, just issued,* is ahead of previous ones in this respect. Short paragraphs, varied type, good paper, and pictorial illustrations, all combine to please the eye. But the matter is not a whit behind, being carefully selected, sifted, and arranged. To those who doubt the good accomplished by this primitive mode of promoting the Gospel, this report must come as a revelation. While the critics are idling away their time, this noble band of 1000 volunteers is occupying the high places of the field, confronting the King's enemies on the one hand, and, on the other, bringing in the sheaves. Of the 412 conversions recorded by 119 of the members, 18 specimen cases are given, including the following:—

THE PARSON'S STREET SERMON.

Rev. E. Bachelor Russell, of Douglas, Isle of Man, reports:—Was asked to visit an old man, very ill. Found him apparently dying, but very happy, trusting in Jesus. I asked him how long he had known the Lord as his Saviour. He replied with a smile, "only a few weeks." He then related how he came over from England a short time before to live with his son. One evening he heard some one was speaking out in the market-place, and was told it was the parson. "What!" he exclaimed, "a parson speaking in the open air. I never heard of such a thing. I must go and hear him." He could not stop very long on account of the cold, "but," he said, "I heard enough, and, praise the Lord, I have been trusting Him ever since." Mr. Russell adds that, contrary to expectation, the man recovered. He has often seen him since, and testifies that he continues to lead a consistent life.

SAVED AT THE FAIR.

While Rev. W. J. Holder was labouring at Bedford Regatta last September, a Christian woman told him a sad story about her drunken husband, for whom she asked his prayers. But her own case was an encouraging one to workers at these gatherings for the people. Some years ago, when she also indulged in strong drink, she lived at Peterborough. During the fair an open-air meeting was held near a public-house, outside which she was standing. She listened to the preaching, and the Word was blest to the saving of her soul. She is now a church member, though sorely persecuted by her husband. "But," she said, "the blessed Lord, who met and saved such a sinner as I am can and will, I am sure, save my poor husband."

The special agents of the Mission visited 649 fairs, races, and other special gatherings, and altogether more than a million tracts were put into circulation.

The "Echoes from Abroad" include thirteen countries, and from them we regret to learn that the gambling mania of the old country is rapidly spreading over our fair colonies. "Efforts at Epsom" show what may be done at a race carnival. The whole of this record should be carefully read by those who want to know how to reach the masses.

* May be had at the Office of the Open-Air Mission, 14, Duke-street, Adelphi, London, W.C. Price Sixpence.

"A Huguenot Memorial" (see last issue).—M. Paul Bouchard has returned to his work at Beaune, Côte-d'Or, France. Monetary gifts may be paid to Messrs. BARCLAY, RANSOM & Co., 1, Pall Mall East, London.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

The Bishop of London has decided to appeal to the Court of Appeal against the recent judgment of the Queen's Bench Division in the St. Paul's reredos case.

The Bishop of Lincoln has determined, it is stated, to submit himself absolutely to the Archbishop of Canterbury. In the course of a few weeks, therefore, it is likely the charges made against him will be tried on their merits.

The Bishop of Wakefield (Dr. Walsham How) presided at the annual meeting of men in connection with the White Cross Society, on Monday week, at Exeter Hall. The report stated that it was proposed to organise a hundred public meetings in the more important centres of the population, and also to appoint four travelling secretaries as soon as the funds permitted.

The Ven. William Lefroy, incumbent of St. Andrew's, Liverpool, and Archdeacon of Warrington, has been appointed to the Deanery of Norwich in succession to Dr. Goulborn. The new Dean is an evangelical and Protestant Churchman, and has long been known as a spiritually-minded preacher of marked power, and a devoted incumbent in a parish peculiarly difficult to work.

The second of a series of Jewish services was held in Christ Church, Spitalfields, whither the rector (Rev. J. H. Scott) had invited all his Jewish parishioners, on Thursday evening, last week, that being the second day of the "Feast of Weeks." The preacher was Rev. A. I. McCaul, rector of St. Magnus, London Bridge, who discoursed in German, interspersed with Hebrew quotations. The attention and interest of the congregation was greatly increased when the preacher quoted from the Jewish Prayer-book, and demonstrated the anomaly of Jewish unbelief from their own formularies. The large attendance too was very gratifying, and the good conduct of the Jews most encouraging.

CONGREGATIONAL.

A mission-hall, to be worked by members of the congregation of the church at South Eston, assisted by lay preachers from Middlesborough and Stockton, was opened the other day at Grangetown. Rev. T. J. Leslie presided.

Rev. J. Cropper, of Enfield Highway, conducts a weekly open-air service, lasting for about thirty minutes, during the dinner hour of the employés at the Royal Small Arms Factory, Enfield Lock. His addresses are listened to with close attention by the numerous workmen.

Lady Henry Somerset and Mr. G. Tyndall laid, on the 24th ult., memorial-stones of a new mission-hall in course of erection at South-park, Reigate, for the continuance of evangelistic work which has now been carried on in that district for thirty years. Rev. G. J. Adeney, of Reigate, mentioned that 200 years before, on that day, the Act of Toleration was signed by William III.

BAPTIST.

Special meetings for the deepening of spiritual life were held in the Baptist Church at Broughton, Hants, on Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday (May 28–30) by Rev. J. Smith, of Romsey, and A. W. Wood, pastor. On Thursday, 30th ult., five were baptized on confession of faith.

The death is announced of another Congo missionary, Rev. Samuel Silvey, who had been in Africa since the early part of 1883, died on April 24 last, while on his way home to England, after a relapse of African fever, and was buried at sea between Kabinda and Sao Thome.

The Birmingham memorial to the late Rev. Hugh Stowell Brown unites the sympathies of many denominations. The chairman, Sir D. Radcliffe, is an Episcopalian; Mr. W. Oulton, J.P., a Wesleyan; Mr. W. Crosfield, J.P., a Congregationalist; and Mr. T. Holder, J.P., a Presbyterian.

The Committee of the Baptist Missionary Society has accepted another missionary for the Congo, Mr. J. Lawson Forfeitt, brother to Mr. W. L. Forfeitt, of Regent's-park College, who sailed for the Congo on April 26. Mr. Forfeitt is an active member of the church in King's-road, Reading. He has had a first-class business training, and while going out as a missionary, will have specially assigned to him the business part of the mission. He is the third member of King's-road Church who has volunteered for Congo Mission work.

Mr. C. H. Spurgeon preached on Thursday evening last week, in his own Tabernacle, on behalf of the British and Foreign Sailors' Society. There were several hundred seamen present. The text was Ps. lxv. 5: "By terrible things in righteousness wilt Thou answer us, O God of our salvation; who art the confidence of all the ends of the earth, and of them that are afar off upon the sea." The sermon will be printed and scattered world wide.

Mr. Spurgeon has just been admitted a personal member of the Surrey and Middlesex Baptist Association. In the course of an address at the meeting at which Mr. Spurgeon was elected, Rev. J. S. Hockey asked, What can we do for the counties of Surrey and Middlesex? Is it practicable for us pastors to get out in pairs, say for a week or fortnight, or longer, and preach the word on every village green and in every market-place in these counties? Mr. Spurgeon said he thought they ought to have a colporteur both for Surrey and Middlesex, and he promised to give £40 a year for one for the former county. Subscriptions were also raised for a colporteur for the county of Middlesex.

During the summer the services at the Baptist Chapel, Railton-road, Herne-hill (Pastor F. Carter), are transferred to a tent for the sake of the larger accommodation.

PRESBYTERIAN.

The South London Presbytery purpose holding an open-air service at Blackheath on Sunday afternoon.

Rev. Daniel Gunn, late minister of the North Free Church, Dumbarton, has accepted a call to the pastorate of the church at Lewes, Sussex.

The King of Italy has offered the Italian Waldensian Church, which celebrates this year the bi-centenary of its return to its own country, the sum of £200 as a memorial of the event.

On Tuesday evening, last week, in connection with the Regent-square Presbyterian Church, a large open-air service was held in front of the Metropolitan railway station, King's-cross, conducted by Rev. John McNeill. There was some singing by a choir, and Mr. McNeill delivered a powerful Gospel address, based upon the words: "Awake thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light."

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

The Christian Worker, of the 23rd ult., in an able leader, deals with "Encouraging Prospects for Philadelphia," referring specially to the Yearly Meeting's Committee for Gospel meetings, the Women's Foreign Missionary Association, growing work in Twelfth-street Meeting, and deepening and increasing interest in meetings for worship in Elizabeth Farnum's Home.

The New York World, May 8, says:—"The finest hospital in the world was opened to the public yesterday. It was built and endowed from the savings of a Quaker merchant, named John Hopkins, who held through life that his wealth was a sort of sacred stewardship. He accumulated money for the benefit of humanity, and his name will live in history."

In The Friends' Review of the 23rd ult. Helen B. Harris gives a most interesting description of "Holy Week" in Jerusalem, which she has witnessed. She says: "When a church leaves the simplicity of faith, and gives itself up to multiplying outward symbols and signs, nothing can prevent it sinking into a degradation and superstition in no way to be distinguished, that I can see, from the performances of heathens."

In the same paper are communications from Mexico, Barbadoes, and Japan, of a very instructive character, indicating open doors and urgent calls for more workers there. Mary Anne Marriage Allen and Henry S. Newman are actively at work in America.

METHODIST.

It has been stated that religious services are conducted by the Wesleyan Methodist body in 5755 villages in Great Britain, the number of seats provided being 871,581, no fewer than 528 village chapels having been built during the last twenty years.

The London Wesleyan Mission Committee has resolved to ask for the appointment of Rev. W. D. Walters as an additional minister to the Mission, with a view to his ultimate appointment as General Secretary, in succession to Rev. J. E. Clapham.

Rev. Edward Smith has definitely decided to retire from the oversight of the Clerkenwell centre of the London Wesleyan Mission. It is expected that Rev. T. Ogden Taylor will succeed him in this important work, while Rev. J. H. Hopkins, of East Dulwich, will be appointed to the charge of the new mission in Southwark.

Mrs. Wiseman, who lately returned from a six months' visit to the mission schools and zenana workers in Ceylon and India, has been addressing meetings in Leeds and neighbourhood. She said she found the zenanas far worse places than she had imagined them to be. She urged young ladies who could support themselves to enter upon the work.

Some two months ago, Mr. Jonathan Daddow, of Cornwall, commenced work at Acton-green as a lay evangelist. Much blessing has rested upon his labours. The congregations at the chapel have more than doubled, and many have decided for Christ. A mission band has been started, and is doing good work in singing and speaking in the streets and visiting the homes.

Rev. Theophilus Woolmer has, owing to old age, resigned his appointment as book steward of the Wesleyan Methodist Connexion, an office which he has held for many years. Mr. Strange, the lay manager of the Wesleyan book-room, having completed his fifty years of service there, is to be presented with a purse of a hundred guineas to commemorate his jubilee.

Rev. J. E. Clapham has sent an evangelist to the village of Armitage to reopen a Wesleyan chapel which has been closed for five years. The evangelist, says The Methodist Times, "has formed a little Methodist society of ten members, and by house-to-house visitation, open-air preaching, children's services, &c., he has awakened a good deal of attention, and convinced the peasants of the neighbourhood that Methodism has not yet retired from the business of rural evangelisation."

Rev. Dr. Falding, chairman of the Congregational Union, was a speaker at a missionary meeting in Talbot-lane Wesleyan Chapel, Rotherham, and said he was glad to find that there were no signs of missionary interest wanting amongst Methodists. He trusted the day would soon come when they would all feel that, whilst there might be some points that would keep them asunder from one another—it would be a long time before they got over all that—he hoped they would recognise the unity of the Christian spirit, and all true Christians would be willing to unite hand and heart in the service of our Lord Jesus Christ.

NOTES FROM SCOTLAND.

A meeting was held in Edinburgh on Monday week to congratulate Rev. Dr. Murray Mitchell, the veteran Indian missionary, now minister of the Scotch church at Nice, on his ministerial jubilee. The Free Church Moderator (Rev. Dr. Laird) presided.

During the sitting of the Free Church Assembly the Moderator intimated the receipt of a telegram, stating that Dr. Selim Daoud, the interim medical missionary of the church at Tiberias, had been drowned while bathing. Dr. Daoud was the son of a Damascus merchant, and studied medicine at Edinburgh.

NOTES FROM IRELAND.

Rev. G. C. Grubb commences a five days' mission at Newmarket-on-Fergus on Sunday next.

A successful series of Gospel mission services has been held at Kinsale by Rev. John Hadden.

Miss Bax and Miss Smith have been holding evangelistic services in Queen-street Methodist Church, Lurgan. Night after night large numbers attended the meetings, and several remarkable cases of conversion have occurred.

A noteworthy instance of fraternal feeling between Presbyterians and Episcopalians has taken place at Belfast, where the Moderator of the General Assembly opened a sale of work, the object of which was to raise funds for the aid of poorer episcopal parishes in other parts of Ireland.

The summer campaign of tent services has been opened auspiciously at Dungannon, a flourishing town in County Tyrone. Mr. Robert Clarke, one of the evangelists connected with Harcourt-street Baptist Chapel, Dublin, has been addressing crowded meetings with many tokens of blessing. From all parts of the country, says The Baptist, we hear of a thirst for the unadulterated Gospel, and even in Roman Catholic districts prejudice against the Bible is gradually breaking down.

The General Assembly has been in session in Belfast since Monday week, and will probably close its proceedings to-day. During that time it has got through a great deal of interesting business. Rev. William Clarke, of Bangor, was elected Moderator for the ensuing year. The Assembly will meet next year in July, in order to fittingly commemorate the jubilee of the Union, which took place on July 10, 1840, between the Synod of Ulster and the Secession Synod, and which resulted in the formation of the General Assembly.

FALLEN ASLEEP.

Rev. F. J. Braithwaite, rector of Great Waldingfield, Sudbury, Suffolk.—Rev. W. D. Thompson, vicar of St. Saviour's Church, Preston.—Rev. W. M. Shaw, for the last thirty-two years vicar of St. John's, Yealand Conyers, Carnforth, Lancashire, previously a missionary in Canada in connection with the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel.—At the advanced age of eighty-five, Dr. Roderick Millar, an elder in the Free English Church, Stornoway, Lewis, N.B., who was greatly esteemed for his consistent Christian character.—Rev. H. Geldart, missionary of the Universities' Mission in East Africa.

RATCLIFF STRANGERS' REST.—The monthly meeting of workers was held on Friday evening, Mr. James E. Mathieson presiding. Mr. J. T. Isaac emphasised the need of workers, and suggested that opportunity might be given by ministers and others interested in work amongst sailors to enable the workers to give some account of its operations. Allusion was also made to the necessity of establishing a new Rest for sailors further east, as many ships go into the docks down the river. £100 has been given to start this work. An interesting address was given by Rev. Jas. Neil, on "Desert Life; or the Witness of a Palestine Wilderness," illustrated by views. Surgeon-Major Pringle, at the close, alluded to the importance of studying the Bible with a knowledge of Eastern manners and customs, as he had himself proved by long residence in the East.

PRINCESS LOUISE HOME.—The Marquis of Lorne presided on Saturday afternoon over the annual meeting and distribution of prizes in connection with the Princess Louise Home and National Society for the Protection of Young Girls, in the Lower Exeter Hall. Mr. A. M. Gillham, the secretary, was able to report an increased income and a small balance in hand. Eight girls have been provided with outfits and placed in service during the year, and five others have entered into permanent employment in the Home as assistants in the laundry department, which is a staple source of support. During the fifty-four years the Home has been in existence 1509 girls have been rescued through its agency. The Bishop of Bedford, Sir Lintorn Simmons, Rev. Canon Barker, Mr. Ruthven Pym, and others spoke on behalf of the work.

Bath Y.M.C.A.—The Committee have appointed Mr. Albert H. White (late Assistant Secretary Y.M.C.A., Bristol) as General Secretary of the Association.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, JUNE 16.—Numbers XXXIV.

IN this chapter we have the boundaries of the inheritance of Israel on the west side of Jordan. The Israelites never actually possessed all this territory, except temporarily in the palmy days of David and Solomon. They resemble many Christians, who are living far below their privileges, content with a portion only of that blessed state of enjoyment and usefulness which is ours in Christ. And there is surely coming a time when Israel shall literally inherit every inch of that land which is theirs in the counsels of God (Rom. xi. 29).

The south border (3) was from the extremity of the Dead Sea, through Kadesh-barnea, to the ancient brook of Sihor, called the river of Egypt.

The western border (6) was the Great Sea, great in comparison with the small inland lakes of their country.

The northern border (7) ran from the shore of the Mediterranean to the highest summits of the Lebanon range (here called Mount Hor, the great mountain), and away to Baalbek. Compare Ezek. xlviii. 1.

The eastern border (10).—Hazar-enan is the village of fountains, where probably the Jordan took its rise; and thus the boundary line was in all likelihood the river itself in its flow from its earliest springs to the great Dead Sea.

The appointment of the princes, by name, who were to divide the land, in connection with Joshua, the military leader, and Eleazar, the priest, must have tended to raise the hopes of the people to certainty, and to prevent discord.

There are other limitations given of the Promised Land (Gen. xv. 18—21; Deut. i. 6—8, &c.), in some of which further boundaries are named. Those in this chapter were the least, whilst conquest was permitted to the further boundaries named. There are possibilities before us, for which God has apprehended us, which we shall do well to apprehend. Never content till we have possessed all which we may on this side of heaven (Phil. iii. 12).

MONDAY, JUNE 17.—Numbers XXXV.

The Levites had no land assigned to them among the tribes, but were distributed throughout the land in forty-eight cities (6, 7). Around each city a distance of 1000 cubits was measured for suburbs (3, 4). And around these suburbs a distance of 2000 cubits more was measured, as a pasture land for cattle. It was well to distribute the Levites thus, because they would act as salt in the midst of the people, teaching the law, administering justice, settling disputes (Lev. x. 10; 2 Chron. xix. 8; Mal. ii. 17). How carefully God provides for those who do his work. He becomes responsible for their maintenance.

The cities of refuge, six in number (6, 8), were so distributed that they were easily accessible from all parts of the land. They offered sanctuary to all who had committed homicide, until a judicial investigation could be held as to whether it was done with evil intent, and was, therefore, murder; or was done by accident. This would be adjudicated by the magistrates and Levites resident in the cities. For murder the penalty was death (30, 31; Exod. xxi. 14; 1 Kings ii. 28—34). But for accidental homicide there was freedom, so long as the man-slayer could reach the refuge in time, and would stay within its limits (24—28). Jesus is our refuge city, in whom we must abide; there only is salvation (Heb. vi. 18).

The institution of blood-avenger is almost a necessity in those lands of scattered population and rudimentary organisation. It is very ancient (Gen. iv. 14, xxvii. 45). It has led to great abuses. And here, without destroying the practice, it is placed under careful limitations. The justice of God is on the track of the sinner, even though he sins ignorantly; hence the need of sheltering in Jesus.

What a lovely promise is contained in ver. 34. Compare Ezek. xlviii. 35; Matt. xviii. 20; 2 Cor. vi. 16; Rev. xxi. 3.

TUESDAY, JUNE 18.—Numbers XXXVI.

We are here led back to the enactment of chap. xxvii. The elders and leaders of the tribe of Manasseh feared that, if the daughters of Zelophehad married into other tribes, they would take with them the property which they had recently acquired, and thus the territory of the tribe would become broken up. It was a reasonable objection (5). Moses immediately appreciated it, and, having consulted the word of the Lord, ordained that girls possessing an inheritance should ever after marry into their own tribe, so that the portions of the tribes would be kept intact (8).

God always does what is best for each of his children, but in such a manner that the good of the individual unit is consistent with the good of the whole community. How marvellous is it that whilst the weight of all the world impinges on the shoulders of Christ, yet He is minutely interested in each poor and needy one. There is not a cry of the weakest for vindication that He does not heed (Ps. xl. 17).

The distinct prohibition of keeping to the inheritance (7) reminds us of 1 Cor. vii. 18, &c. We are all so apt to rove and change. There is a spirit of unsettlement in us all. Let us be quite sure that we are where God would have us, and then stay there in his strength, and for his glory; until He clearly gives us an intimation to remove. "He shall choose our inheritance for us" (Ps. xlvii. 4).

"The plains of Moab" (13) was an extensive plateau on the north of the river Arnon, which had once belonged to the Moabites, till wrested from them by Sihon and Og, who now in their turn were dispossessed by Israel.

DEUTERONOMY.

THIS book, like the preceding ones, is called by the name given to it by the Greek translators. It means "the second law." This is a second edition of the law, with additions and explanations enforcing its spiritual character, and was the more needful, as a new race had gathered round the aged lawgiver. The book contains little of incident, but it is of great importance, because of its spiritual and hortatory character, which gave a model on which many after prophecies and addresses were formed. There are some four divisions:—

I. The four first chapters recapitulate the story of the wanderings from Horeb until the new generation had come to the confines of the Land of Promise—a story which was the text for solemn exhortation that they should not repeat their fathers' sins.

II. The following eight chapters rehearse the law, with many earnest pleadings that they should keep it, in all its commandments and statutes. It was looked on as a covenant between God and the people, and their obedience was, therefore, a necessary condition to receiving the benefits to which God pledged Himself.

III. The following chapters (xii.—xxvi.) give in detail the laws and regulations which should take place in the new land, and which they were to observe to do. The worship of God at the appointed place, the punishment of seducers to idolatry, the times and seasons of worship, together with moral, judicial, and ceremonial laws, are carefully mentioned.

IV. In chaps. xxvii.—xxx. we read the blessings and curses attached to obedience and disobedience; and Moses described the solemn scenes of the blessing and cursing on Mounts Ebal and Gerizim. Then follow the memorable chapters that tell how Israel would be scattered from their land; the advent of the Chaldeans and Romans is described with graphic and vivid minuteness; with assurance of restoration on repentance.

The remainder of the book (xxxi.—xxxiv.) contains the last address and song of the great Lawgiver, and the story of his death. A noble conclusion to one of the noblest books in Scripture. Our Lord frequently quoted from it, as we shall see. The key words are "Observe to do for thy good always," which occur like a perpetual refrain. We do well to remember, as we read, John xiv. 21—24.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 19.—Deuteronomy I.

The scene in which Moses spoke these closing words was the plains of Moab. "On this side Jordan" is rendered in R.V. "beyond Jordan." The Red Sea should be "over against Suph," a deep valley in that immediate neighbourhood. In another month Moses would climb Pisgah to die.

The distance, given in days, is mentioned (2) to show that the great number of years spent in travelling from Horeb to the margin of the Land of Promise was not owing to the length of the way, but to the necessary penalty of repeated sin. If we will not obey, our course as Christians cannot be straight or progressive.

The recapitulation of the story of the past (7, &c.) serves to introduce the various exhortations that succeed. We need not dwell on the stages seriatim, but on the words which may help our own life.

What a marvel to turn from the failure of the noblest men to the all-sufficiency of the Great Burden Bearer (12; Ps. lxviii. 19, R.V.; and 1 Pet. v. 7). What Moses failed to do, God did (31).

When God sets before us a land, whatever be the difficulties, we have simply to go right forward, and possess it, but it is a mistake to try to assure ourselves by sending spies (21, 22). A blind faith that goes forward, without asking, just trusting, is the happiest. God permitted the people to send spies, because they were set on it, but it was a mistake.

We need to keep just behind God, and then no enemy can stand before us for a single moment. The Good Shepherd precedes his sheep (John x. 4). The Great Overcomer overcomes in and for those who trust.

How careful we should be to walk with God! Disobedience to Him will lose the Land of Promise, will cut the sinews of our faith, and will hinder our prayers (35—46).

THURSDAY, JUNE 20.—Deuteronomy II.

In ver. 1 and 3 Moses comprised the whole of the thirty-eight years of wilderness wanderings. They had been refused passage on the western frontier of Edom, and had been obliged to retrace their steps slowly down the Arabah towards the Red Sea, and so they came round to the eastern and weaker frontier of Edom; and the people, which had haughtily repelled them before (Num. xx. 14—21), were now inclined, in the good providence of God, to give them a free passage. The natives also kindly supplied them with bread, meat, fruits, and water (28, 29). Thus may God make even our enemies to be at peace with us (Prov. xvi. 7). They lack nothing who travel with God. He knows all our need (7, and Luke xxii. 35).

They were forbidden to touch Moab or Ammon, because of their far-off connection with Lot (Gen. xix. 37, 38). So careful is God of his holy covenant; so true is He to his friends! For long generations He will remember and fulfil promises into which He has entered.

Zered was the southern border of Moab (13), and they passed through that country until they came to its northern border, the river Arnon (24), which lay between Moab and the kingdom of the Amorites. Notice that, before ever Israel appeared on the scenes, there had been great revolutions (20, &c.), and the hand of God had been compelled to destroy nations which had reached an excessive pitch of sin (Lev. xviii. 28).

A pacific offer was made, in all good faith, to Sihon, but he refused to meet it (26). God hardens hearts which have already hardened themselves against Him. The sun, which melts wax, hardens clay; but the fault is not with the sun, but with the clay.

FRIDAY, JUNE 21.—Deuteronomy III.

Had Og, the king of Bashan, remained within his city, the Israelites would have been foiled without special Divine help. But he came out (1). Perhaps Josh. xxiv. 12 may afford us a clue. Swarms of hornets may so have harassed them in their towns as to drive them out into the plains. Oh, how reassuring to hear God's "Fear not" as we enter the battle or undertake some new plan.

It is noticeable that recent discoveries confirm these records of the many stone cities of Bashan (4). There are immense numbers of remains, and it is a wonder how so many people could have subsisted on so small a tract of country. Porter says that the doors and gates are of stone, some of them nearly 18 in. thick. Some 500 ruined places still tell the might of the Amorites. The people thus acquired fertile and beautiful pasture-lands, as far as Hermon and including Gilead.

The bedstead (11) would measure 13½ ft., and the stature of the king might therefore have been 11 or 12 ft. Some think "bedstead" means coffin or bier.

"Unto this day" (14) was evidently inserted by Ezra, or some other pious man who arranged and edited the books of Moses.

Moses, like Paul, besonght the Lord to reverse his word (23; 2 Cor. xii. 8, 9). But there are some decisions which prayer cannot alter. It is of no use to pray against God's will, but to yield our will to Him in such a manner as that He may will in us and through us to his own glory. And yet there was tender compensation in the vision and burial of Pisgah.

SATURDAY, JUNE 22.—Deuteronomy IV.

Statutes refer more especially to ordinances respecting religion and the rites of worship; judgments to civil matters (1). It is as wrong to add, as to diminish (2; Rev. xxii. 18). It is noticeable that the terrible judgment of Num. xxv. fell only on the guilty, whilst the innocent were spared (3, 4).

Faithful observance of Divine laws is productive of intelligence and wisdom (6). The two great national advantages are described as God's nearness (7), and the excellence of their holy law (8). It became them, therefore, first, faithfully to observe and obey, secondly, to imbue the hearts of their children.

An earnest remonstrance against idolatry (15—40). Perhaps the heathen temple of Beth-peor was in sight (46). As we read of what the Israelites were not to do, we can form an idea of the extensive prevalence of idolatry, which deified almost every element and object in nature (Rom. i. 23). This tendency is not extinct amongst us (Col. iii. 5; 1 John v. 21).

How true is the description of ourselves in ver. 20! An iron furnace is one for smelting iron. Such were we once, in an Egypt of misery. Now God looks for joy and comfort out of us, as a man from his property (Deut. xxxii. 9; Titus ii. 14). God takes us out of the furnace of our foes, but He does not spare us the fire. He is Himself that (24). Those who will not yield are exposed to his judgments, whilst others are cleansed by contact with his holy nature, which is fire to their bonds, though it does not singe one hair of their heads (Dan. iii. 25). Let us beware of the jealousy of God's love, which will not share us with another, nor give his praise to graven images.

What tender love breathes through the following paragraph (29, &c.). Should any backsliders read these words, let them make haste to return (Jer. iii. 12).

International S.S. Lessons.

Sunday Afternoon, June 23.

JESUS RISEN: MARK XVI. 1—13.

GOLDEN TEXT: 1 COR. XV. 20.

RECALL the incidents which followed the death of Christ:—The statement of the Roman centurion assuring Pilate that He was already dead (ch. xv. 44, 45); the spear-thrust, and the blood and water which flowed forth (John xix. 34, 35); his burial in Joseph's new tomb, anointed with spices provided by Nicodemus (John xix. 38—41); and the stone, and seal, and watch set to guard the tomb (Matt. xxvii. 62—66). All these things place the fact of the death beyond all doubt; so that nothing but his actual resurrection can explain his subsequent appearances to his disciples, and their bold and powerful testimony.

The women's visit to the sepulchre (vv. 1—4).—John mentions only Mary Magdalen, because his intention is to relate her interview with the Saviour; Matthew adds "the other Mary"—here called "the mother of James the less;" Luke adds Joanna, the wife of Chusa, Herod's steward (xxiv. 10; viii. 3); Mark omits Joanna, and adds Salome, the wife of Zebedee, and mother of James and John. In each case the different aim of the writer explains the different descriptions of the persons. They came with spices to anoint the body of Jesus (1). An unnecessary service. They had no thought of his resurrection, and, considering how often He had foretold it, their unbelief was difficult to explain. Yet there was much in their service we may admire. Their attention to the body of their Lord proves the reality and strength of their attachment to Him. They seemed to expect nothing further from Him; yet even in the grave He had their hearts' warmest affection. The same love which had prompted them to follow Him, and to minister to Him (ch. xv. 40, 41), and which kept them lingering at the cross, also took them to his sepulchre. Whether active in service, or suffering as a malefactor, or lying a helpless corpse in the tomb, He was everything to them. They came when "the Sabbath was past" (1). For even such a holy service they would not violate the sanctity of that day. Their piety is as admirable as their affection for Christ. So they tarried until "the first day of the week" (2), the first Christian Sabbath, a day observed since then in commemoration of the resurrection of Christ.

As they walked they thought of the great stone at the door of the sepulchre (3). It was a real difficulty, for the stone was too heavy for them to remove. But they did not know of the seal, and the guard of Roman soldiers, otherwise they would hardly have ventured upon the journey. How often prospective difficulties in the way of some service for Christ occasion similar inquiries. The stones of difficulty that lie clearly in the path of duty are manifold; but to face them in the spirit of simple faith is to find them gone. Early as the women were, God had anticipated them. His servants—the earthquake, and the angels (Matt. xxviii. 2—4)—had already removed the difficulty. God has no lack of servants to do his bidding.

"It was very great" (4), explaining, not only the women's question, but why God interposed. He does not perform unnecessary miracles. The stone before Lazarus' grave was one the people could remove (John xi. 39); this was beyond the women's strength. The greater our difficulties, the greater God's opportunity for displaying his power.

The angel's message (5—8).—In the place where they expected to see death they found "a young man." (Matthew says, "His countenance was like lightning, and his raiment white as snow," xxviii. 3). That the angel should appear as "a young man" is significant. There is no growing old in heaven. The darkness of the tomb is lighted by the presence of an angel. In a very real sense that is true of the tomb of every believer in Christ. Yet the sight "affrighted" (5) the women. The R.V. reads "amazed." No doubt fear mingled with their wonder at so strange a sight. It is sadly suggestive of man's unfitness for the presence of God that every angelic appearance produced fear. A shining visitant from the world where there is no death was surely less an object for fear than the dead body of their Lord would have been. The angel's message (6) is full of Gospel. The empty tomb of Jesus may well banish all fear from those who seek Jesus, the crucified. The fact that the tomb is empty, and the proofs in the appearance of the tomb itself that its captive has become its conqueror—these are the evidences that the Redeemer's work is done (Rom. iv. 25; 1 Cor. xv. 17—26, 55—57).

The first to receive the message must be first to declare it. Very touching and very significant are the words "and Peter" (7). Recall his sin, his deep and bitter grief; the fear he might possibly have felt lest Jesus should deny him. Then note that the first message from the empty sepulchre is to be given especially to him. Thus tender and pitiful is Jesus towards all who are mourning over failure and sin. Was not the message intended not only to comfort them in their sorrow, but also to reprove them gently for their unbelief? "As He said unto you" (7). As though He would say: If you had but trusted, you would have expected this. His death seemed to have dazed them, so that his promise of resurrection was forgotten. Unwavering faith in what He has said would turn our grief into joy (John xiv. 29).

THE APPEARANCES OF THE RISEN SAVIOUR (9—13).—Only two appearances are recorded in these verses; and a fuller account of both is given in John xx. and Luke xxiv. For other appearances see 1 Cor. xv. Of these two the first was to Mary Magdalene (9). Her attachment to the Saviour was such that she lingered near the sepulchre in search of Him. The account in John xx. 11—18 is beautifully touching. Why to her first? She was most assiduous in her search for Him; and this, perhaps, because she most fervently loved Him. He had cast seven devils out of her, hence "she loved much." The presence of her Deliverer became necessary to her life. Her heart was wherever He was. To such affection the Saviour always responds (John xiv. 21). His heart's yearning towards her was equal to hers towards Him. How much love was in his one word, "Mary"; and how responsive to that love was her word, "Rabboni!" (John xx. 16). "She went and told them" (10). They "mourned and wept" because they had lost their Lord. She delivered the message which would turn their sorrow into joy, and which had already removed her grief, yet "they believed not" (11). Such a witness ought to have been enough to convince them, especially when his own word had foretold it. Yet we may be thankful for their unbelief. They were not persuaded into their confidence in the resurrection without the most convincing evidence. The second appearance narrated here took place in the afternoon of the same day. The full account in Luke xxiv. 13—35 is very interesting. "In another form" (12).—In what way the form was altered is not stated, nor need we conjecture. Luke tells us that "the eyes of the two disciples were holden that they should not know Him" (xxiv. 16). And they continued walking by his side, and listening to his converse, feeling their hearts burn within them as He opened to them the Scriptures, till He sat at the table with them. Then "their eyes were opened, and they knew Him." But when they told the news to the residue, "neither believed they them" (13). Luke says (xxiv. 34) the eleven were saying, "The Lord is risen indeed, and hath appeared to Simon." The apparent contradiction arises from the uncertain state of mind of the Apostles then. They were doubtless wanting to believe, yet afraid to do so; willing to receive the testimony of those who had seen Him, yet doubting, when they thought of the improbability of the event.

CONTINENTAL & FOREIGN NOTES.

POPE LEO XIII., in a conversation recently with Mr. Eug. Rendu, who was given an audience at the Vatican, stated that he would never yield his claims upon Rome.

THE DISSEMINATION OF ROMANISM.—The Exchequer of the Congregation for the Propagation of the Faith last year received £265,000, of which sum two-thirds were raised in France.

THE KING OF ITALY has expressed hearty sympathy with the Waldenses in their approaching celebration of the re-entry of the Piedmont valleys two hundred years ago. In this spirit he has sent to the Moderator of the Church, for the memorial fund, a sum of money equivalent to £200 in English money.

METHODISM IN SWITZERLAND.—It is reported that one of the two Methodist communions in German-speaking Switzerland has 100 pastors, 6000 members, 25 chapels, and 200 preaching places in private houses. The second Methodist communion in the region specified has 20 congregations and about 4200 members.

ITALY.—The town of Demonte, 7000 inhabitants, in the province of Cuneo, has been greatly stirred as the result of visits paid by Pastor Ph. Cardon. Meetings held by catechumens have had an average of 150 hearers. It has been decided to build a place of worship, and, with remarkable liberality, the people have come forward with promises of money.

A NEW METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH was recently dedicated in Newcastle, Pa., by Bishop John H. Vincent. It is one of the handsomest in Western Pennsylvania, and cost 40,000 dollars. Mr. Ira D. Sankey, who presented the ground on which the church stands, was present, and sang from his Gospel Hymns. The entire debt of 8000 dollars was wiped out by subscription at the service in the morning. Many ministers from abroad were present.

M. HENRI LASSERRE.—A French Roman Catholic paper reports progress in the matter of M. Lasserre's appeal to the Pope against the placing of his translation of the Gospels into French in the Index Expurgatorius. The Pope has, it is said, appointed a special commission to modify, with the author's sanction, certain passages to which objection has been taken. It is believed that, when this revision has been effected, the appeal of M. Lasserre will be allowed.

THE GOSPEL IN PARIS.—Members of the Committee of the Evangelical Alliance have published a circular reminding French Protestants of the great importance of the testimony which is at present being borne on the Champs de Mars, under the auspices of the McAll Mission. There are addresses daily in the halls, 31, Avenue Rapp, and 2, Place de Trocadéro. An appeal for practical support to the effort is followed by words to this effect: "In the matter of the evangelisation of France we are prone to rely upon our English and American friends, as if their liberality exempted us from opening our purses. French Protestantism has, it is true, to bear heavy financial burdens; but, if an effort were made, some thousands of francs could certainly be raised to support Mr. McAll's endeavour to place the Gospel before the crowds who visit the Exhibition."

A WARSAW JEW, deeply versed in Talmudical lore, has recently been added to the Christian Church. About three years ago, on hearing of the wonderful work which is associated with the name of Mr. Rabinowitch, he visited Bessarabia in order to examine Christianity for himself. He thus became possessed of a New Testament, of the existence of which he had never before heard. Having read the sacred volume, he found in Christ the Messiah of ancient promise, and, with a full heart, he confessed his faith before men. Forsaken of his friends and thrown upon the world, he was compelled, in order to gain a livelihood, to learn a trade. As a Jew cannot be apprenticed to a Russian who is not a Jew, he had to go to Germany, where, notwithstanding his mature age, he acquired the handicraft of a locksmith, and subsequently submitted to the ordinance of baptism.

THE HOME OF REST, WALTON-ON-NAZE, becomes more useful as time goes on. During last year two hundred women, besides children, enjoyed its advantages, but it was not large enough to receive the many who applied. By increasing the size of the bed-rooms, and procuring extra furniture, at an outlay of £100, more inmates could be received. Except for this charity, many hard-worked women who needed rest and change of air would have had to go without. The money charged does not cover expenses, the deficit being made up by the subscriptions of kind friends. Communications should be addressed to the hon. superintendent, Mrs. R. H. Moore, 102, Regent's Park-road, London, N.W.

NOTICE TO THE READERS OF "THE CHRISTIAN"

Who may be personally or relatively

INTERESTED in THIS MATTER.

MR. CONGREVE will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED in this Journal BEFORE, EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

"INCURABLE" CASE at DARTMOUTH.

Mr. George Jones, of 3, Union-street, first wrote me in March last concerning his daughter, who at that time was sinking fast with this terrible disease. It commenced with cough (which had become very severe), followed by profuse night sweats and loss of flesh, flattening over the left lung, with much pain, palpitation, and difficult breathing. The appetite had almost entirely failed.

Mr. Jones says: "I have read much of you, in the Christian Age and Christian World, and have been advised to apply to you by a friend, Mr. O., who takes your medicine for Asthma. My daughter has been weakly for two years. She was sounded, and her left lung pronounced diseased. The doctor could not give us any hope."

Within a fortnight of my sending advice and medicine, Mr. Jones writes: "I am very delighted to tell you that there is an evident improvement in our dear girl. Before she commenced your medicine she could not lie on her left side for the dreadful shooting pains, nor lift anything with her left hand. Now she can lie on either side comfortably, and use her hand and arm. The pains are nearly gone. The tongue is cleaner, and appetite come back again. The cough is better. We shall double our energies in attention to all your instructions."

Shortly after this, some disturbance of the stomach and bowels occurring, a mixture was prescribed, after which Mr. Jones writes me, April 10, that the relaxation and pains had ceased. "There is a wonderful improvement (he adds). The night sweats have ceased; she sleeps well; she enjoys her food now. She says she feels like another person (and she looks it)."

Other letters report a continued improvement.

In a letter received May 7, Mr. Jones writes: "All the evil symptoms have disappeared. Our friends say it is the most wonderful case they have seen. She can walk well, and uphill. She has regained all her flesh that she had lost. She says you were sent into the world to cure Consumption. Our sorrow was very great, but, thank God, we have now equal joy. With grateful heart to God, and to yourself as the means, I am, ever truly yours, GEO. JONES."

NOTE.—Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

TRACTS by D. L. MOODY.

Small 8vo., 16 pages. Suitable for either Giving or Lending.

The same pointed style of speech, the same "hard hitting," the same directness of appeal, will be found in these Tracts, as were so manifest in MR. MOODY'S Platform Addresses. There are very many passages in these Tractates that will make the ears tingle, and force conviction to the conscience as powerfully and as effectually as the most stirring utterances from pulpit or from platform.

ENOCH; or, Walking with God.

"The faith of Enoch drew God down from heaven to walk with him. He maintained unbroken fellowship with God. A man in communion with God is one of heaven's greatest warriors."—Extract.

Price One Penny; or 7s. 6d. per 100.

Six copies sent post free for Sixpence.

"TURN YE!"

"Now, if you have wandered, remember that you left Him, and not He you. You have to get out of the backslider's pit just in the same way as you got in. And if you take the same road as when you left the Master you will find Him now, just where you are."—Extract.

Price One Penny, or 7s. 6d. per 100.

Six copies sent post free for Sixpence.

COUNTING THE COST:

The Blind Man; and Joseph of Arimathea.

"Many people would be willing to serve Christ if it did not cost them anything. . . . But no man can be His disciple unless he denies himself, and takes up his cross daily, and follows Him."—Extract.

Price One Penny, or 7s. 6d. per 100.

Six copies sent post free for Sixpence.

JOHN THE BAPTIST:

The Wilderness Preacher.

"He had no prestige in Jerusalem, nor any influential committee meetings. He was simply John the Baptist, preaching in the wilderness! . . . He asked no favours; he talked plainly; and called things by their right names."
Extract.

Price One Penny, or 7s. 6d. per 100.

Six copies sent post free Sixpence.

SOWING AND REAPING.

"When I hear a man talk in a fluent, flippant way of 'sowing his wild oats,' I tremble for him. In a few years he will be reaping what he sowed: there will be no trifling, no levity, no mocking then."—Extract.

Price One Penny, or 7s. 6d. per 100.

Six copies sent post free for Sixpence.

LOT: A Glance at a Wasted Life.

"Lot was one of those men determined to die rich. . . There is many a man determined to be rich, even though he has to take his children into temptation."—Extract.

Price One Penny, or 7s. 6d. per 100.

Six copies sent post free for Sixpence.

JACOB: His Life and Character.

"Jacob was one of those men who are always making a bargain. He could trust the Lord as far as he could see Him, and no further. He was one of those earthly-minded saints who are all the time walking by sight and not by faith."—Extract.

Price One Penny; or 7s. 6d. per 100.

Six copies sent post free for Sixpence.

CHRIST SEEKING SINNERS.

"It would take me a long time to recount the different ways in which the Lord seeks. Can you lift up your hand and say that the Lord God never sought you? I do not believe that there is a man or woman in the whole city who could do it."—Extract.

June 21, 1889.

The Christian.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give portrait and sketch of the late Miss Mary Whately, of the Medical Mission and Schools, Cairo.

At this season of conferences and conventions it is well worth consideration whether the proportion between doctrinal addresses and consultations on the work could not be better adjusted. We venture to think that three addresses, morning and evening, on two, three, or four days, are more than most hearers can well assimilate. Indeed, the third speaker is often at a disadvantage, as the audience becomes restless, and is unable to listen thoughtfully. We cannot but think it would be well to bring the records of work done into greater prominence, to the diminution of expository and hortatory speech.

Is it making the best of these valuable opportunities, that reports and consultations as to actual work at home and abroad should only be supplemental and subsidiary to doctrinal addresses? By all means give these all the time and prominence they require, but their true purpose is to lead up, not to a sentimental or ideal consecration, but to personal devotion to the work of God, and to active participation in Gospel labours.

It is not uncommon to hear it said that the subjects discussed at the Mildmay Park Conferences do not practically touch the terrible sins and miseries now preying upon all classes of men. No reply to the objection can be more conclusive than this: The hundreds of men and women who attend these Conferences are pre-eminently distinguished for their noble devotion to the cause of humanity, and assuredly the apprehension of Divine love is the only adequate motive to sustain in service for man. If next week there should be a new and true realisation of Christ in his death and service for man, this will be no idle sentiment, but an active spiritual impulse, which will bring into a deeper agreement with Christ in his great love for a lost world, and into that higher sense of duty to Him which will abound in love to man. We have hope that this will be the issue of the forthcoming engagements.

Two noteworthy letters appeared in juxtaposition in a recent issue of The Times. One was from the Hon. T. H. W. Pelham, on "Dr. Barnardo's Homes," taking exception to the concluding remark in The Times' leader of May 24, in which, after acknowledging the benevolence of Dr. Barnardo's motives, it says, "But it certainly becomes a question whether he is a man to be entrusted with the responsibility he has assumed." Mr. Pelham does not discuss the recent case, but shows the necessity of some amendment of the law:—

> Where, as is frequently the case, the mother is unfit to have the custody of her child, and has voluntarily, or by her neglect, allowed her child to be received into an institution, it is the opinion of those who are engaged in rescue work that the law should be amended so as to prevent her claiming the child, which has been maintained and educated at the cost of the benevolent public.

His chief purpose, however, is to vindicate Dr. Barnardo, though he has had no communication with him on this subject. He thus concludes:—

> I have endeavoured to show the extreme difficulties with which Dr, Barnardo has to contend in this class of cases; and that, even if he has been wrong in one particular case, this error in judgment does not render him unfit to carry on that which is the largest and most successful scheme of rescue work the world has ever known.

This kindly defence of a fellow-labourer in the same line of beneficent work, is as just as it is generous.

The second letter is headed "Abuses in Philanthropic Institutions," and is by the Roman Catholic Bishop of Salford. It takes the other side of the argument, and charges Protestant institutions with spiriting away Catholic children, changing their names, and sending them out of the country without the consent of their legal guardians, or the safeguard required by the State in the case of workhouse children. The Bishop concludes—

> There is urgent need for some measure which will guard the rights of parents, and protect the liberty of the subject. Mistaken zeal in a good cause often ends in flagrant injustice and tyranny.

Now that the question has been raised we hope it will be thoroughly investigated. We have a strong suspicion that the balance of flagrant injustice and tyranny will be found on the Bishop's side of the account.

That the gambling spirit is abroad is constantly being made evident by revelations of the Bankruptcy Court. A few days ago Mr. Registrar Brougham had before him a case in which a merchant had lost large sums by speculation; and another in which a man, whose delight had been in horse-racing and card-playing, "ran through" £65,000 in two or three years! On the Registrar's condemnation of the practice of speculations which have nothing to do with legitimate business, The Times well remarks:—

> By very many London traders all business seems to be thought to possess so intrinsic an identity, that what would be gambling in a lawyer or clergyman is, in the merchant or shopkeeper, a simple offshoot of his acknowledged dealings. It is a delusion, equally mischievous for the neglect of their rightful functions, to which it tempts men, and for the eventual ruin of their fortunes, which is the all but invariable consequence.

An arrangement had been come to whereby the merchant debtor should escape the order of bankruptcy by paying a composition agreed upon by his creditors. This, however, the Registrar refused to confirm, very properly holding that losses which would invite pity if incurred in ordinary trading, are, when resulting from speculation, as discreditable to the loser as they are unjust to his creditors.

It is stated, in connection with a recent strike of girls employed in cigarette making in London, that the average wage is ten shillings per week. The nominal hours of work are from 9 a.m. to 6 p.m., but the girls usually take sufficient work home to keep them busy till midnight. One shilling and eightpence for fifteen hours' labour can hardly be considered a fair day's wage for a fair day's work, and it is not going too far to say that such insufficient wages are largely responsible for many of our social cankers.

Disaster follows fast upon the heels of disaster. Scarcely has the mind realised the awful nature of the havoc wrought by fire and water in America, than we are confronted with the terrible railway catastrophe in Ireland, dealing death and injury to scores of human beings, most of them children in the highest spirits at the prospect of a day's happiness in the country. Surely such calamities, in the presence of which the oft-quoted words, "In the midst of life we are in death," receive an added vividness and solemnity, are sufficient to make even the most careless and worldly pause, and ask, "Am I ready to be launched into eternity?" We are sure that the many bereaved and sorrowing households at Armagh have the sincerest sympathy and condolence of all Christians. Should not such events also stimulate us to a deeper sense of thankfulness for frequent journeying mercies? Many will soon be starting on their annual holiday; to pray before a journey and give thanks after it is no bad rule.

At the Conference of the Methodist New Connexion, held at Dudley recently, there was an interesting discussion in regard to reading sermons in the pulpit. Dr. Cocker said:—

> If a probationer began with his manuscript he was soon held in bondage by a hard taskmaster. The affair became a mechanical operation, and a well-instructed schoolboy might as well be employed to go through the operation.

The fact that some of our great preachers have been in the habit of using manuscript in the pulpit may constitute the exception that proves the rule; but certainly where the practice can be avoided it is well to do so.

In connection with this subject it is gratifying to find Mr. Spurgeon, in the current number of The Sword and the Trowel, writing thus:—

> A certain minister says, somewhat spitefully, that Mr. Spurgeon's sermons are largely used in many pulpits: and we confess that we are not grieved by the information. 'If the Lord has ever given to his servant a thought or an expression which tended to edification, it is the common property of the Church of God. We will raise no cry of plagiarism. We have never taken out letters patent. He who pays his penny, and buys our sermon, may preach it if so it pleases him.

There is the true unselfish ring in this. With all who love the Gospel and wish it to be proclaimed honestly and powerfully, we can only hope that the minister's statement may be perfectly accurate. But let preachers who preach other men's sermons acknowledge their source; otherwise they are guilty of plagiarism, which is dishonesty.

The question of these days respecting foreign missions is this—Shall men have the Christian religion or no religion at all? A writer, in the June Westminster Review, ranks Buddha with Jesus, and says of both that their influence will suffer no change. That, we are informed, on the highest authority, that, in Japan, Buddhism, as well as Hinduism, and Confucianism, have lost their influence, and that to revive it will be found impossible. Thirty-eight millions of human beings are awaking to the fact that their fathers inherited vanity and lies. A nation with no religion means an empty house with an open door for the entrance of seven spirits worse than the first which dwelt there. This is the problem which soon must be faced by Christian people in relation to all heathen nations.

The Charity Record, in an article on "The Confessional and Proselytism at Hospitals," calls attention to a scandal which, it asserts, has been brewing at the London Hospital for the last five months. Our contemporary says:

Without entering now into the important question of whether public subscriptions should be devoted to the maintenance of a Church of England chaplain in a hospital built and sustained by the alms of persons of all religious beliefs, we must point out that in this particular institution, to which the professors of all creeds and of no creed are admitted, here is a gentleman who in plain language says, "So long as I am minister here, I shall, because I must, invite private confession."

The Record suggests that as this chaplain has been appointed for five years, the committee of the hospital should pay him the five years' salary, and dispense with his services. By all means, we should say, let this be done. A man who believes in the confessional is no fit chaplain for such an institution.

It is pleasant to find the Bishop of Cork writing to the President of the Conference of the Methodist Church in Ireland, which opened in the city of Cork on the 13th inst.:—

I pray that the deliberations of your Conference may be guided by the Holy Spirit, and may tend to the welfare of the Church of God in Ireland, and that all those who love our Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity may yet be enabled, in the unity of the Spirit and the bond of peace, to work together for the furtherance of the Gospel and the glory of God.

Those who are most familiar with the needs of the sister island, and who have deplored, as we frequently have had occasion to do, the sad differences which separate the Protestant bodies in that country, will join heartily in this prayer, especially as closer union could only be upon the basis of the fundamental and vital truths common to all members of the Church of God, and that the concessions to be made in order to bring about the closer union could only be in the direction of non-essentials.

In connection with the meeting of the Irish Wesleyan Methodist Conference in Cork, an Irish contemporary says:

It is a matter for profound thanksgiving that our Church has had nothing to distract or hamper her special work during the year; and that there are no questions likely to crop up which will cause disturbance or work annoy. We have not to recast any of our doctrinal teaching. Ministers and people are sound in the faith. The question put to each one of our preachers annually, "Do you believe our doctrines?" has no doubt the effect of keeping them definitely and prominently before the mind; and the custom of examining the candidates for probation and for ordination in the presence of all the ministers must serve to crystallise these doctrines, so that they are not easily departed from.

As those doctrines are the grand truths which brought about the revival of the last century—"personal faith in a personal Saviour—conscious salvation through the clear testimony of the Spirit of God—a heart renewed through the power of the indwelling Holy Spirit—a life pure and holy according to the Word of God"—it does not seem that the down-grade movement has made itself felt in Ireland, especially as our contemporary states that other churches in the sister island are uttering those truths quite as earnestly and distinctly.

A great calamity has befallen Rev. Jackson Wray and his church at Whitefield Tabernacle, Tottenham-court-road, London, in the settling of the foundations. The historic building has been closed, and it is feared that it may have to be pulled down and rebuilt. We are sure that Mr. Wray and his congregation will have the warmest sympathy of his fellow Christians in this trial.

The ghost of "the Eastern Question" is again haunting the imperial councils of Europe, and it is high time that it made its presence uncomfortably felt, if we may accept the current evidence as to the misrule of "the unspeakable Turk" in the province of Armenia. "A twenty years' resident in Turkey" writes to The Times:—

The Armenian question can no longer be ignored by us. While we are trifling by pretending to respect the vanished sovereignty of the Turk, and are making our representations in such honeyed fashion that they will not excite opposition, but be agreeable to him, he is grinding to dust beneath his ruthless heel a Christian population not very distant from the frontiers of our favoured Europe. The cry from Asia Minor is the cry of a people driven to desperation, conscious that the question is one affecting their very existence. We shall be false to our common humanity, and false to the noblest traditions of our country, if we remain content with the subtle explanations and unsupported contradictions of a Turkish Envoy, when it is notorious here and throughout this country that outrage of every possible description is perpetrated in Armenia with impunity.

If the power and prestige of a great "Christian" nation like Great Britain ought ever to be exercised out of its own domains, surely it ought to be on behalf of an oppressed and down-trodden people.

That Ritualism leads to Romanism was again made evident on Saturday last, when, according to a daily contemporary, Cardinal Manning "administered the sacrament of confirmation to several adults who had recently seceded from the Church of England." The report goes on to say:—

Amongst those formally received into the Roman Communion was Rev. C. W. Townsend, until recently principal of the University of Oxford Mission to Calcutta, and for some time previously vice-president of Salisbury (Diocesan) Theological College. The following clergymen of the Anglican Church were also admitted into the Roman obedience:—Revs. S. T. Spratson, W. T. A. Vallance, and A. Clarke.

If this is encouraging to the Church of Rome, it certainly ought not to be uninstructive to English Christians generally. Many who have grown up in the Protestant fold have never yet learned that Christianity is a life of faith rather than a circle of religious observances and engagements. It is better that Romanising clerics should be openly known as Romanists than remain nominally identified with other communions. The mere fact of these secessions having taken place, should, however, stir up such as hold the faith in its purity, to a more earnest insistence upon the essentially spiritual character of that faith.

We desire to remind our readers of the privilege that lies to their hand in contributing to our "Day in the Country" fund. This summer we are being favoured with occasional spells of glorious weather, and now is the time for the charms of the country, all dressed in living green, to exercise their spell on youthful bodies, minds, and hearts. There are not too many pure and unalloyed pleasures at the disposal of our city-bound bairns, and it is a distinct means of grace to give them the opportunity of revelling for a brief space in the enjoyments of some fair, rural retreat.

Next Lord's Day, the customary annual collection falls to be made in London churches on behalf of the Metropolitan Hospitals. Some of these institutions have in recent years been passing through the crucible of criticism, and, doubtless, there are defects in administration that ought to be remedied. All this detracts but little, however, from the splendid service that they have rendered to the sick poor of London, and we earnestly trust that they will continue to have the heartiest support of the Christian public. Any weakening of their resources would be a great calamity.

Galignani's Messenger of Saturday last had this significantly worded paragraph:—

A rich widow has given 5000 fr. to help on the work of Père Hyacinthe. A poor widow has given 6000 fr.

This is not an uncommon experience. Mr. Wookey, speaking of Dr. Barnardo's work, at Wood Green, on Monday evening, said that at a meeting presided over by a nobleman and attended by many fashionable people, the collection was under £15. Next morning he received a request to call upon an invalid in the poorest part of the town, and, to his astonishment, she put into his hand ten sovereigns, which she had struggled to obtain in order to help Dr. Barnardo's splendid work on behalf of destitute children.

In connection with the subject of African Slavery, it is extremely painful to find from Dr. Cust's recently published volume of "Notes on Missionary Subjects" (Elliot Stock), that some of the missionaries in Madagascar do not take the attitude that might be expected of them. Dr. Cust points out that on the East Coast and on the Niger, "where the very air is impregnated with slavery, and where the mission agents are themselves redeemed slaves, or the offspring of redeemed slaves," the inhuman traffic is utterly discountenanced. He reasonably asks why at Madagascar alone, of all the mission fields in Asia and Africa, it is found necessary to countenance it.

"The hellish plague of Zolaism is infecting Italy," says a Continental writer in a contemporary. "Books of the filthiest description are finding readers in a land where the moral fibre is already very slack." In Naples, during Passion Week, Roman Catholics flocked to a theatre to applaud a play called Debauchery, and where everything enters into the action of the drama which may justify the title. A book becoming the most popular book in the Peninsula is thus described by a critic: "There breathes through its pages a warm breath of corrupting poetry, which penetrates into every vein of the soul, like a powerful intoxicant."

Self-Supporting Missionaries.

IT is possible that under the prosaic name of "self-supporting missionaries" we have a movement in the development of Protestant missions which may hereafter be known as the "chivalrous period," and be referred to by the future historian as the time when throughout all sections of British Christendom well-to-do people were seized with the feeling that each family of standing should maintain a representative in the van of the army of the Cross, who, while acting in unison with and under the guidance of one of the great missionary societies, would have all his personal wants supplied by his family or from his own private fortune.

I regard this as one of the most legitimate and praiseworthy objects to which a portion of the great wealth of this nation could be devoted; and if one of the sons (or daughters) in a wealthy family were moved by the Spirit to "count not life dear" so that Christ may be well served in the mission field, it should be thought essential to the family honour that he be not maintained from the contributions of churches, the members of which are mostly poor. Certainly, if his family wished to be regarded as possessing "like precious faith" they should "prove it by their works" in the manner which seems most natural, and not allow strangers to minister to his wants.

In making this suggestion I do not claim that it is a new thing, but wish rather to sustain and emphasize the appeal made to the British churches by Rev. Griffith John, D.D., and Rev. Arnold Foster, B.A. of Hankow, who "invite men with an independent income, or men whose friends are able and willing to send them abroad, to come out and unite themselves with us as honorary workers in the Hankow Mission of the London Society." They justly remark that "most of the English societies now represented in China number some unpaid missionaries among their agents. We wish for all missions, as well as for our own, a large increase of such workers." They are desirous of including in the scheme all willing and suitable persons, and say, "We do not wish to appeal for single men only. Married couples would also find a very hearty welcome and plenty of work, but it is essential that both husband and wife should be full of the missionary spirit, strong in health, and prepared, if need be, to put up with some inconveniences." They touch upon an important point in saying, "It is not essential that our honorary workers should have had a college education or that they should be ordained, but we wish that they should all be really self-supporting in the sense of having private sources of income." That no mistake should be made, or a wider scope be given to this term self-supporting, they expressly say, "We should not encourage anyone to join this branch of our Mission if supported by a church or by a local auxiliary of the parent Society."

Here is an appeal which, while far-reaching in its scope, is yet based upon very clear and definite lines. It makes straight for the hearts of all wealthy young Christians, and is an opportunity for them to obey in spirit, and in many other respects the letter of, the Divine request: "Go sell all that thou hast, and come follow Me." In referring to the enthusiasm that animated the Crusaders, I would point out that it took hold of the rich as well as the poor. The question, however, which young Christians have to ask themselves is not, How long shall the holy places be defiled by the infidel? but, How much longer shall the wealthy of Christian England hold back from a complete fulfilment of the command: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature"? The early Crusader had a contracted cry; his thoughts hovered round one spot. The modern Crusader has an expansive cry, one which fills the heart with higher and diviner feelings. Yet the Christendom of to-day, with its great superiority in numbers and wealth, in spiritual light and knowledge, sends out fewer soldiers of the Cross, and spends much less money to fulfil the divine commission of saving souls, than the Christendom of what we are pleased to call "the dark ages," sent and spent to save Jerusalem from desecration.

Oh, for a zeal and a faith commensurate with our privileges! Oh, that we could emulate that zeal which would "compass sea and land to make one proselyte" to a distorted Judaism. Oh, that our faith might lead us "to remove mountains" without permitting us first to make a careful calculation of "the strain involved," or thinking of "the drain upon our strength." If the young and wealthy are constrained to go, and will serve the Master in the high places of heathenism, let these respectable and prudent cloaks of moral cowardice be thrust aside. Let them take a determined stand, resolved not to confer with flesh and blood, but simply and fully to "follow Jesus."

One disturbing element to us in making this proposition is the tendency shown by many Christian parents to divert their children's minds from foreign work to service at home. They have a strong objection to the separation and the risks involved, and think the proposal to work at home quite equivalent to the desire to work abroad. If He who calls and inspires did not know who is best suited for foreign work, there might be some ground for this. But parents should remember what a grave responsibility they incur in such an attempt; and that it is one which cannot be shifted from their shoulders by simply procuring a medical certificate throwing doubts on the physical fitness of their child for foreign service. Most people have an exaggerated conception of the dangers to health which exist in countries beyond the borders of Europe. It is strange that these dangers should be thought of mostly by the relatives of would-be missionaries; and that the aristocratic or wealthy families, from which are drawn the officers of our army and navy, the civil servants of Her Majesty's Government, and members of mercantile firms, should take it as a very ordinary thing that their young people go abroad to pursue an earthly calling. I have often heard it defined as "throwing themselves away upon the heathen," and followed by the statement that it was "all very well for low-class people."

How those who thus talk must blush when appealing to the Carpenter of Galilee for salvation; and will they not feel a little uncomfortable when, admitted to "the presence of the King," they remember that for their sakes "He made himself of no reputation"?

I long to see a more healthy spiritual mode of thought in Britain respecting the sacredness of the calling of a missionary, a stronger faith in the divine character of the work, and less inclination to believe in its detractors, or to be misled by cavillers and critics. The question then forces itself upon us, "Who should respond to this cry?" I have no desire to place any restrictions upon those who feel bound to devote themselves to the work, but there does seem to be a special appeal to all who have completed their education, and, standing on the verge of manhood or womanhood, are looking round for a profession. Many wealthy young men and women do not wish to be doomed to a life of idleness, or to have their money made into a chain, with which to bind them to their ancestral homes.

Others, too, after a few years of business life, feel that there are more important things to be done by men than piling up, year by year, an ever-increasing balance in the bank. One part of the appeal by Messrs. John and Foster calls attention to the value of medical and surgical knowledge in mission work. Upon this a China missionary (Rev. J. Macgowan, of Amoy) has just given us a capital idea. It is apparent to all connected with our medical colleges and hospitals that so large a number of young men are devoting themselves to the study of medicine, as to cause grave fears for their future through the overcrowding of the profession. One essential of a young man's successful entry into practice is that he be well qualified at its commencement, and not have to gain experience at the expense of his first patients. There are many Christian men who will be willing, if it is suggested to them, to go out to China or India for five years' gratuitous service in a mission hospital. They would frequently have cases of complaints which are comparatively rare in England. It would be possible for some to complete their engagement and return home before they were thirty, yet ever after would have the unspeakable satisfaction of knowing that they were thankfully thought of by tens of thousands whom they had benefitted, and of being daily remembered before the Father by many to whose dark hearts they had also been privileged to bring light and life.

I do not, however, appeal to the rich only. Many in the middle or lower classes may be moved to take a large share in equipping and sending forth some relative or friend as an evangelist to the heathen or a worker in zenanas. A speaker at the late Missionary Conference asked, "Why should there not be more of our people who go to our mission-field without asking anything at all from the Church? I know that some rich men have done it; all honour to them for it! Let me tell you the story of a poor person who did it the other day. I knew in Edinburgh three sisters who had a great desire to go to Africa, but they knew that we were in difficulties with regard to money, and they would not ask a penny from the Church. They were not rich. One of them was teaching at a school, another was in a millinery establishment, and the third was doing something else; and they simply said, 'We will make a bargain that two of us will stay at home and keep the third, who shall be a missionary in Africa.' She is now out in the mission, and is working in the joy of the Lord."

There is the true crusading spirit shown by these Scotch ladies who are thus unitedly working for missions. Doubtless they will each receive an equal reward from the Master.

This leads to the assertion that many who cannot work in the mission field may do so by deputy. Thousands of poor men in our universities and colleges—also artisans and others—are willing to go to the mission field as industrial workers and evangelists. Cannot some of our Church members follow the example of the Edinburgh minister who undertook the training of a youth who had come to him, saying, "I want to go to the mission field, but I have been reading the parable of the talents. I am a blacksmith, I am a good blacksmith, and I want to consecrate my gift for the Lord; I will go anywhere in the world, provided I may teach the uncivilised savage to use the forge"?

Here is a sphere in which many who have wealth, but no suitable relative to send to the mission field, may yet send one or more workers.

It is undoubtedly a fact that the idea is becoming strongly impressed upon those connected with our large societies, and those missionaries who have had long experience of men and means, that more elasticity and variety, both in the modes of working and in the kind of agents employed, will be a distinguishing feature of mission work in the near future. But surely nothing will impress people at home, as well as heathen abroad, more than the fact that a large number of this varied and increasing army of missionaries are working at their own cost, or supported by their friends.

Some who read this with glowing and responsive feelings may sigh at the thought, "I would that I were younger, but now my opportunity is gone." Has it gone? No. If all who thus sympathise with missions bestir themselves to give of their wealth, or to excite others to do so, the great missionary organisations will be able to keep pace with the growing exigencies of their successful work. One of the difficulties of the missionary societies is to find efficient speakers, who will go as special deputations to anniversary services and meetings. Many of the missionaries who return to England on furlough, for rest and to visit their friends, are overburdened with this work, and some dread to return home because of the pressure of so much travelling and speaking.

Surely many well-to-do men, who are not young enough for service abroad, but can speak well in public, ought to devote their talents to this work, and their advocacy will be the more effective from its disinterested character. An acquaintance with the chief features of interest in some missions could soon be obtained, and the help of such additional workers rendering free service to the societies might bring to pass the wish uttered by a missionary, at the late London Conference: "I want to see a missionary crusade preached throughout all Christendom by men whom God has filled with his Spirit, and on whose hearts He has laid the evangelisation of the world."

"SIR JOHN FRANKLIN: A REVELATION."—Having recently noticed a book by Rev. J. H. Skewes, maintaining that the fate of Sir John Franklin was communicated by "revelation" before actually discovered, we last week referred to the fact that Sir Leopold McClintock, whose name is honourably known in connection with the successful expedition, repudiates the "revelation," and contradicts some important statements made in the book. We have received from Mr. Skewes a letter rebutting Sir Leopold's statements, and reasserting the truth of his marvellous story. At the same time, he resents the association of the "revelation" with spiritualistic pretension.

The Epistle to the Hebrews.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A., Regent's Park Chapel.

XXXV.—THE CLOSING PRAYER.

HEBREWS xiii.

THROUGHOUT this Epistle, the inspired writer has been appealing to man. Through successive paragraphs he has poured forth a burning stream of argument, remonstrance, or appeal; now opening the full peal of Sinai's thunders, and now the wail of Calvary's broken heart, and finally summoning the most honoured names in Hebrew story to enforce his words.

All this is over now. He can say no more. The ploughing, and sowing, and harrowing are alike complete. He must turn from earth to heaven, from man to God; and leave his converts and his work with that glorious Being whose cause he had striven so faithfully to plead, and who alone could crown his labours with success. There are many splendid outbursts of prayer beginning these epistles, but amongst them all, it is impossible to find one more striking or beautiful than this.

THE BURDEN OF THE PRAYER is that these Hebrew Christians may be made perfect to do God's will. The word "perfect" means to set in joint, or articulate. Naturally, we are out of joint, or at the best, work stiffly; but the ideal of Christian living is to be so perfectly "set," as that God's purposes may be easily and completely realised in us.

There is no higher aim in life than to do the will of God. It was the supreme object for which our Saviour lived. This brought Him from heaven. This determined his every action. This fed his inner life with hidden meat. This cleared and lit up his judgment. This led Him with unfaltering decision into the valley of death. This was the stay and solace of his spirit, as He drank the bitter cup of agony. Throughout his mortal life his one glad shout of assurance and victory was, "I delight to do thy will, O my God; yea, thy law is within my heart." And human lives climb up from the lowlands to the upland heights just in proportion as they do the will of God on earth as it is done in heaven. If every reader of these lines would resolve from this moment to do the will of God in the very smallest things, with scrupulous care, counting nothing insignificant, shrinking from no sacrifice, evading no command, life would assume entirely a new aspect. There might be a momentary experience of suffering and pain, but it would be succeeded by the light of resurrection, and the new song of heaven, stealing like morning through the chambers of the soul.

God is love; to do his will is to scatter love in handfuls of blessing on a weary world. God is light; to do his will is to tread a path that shines more and more to the perfect day. God is life; to do his will is to eat of the Tree of Life, and live for ever, and to drink deep draughts of the more abundant life, which Jesus gives. God is the God of hope; to do his will is to be full of all joy and peace, and to abound in hope. God is the God of all comfort; to do his will is to be comforted in all our tribulation by the tender love of a mother. God is the God of peace; to do his will is to learn the secret inner calm, which no storm can reach, no tempest ruffle. God is the God of truth; to do his will is to be on the winning side, and to be assured of the time when He will bring out our righteousness as the light, and our judgment as the noon-day.

Why will you not, oh readers, who have followed these papers thus far to the last, resolve from this moment that your will shall henceforth say Yes to God's will, and that you will live out what He wills and works within? Probably, at the very outset, you will be tested by your attitude to some one thing. Do not try to answer all the suggestions or inquiries that may be raised tumultuously within, but deal immediately and decisively with that single item. Dare to say, with respect to it, "I will thy will, O my God." And immediately the gate will open into the rapture of a new life. But remember that his will must be done in every work to which you put your hands, and then every work will be good.

We cannot tell how the mysterious promptings of our will are able to express themselves in our limbs and members. We only know that what we will in ourselves is instantly wrought out through the wonderful machinery of nerve and muscle. And we are quick to perceive when, through some injury or dislocation, the mandate of the will fails to be instantly and completely fulfilled. Nor do we rest content until the complete communication is restored.

But in all this there is a deep spiritual analogy. We are members, through grace, of the body of Christ. The will lies with Him; and if we were living as we should, we should be incessantly conscious of its holy impulses, withdrawing us from this, or prompting us to that. Our will would not be obliterated, but would elect to work in perpetual obedience and subordination to the will of its King. Alas! this is not our case. We are too little sensible of those holy impulses. On rare occasions we realise and yield to them. But how many of them fail to reach or move us, because we are out of joint. What prayer could better befit our lips than that the God of peace, the true surgeon of souls, would put us in joint, to do his will, with unerring accuracy, promptitude, and completeness.

MARK THE GUARANTEES THAT THIS PRAYER SHALL BE REALISED.—(1) The appeal is made to the God of peace. He, whose nature is never swept by the storms of desire or unrest; whose one aim is to introduce peace into the heart and life; whose love to us will not brook disappointment in achieving our highest blessedness—He must undertake this office; He will do it most tenderly and delicately; nor will He rest until the obstruction to the inflow of his nature is removed; and there is perfect harmony between the promptings of his will and our immediate and joyous response.

(2) He brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus, that great Shepherd of the sheep.—To have given us a Shepherd was much, but to have given us so great a Shepherd is marvellous. He is the great Shepherd who died, just as He is the good Shepherd who knows his flock, and the chief Shepherd who is coming again. He is great, because of the intrinsic dignity of his nature, because of his personal qualifications to save and bless us, because of the greatness of his unknown sufferings, and because of the height of glory to which the Father hath exalted Him. The words "brought again" are very expressive. They contain the idea of "brought up." More is meant than the reanimation of the dead body of Christ. There is included, also, his exaltation by the right hand of God, to be a Prince and a Saviour. And, surely, if our God has given us such a Shepherd, and raised Him to such a glory, that He may help us the more efficiently, there is every reason why we should confidently count on his doing all that may be needed in us, as He has done all that was needed for us.

(3) He will certainly respect the everlasting covenant, which has been sealed with blood.—God has entered into an eternal covenant with us to be our God and Friend. That covenant, which does not depend on anything in us, but rests on his own unchanging nature, has been ratified by the precious blood of his Son. As the first covenant was sealed by the sprinkled blood of slain beasts, so the second was sealed by the precious blood of Christ. "This is my blood of the new testament, which is shed for many for the remission of sins." Thus spoke our Saviour on the eve of his death, with a weight of meaning, which this Epistle was needed to explain. And is it likely that He who has entered into such a covenant with our souls, a covenant so everlasting, so divine, so solemn, will ever go back from it, or allow anything to remain undone, which may be needed to secure its perfect and efficient operation? It cannot be. We may count, without the slightest hesitation, on the God of peace doing all that is required to perfect us in every good work to do his will.

THE DIVINE METHOD will be to work in us. It is necessary first that we should be adjusted so that there may be no waste or diversion of the Divine energy. When that is done, then it will begin to pass into and through us in mighty tides of power. "God working in you." It is a marvellous expression! We know how steam works mightily within the cylinder, forcing up and down the ponderous piston. We know how sap works mightily within the branches, forcing itself out in bud, and leaf, and blossom. We read of a time when men and women were so possessed of devils that they spoke and acted as the inward promptings led them. These are approximations to the conception of the text, which towers infinitely beyond.

Have we not all been conscious of some of these workings? They do not work in us mightily as they did in the Apostle Paul, because we have not yielded to them as he did. Still, we have known them when the breath of holy resolution has swept through our natures, or we have conceived some noble purpose, or have been impelled to some deed of self-sacrifice for others. These are the workings of God within the heart, not in the tornado only, but in the zephyr; not in the thunder alone, but in the still small voice. Every sigh for the better life, every strong and earnest resolution, every determination to leave the nets and fishing-boats to follow Jesus, every appetite for fellowship, every aspiration heavenwards—all these are the result of God's in-working.

How careful we should be to gather up every divine impulse, and translate it into action. We must work out what He works in. We must labour according to his working which works in us mightily. We must be swift to seize the fugitive and transient impression, embodying it in the permanen act.

It does not seem so difficult to live and work for God, when it is realised that the eternal God is energising us within. You cannot be sufficiently patient to that querulous invalid; your patience is exhausted, but God is working his patience within you: let it come out through you. You cannot muster strength for that obvious Christian duty; but God is working that fruit in your innermost nature; be content to let it manifest itself by you. You are incompetent to sustain that Christian work, with its manifold demands; but stand aside, and let the eternal God work in and through you, to do by his strength what you in your weakness cannot do.

The Christian is the workshop of God. In that mortal, but renewed nature, the Divine artizan is at work, elaborating products of exquisite beauty and marvellous skill. Would that we might be less eager to give the world ourselves, and more determined that there should be a manifestation through all the gateways of our being of the wondrous inworking of the God of peace! Then we might say, with some approach to the words of our Lord, to such as demand evidences of his resurrection and life, How sayest thou, Prove to me the resurrection of Jesus? the words which I speak, I speak not of myself; but my Saviour, who dwelleth in me, He doeth the works.

THE RESULT will be that we shall be well-pleasing in his sight, through Jesus Christ. Our good works can never be the ground of our acceptance or justification. The very best of them can only please God through Jesus Christ. Our purest tears need washing again in his blood. Our holiest actions need to be cleansed ere they can be viewed by a holy God. Our best prayers and gifts need to be laid on the altar which sanctifies all it touches. We could not stand before God for a moment, save by that one sufficient substitutionary sacrifice, once offered by Jesus on the cross, and now pleaded by Him before the throne.

At the same time, our Father is pleased with our obedient loyalty to his will. He gives us this testimony, that we please Him, as Enoch did, who walked with Him before the flood. And it should be the constant ambition of our lives so to walk as to please Him; and to obtain from Him a faint echo of those memorable words, which greeted our Saviour, as He stepped up from the waters of Baptism. "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well-pleased."

To Him be glory for ever and ever.—Directly the soul is right with God, it becomes a vehicle for God, and thus a revenue of glory begins to accrue to God, which ceases not, but augments as the years roll by. And the time will never come when the spirit shall not still pour forth its glad rejoicings to the glory of Him to whom is due the praise of all.

If your life is not bringing glory to God, see to it that at once you set to work to ascertain the cause. Learning it, let it be dealt with forthwith. Hand yourself over to God to make you and keep you right. And thus begin a song of love and praise, which shall rise through all coming ages, to the Father who chose you in Christ, to the Saviour who bought you with his blood, and to the Spirit who sanctifies the heart: one adorable Trinity, to whom be the glory for ever and ever. Amen.

EARNEST WORK AT PENDLETON.

JOHN-STREET HALL, Pendleton, is the home of a flourishing Ragged-school and Evangelical Mission. The twenty-sixth annual report states that the attendance at the school is larger than ever; while the other agencies have of late been greatly blessed of God. The temperance, social, and philanthropic endeavours are in vigorous operation. Not only have the hungry been fed, but what is also very important, the poor have been instructed in the art of preparing food cheaply for their domestic needs. One of the principal lady superintendents has given practical lectures on cookery, and the report says, "We know of cases where the wife thus instructed has pleased the husband better, and he has given up the public-house in favour of his improved home."

The original feature of the Mission, the circulation of healthy temperance and religious literature, is earnestly maintained. A weekly Bible-class for policemen and their wives is conducted by devoted ladies, some of them coming a few miles to undertake the work. Visitation of cottage homes is also carried forward on a large scale. Leading friends of Christian work in the district are interested in the operations of this Mission, the hon. secretary of which is Mr. John Sugden, 46, Market-street, Manchester.

WITH CHRIST.

MILDMAY CONFERENCE, JUNE 26, 27, 28.

ONE with Christ in crucifixion!
One beneath the law we died:
Death's just claim for ever settled,
One with Jesus crucified.
Planted in his grave of sorrow,
Quickened into life anew,
Lo! a resurrection morrow
Dawns upon our raptured view.

One with Him in living service,
Where the Master goes we go:
One with Him in dark temptation,
One in sorrow, one in woe.
Not a pang can touch the member,
But the vital Head must feel:
One with Him we sigh and suffer,
Till his gracious hand shall heal.

One with Him in coming glory!
If we suffer we shall reign:
Where He is there we shall follow,
With Him ever to remain.
Called and chosen, washed and faithful
We shall walk with Him in white:
With Him now in death and darkness
With Him soon in cloudless light.

DR. BARNARDO'S HOMES.

THE Whitsun festival of Dr. Barnardo's Boys' Home, Stepney Causeway, E., was held on Tuesday last week. A goodly number of visitors inspected the workshops, where many industries were in operation. Dr. Barnardo presided over a meeting, which was attended by 121 lads, ready for emigration to Canada. They looked a very capable party, having been properly trained for work. It was announced that Lord Polwarth had given some live stock, which the steamship and railway companies had undertaken to convey gratuitously to Canada. The meeting was interesting throughout. On the Thursday following, the lads left Euston. So far, no fewer than 4120 children have emigrated from the Homes to Canada.

With a population of close upon a thousand orphan and destitute girls, Dr. Barnardo's Village Home at Barkingside, near Ilford, Essex, is as truly interesting as a colony of juveniles, as it is beautiful as a memorial of Christian philanthropy. Now that the surroundings are glorious in summer verdure and the air pleasant and bracing, a visit will be enjoyed by many. A few days ago one of our representatives went round the place, and was greatly delighted with all he saw. Forty-eight in number, the Homes present a very picturesque appearance, the entire place being laid out in a way that cannot but have a refining influence upon the little villagers. On the occasion referred to, the children were out, and it was pleasing in the extreme to witness the orderly freedom with which they enjoyed themselves at various sports. To think of what would have become of many of those merry children, if "the Village" had not received them, was to conjure up a series of very painful possibilities. Any day except Saturday visitors are welcome, and we advise such as can to give themselves the joy of seeing what Christian benevolence has done at Ilford.

"THE WILDERNESS OF LONDON" was the subject of Dr. Thain Davidson's monthly sermon to young men, delivered in the Islington Presbyterian Church, on Sunday evening, June 9. Taking for his text Deut. ii. 7, "He knoweth thy walking through this great wilderness," he showed that, in the absence of friends, the busiest place may be a solitude. He enforced the prime importance of young men realising the continual presence of the Divine Friend and Protector. Some of the difficulties, dangers, and doubtings of young men were surveyed, forcibly though in tones of tenderness. A full report of the discourse appeared in The Islington Gazette, of June 13.

BY REV. WILLIAM HASLAM, M.A.
Author of "From Death into Life. An Autobiography."

XIII.—THE LETTER "I."

I HAD been speaking one Sunday at the beginning of a mission upon the necessity of the new birth. This is a most important subject at all times, but more particularly in the present day, when there is so much written and spoken about the "Fatherhood" of God, regardless of the new birth.

The Lord said, "Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God." Just as a man needs natural birth to see natural things, so he needs spiritual birth to see spiritual things. I insisted not only upon the necessity of the new birth; but, taking the brazen serpent as a type, I also insisted that this new birth must be through the Son of Man. "As Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, so must the Son of Man be lifted up, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life."

The Lord graciously set his seal upon this testimony by drawing some souls to Himself that evening.

The next morning, at the Bible-reading as it was called, there came two brothers, both men of learning, and regarded as very good men. They sat in front of the pulpit and looked steadily at me all through the address.

The following morning, they were there again: and this time I observed one of them taking notes. It was somewhat embarrassing at the time; but, as my dependence was not upon my learning, but upon God, I went on.

I was led to speak upon the difference between men's teaching and God's.

I said, "Men teach by imparting instruction directly to men. In this way they may convey the interpretation of Scripture from mind to mind; but this is not the manner of God's teaching.

"St. Paul tells us that all Scripture is profitable for doctrine; but, observe, after doctrine or teaching comes, not knowledge, but reproof; after reproof correction, and then instruction in righteousness. The light which God's doctrine gives us reproves or convicts us, because our thoughts are not as God's—we see that if God is right, then we are wrong. When we yield to this reproof, the next thing is correction, or being put straight with the line of God's teaching; and then follows the instruction. For this instruction, the Holy Ghost prepares the ground before he sows the seed.

"The Word of God is as seed which is foreign to the ground, not like weeds which grow there naturally, because they are indigenous to the soil."

Notes were taken fully of this also.

The following day, having spoken of the manner of God's teaching, I took the other side: namely, the manner of receiving that teaching on our part.

I said, "There must be a childlike spirit." I did not know that these learned men before me were instructors of youth. "A childlike spirit," I continued, "is very different from a manly spirit. If we would advance in spiritual knowledge, the Lord does not say we must become as great giants, but as little children. A man reasons about a thing before he receives it; the child takes it as it is given him, upon trust. A learned man must needs weigh and consider a subject all round before he accepts it; a child is incapable of this.

"Supposing a child comes to school, and, in these rationalistic days and precocious times, says to his teacher: 'A. Why is that A, and why should it stand first? Why not put B first, or third, and C in the first place?' The teacher remonstrates with his young scholar, and says very meekly, 'That is how it has always been, A, B, C.' 'No,' replies the child, 'I cannot accept that old-fashioned teaching.' 'Pray, my child,' says the instructor, 'if A is not to be first, will you tell me what letter you would put in its place?' The child answers with much assurance, 'The letter I.'"

The learned gentlemen smiled simultaneously, and others also did the same.

"You may smile," I said, "but this is the way and the spirit in which a great many people come to Scripture teaching. If they do not do this exactly, they reason over it, or try to understand and lay hold of it, instead of letting it lay hold of them. The Word must lay hold of you, or it will do no good. The seed must take hold of the ground before it can grow upward."

After the sermon, I received a message that a gentleman wished to see me, and would call at three o'clock in the afternoon.

Punctually at the time named, my two learned friends arrived, and came in.

"You knocked us over with your letter I, this morning," said one of them. "I suppose you meant us."

"I suppose God did," I replied. "Please let me hear what you have to say."

"We are sons of an evangelical clergyman," one answered, "and have passed through the university; but we have never met with your line of teaching before."

I said, "I had to learn mythology and some theology too at college; but I was not taught to know about spiritual things there—we must be taught of God. The universities are seminaries of human learning, and are needful as such; but God alone teaches us about the things of eternity. The Scripture says, 'Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God.'"

"I think," said one of the gentlemen, interrupting me, "you will allow that there is much variety of opinion upon that subject."

"Yes," I answered, "that may be; but there is but one new birth known to all who have experienced it. Do you know it?"

There was no answer. I did not desire to ask what these gentlemen thought, but what they knew. I continued, "The test of knowing the new birth, is 'seeing the kingdom of God.' By nature, we are born blind, and cannot possibly discern spiritual things, but at the new birth we are enabled to see, for then we receive spiritual faculties."

"I cannot say," said one of the gentlemen, "that I see what you profess to see."

"Dear friend," I replied, "do not suppose that I am better than you. I assure you this spiritual eyesight is as much for you as for me, but you will not obtain it by trying to attain it. You must submit to God, and let Him give you this his gift, and, with it, the forgiveness of your sins. Believe me, it is not an optional matter, but one of life or death! You cannot see heaven either in this world or the next without it."

"I think it is hard for you to say so much as that," said the gentleman. "You unchristianise such multitudes of good men."

I replied, "Let God be true, and every man a liar. If He says A is A, and A is first, let it be so; and if He says, 'Marvel not: ye must be born again,' then give up, and say, 'Yes, Lord, I am willing.' God will give you the new birth only upon one condition, and that is the surrender of yourself to Him."

I added, "I think I have said enough now; shall we pray?"

We knelt down together, and very soon both gentlemen were melted to tears. When they began to pray aloud for themselves, the struggle was over, and they very shortly found peace, and gave praise to God.

In their turn, they had to stand against obloquy and laughter too. "How weak of them," said one, "to receive such teaching." "How presumptuous," said another, "to stand up in their private judgment against the wise and good of centuries!" and so on.

But, for all this, the Bible says, "He that believeth hath everlasting life."

The Patna Case.

IT has been shown in these pages that the Christian girl Luchmin (or Luchminnia), of Patna, was treated with shameful injustice by the magistrate Quinn, in the shutting out of evidence on her behalf. It has been further shown that the selected evidence upon which he consigned her to a life of infamy was inadequate, even if true. It now transpires, by the confession of the principal witnesses, that even that evidence was false.

The following is a copy of affidavits made by Mahtabo, the mother of Luchmin, and by Gurmukh Narain, her uncle, at Bombay, on May 20:—

AFFIDAVITS.

When I went to the Magistrate's Court at Patna about my daughter Luchminnia, who had gone to Miss Abraham's house, I did not give true evidence, because I was afraid to do so. Radakissen had threatened to beat and kill both me and Gurmukh Narain, my late husband's brother, and our caste people had threatened to put us out of the caste, if we did not help to prevent my daughter Luchminnia becoming a Christian, and say that Luchminnia was married to Radakissen. Other castes also, and all the Hindus at Patna, were angry at Miss Abraham, and we were afraid.

I gave false evidence because I was in fear of my life. Being now away from Patna and able to speak in safety, I now wish to tell the truth as follows:—

Luchminnia was never married to Radakissen. Radakissen knew that according to caste rules she could not be married to him. There was no attempt at marriage between them, no marriage form or ceremony whatever was gone through.

When Luchminnia was married to Durbarry Lall, she was nearly 9½ years old. After two years her husband died. She then lived six months with her husband's father at Sultaugunj. It is more than three years ago that I brought her away from her father-in-law's house. She is now almost 15 years of age.

My daughter is very unhappy at Radakissen's house, and cries much. Radakissen is a big strong man, and there is a prostitute living with him.

I wish my daughter not to remain there.

× The mark of MAHTABO.

I have read the foregoing, and from my knowledge, I believe it to be all true. I also gave false evidence at Mr. Quinn's Court at Patna, under fear of my life. I regret having done so, and I make this statement desiring that the truth may be known, and that my niece Luchminnia may be taken away from the house of Radakissen, to whom she was never married. GURMUKH NARAIN.

The above statements were read over to the said Mahtabo and Gurmukh Narain, who signed and solemnly declared the same to be true in my presence.

EDWIN R. SMETHAM, Notary Public, Bombay.
May 20, 1889.

Luchmin has now been in the vilest of human slavery for nearly six months, struggling, weeping, appealing to be free. In view of this absolute miscarriage of justice, what is the Viceroy, who exercises despotic power, going to do? Or, if he should fail in this critical moment in his first duty, viz., to protect the rights of a British subject under his authority, what will the Imperial Government do? If the liberation of Luchminnia, the Christian slave under British Christian rule, cannot be obtained in any other way, let her case be carried on to every electoral platform in Great Britain.—Bombay Guardian.

Believers' Meetings, Dublin.

THESE annual gatherings in Dublin are an outcome of the revival in 1859. The attendance this year was not so large as in earlier years; but in some respects the meetings were unusually encouraging. Indeed, it was said by some who have been at nearly all previous gatherings that these were unsurpassed in interest. Without being invidious, we may mention the two addresses of Dr. Neatby, whose appearance elicited deep sympathy, on account of an affliction which he suffered four years ago, and from which he is only slowly recovering. His words were characterised by a simplicity and an unction of which all felt the power. The addresses also of our American brethren, Major Whittle and Dr. Pentecost, were very effective. The accounts and incidents given by the former of his work in Ireland and Scotland, and his rousing appeals to Christians to use their opportunities, drew forth earnest and, it may be hoped not temporary, resolves. Dr. Pentecost's vivid presentation and illustrations of the redemption wrought by Christ were responded to with a warmth and an enthusiasm not often seen in assemblies of this kind.

We find that a letter published in The Christian Leader is being circulated by other papers, to the effect that Major Whittle said at the recent meetings in Dublin that he "thanked God that wherever he went in Scotland it was the Established Church ministers who supported him. They were full of burning zeal for God, and assisted him in every way; while the Free Church was gone, having given herself over to politics and higher criticism." This certainly is not a verbatim report of the Major's words. We have his own authority for saying that what he intended to convey, and the substance of what he said, was this:—In his review of the work of the past year there had seemed to him more spiritual life in Ireland than in Scotland, and he thought the declension of interest since 1880 in the latter country might be owing to her three great religious bodies being engaged in polemics and politics, to the detriment of soul-saving work. He thanked God that he had found ministers of the Established Church more inclined in the past year to support evangelistic work than in 1880, and that some of them in every place where he had been had worked zealously with him.

We think that jealous ears might have gathered something of a comparison between the Established and Free Churches, which seemed in favour of the former; and we all know that comparisons are odious. But we strongly deprecate, as unbrotherly and unchristian, the exaggeration and publication of a passing remark, isolated from its context, without giving the speaker the opportunity of verifying or correcting it.

We could not but regret that those who had listened to twelve addresses, besides Bible-readings, on the first two days, should not have been present to hear the adventures of brethren in connection with Bible carriages, Gospel tents, and African missions, and the experiences of Russian and Siberian prisons, told with impressive simplicity by Dr. Baedeker. We have reason to think that this will be taken into consideration another year.

THURSDAY AFTERNOON.

A meeting was held at which accounts were given by Rev. John Wilkinson and Mr. David Baron of the work carried on by the Mildmay Mission to the Jews. The Mission, said Mr. WILKINSON, has thirty agents at work, is entirely undenominational, and requires £5000 per year for its maintenance. Every branch of the work is growing and receiving manifest blessing from God. The great need just now is a mission-hall for London, for which £10,000 is required. Of this, £3500 has been already received, and the last £1000 has been promised. Mr. Wilkinson gave many interesting details of the work at home and abroad, especially referring to the fact that, while Russia is at present closed against Gentile work for Christ, it is open to Jewish effort, much eagerness to obtain the Word being shown, and numerous inquirers after salvation met with.

Mr. BARON, who has recently returned from an evangelistic tour in North Africa, also travelling through France and Spain, then gave an account of the work of grace he had witnessed, specially referring to the movement among Jews in Hungary in connection with Rabbi Lichtenstein's work, who, like Rabinowitz in Russia, has been used of God in a remarkable manner. Mr. Baron read extracts from a letter he had recently received from Lichtenstein, indicating how, though persecuted and tried, he was constantly experiencing Divine grace and aid. In one city visited, where two-thirds of the inhabitants are Jews, a club has been formed by some of their number for the weekly study of the Hebrew New Testament, to see if Jesus really were the Messiah. The leading teacher among them has already avowed his faith, and many Rabbis are convinced. In North Africa there are not less than one million Jews. In Morocco, where there are 400,000, a missionary has been sent to labour among them, many signs of awakenment being seen. In France, Spain, and Gibraltar, Mr. Baron also found great encouragement. He concluded a deeply interesting statement by narrating an incident in connection with the labours of Mr. and Mrs. George Pearse in Kabylia. A Jew named Eli, with his wife, had been converted through reading the Hebrew New Testament. They had a nephew named Amram living some miles away who had been led to inquiry after truth. One night in a dream Amram saw his uncle's house, and seated with Eli and his wife two strangers reading together some book. Impelled by the vividness of his dream, he at once set off to visit his uncle, and there found Mr. and Mrs. Pearse with Eli engaged in the study of the Gospel. His heart was opened to receive Jesus as the Christ, and Amram and Eli are now labouring together for the salvation of their fellow countrymen.

THURSDAY EVENING.

At the evening meeting an unusually large number of requests for praise were read, and hearty responses repeatedly given in outbursts of song led by Mr. Charles Inglis. Brief addresses on Christian service were given by Dr. Neatby, and Mr. A. Stewart, of Glasgow. Dr. NEATBY founded his remarks on Acts xx. 24. He characterised Paul as a model saved sinner, and a model minister; his conversion was a model conversion, resulting in his becoming a servant of Christ the moment he was converted. He well knew what "bonds and afflictions" meant, but was unmoved by the further prospect of them, having learned to take pleasure in them for Christ's sake. The object of all true service is the Lord Jesus, in his person, and in the cause dear to his heart, and the character of service must be taken also from Christ. Life itself must not be dear to us for his sake: our great aim must be to finish, with joy, our course, and the ministry we have each received.

Mr. STEWART called attention to the character of David as seen in the story of his encounter with Goliath, using it as an example of the spirit in which all service for God should be rendered.

FRIDAY MORNING.

On Friday morning, after Mr. LEONARD WEAVER had spoken of his Bible-carriage experiences, Mr. LEPPER, of Belfast, and Captain WEST followed concerning the same work in Ireland. In the North they had sold twenty tons of Bibles and Gospel books. One man at Lisburn, after reading at home a book he had bought, went and knocked up a Christian neighbour in the middle of the night to ask him the way of life. At one place some enemies were going to take off the carriage wheels in the darkness, but the brother in charge came out in his night attire and they all fled. The carriage, "William Tyndale" had been travelling among English villages, and the "St. Patrick" in Roman Catholic districts. One of their carriages had four bands painted across it, black, red, white, and blue, showing man's lost condition, the blood of atonement, the righteousness of the saints, and heaven in prospect.

Mr. DAVID RAY, of Portadown, said they had a dozen tents in the North of Ireland. They liked to go where not asked, for there they were most needed. At one place they applied for use of a piece of ground; were asked what section of the Church they belonged to; replied, they belonged to all who love the Lord Jesus; whereupon they were refused the ground. It was a most drunken town. On the ground refused to them they found merry-go-rounds and other amusements of a fair, and asked what particular section of the Church they represented. It is marvellous what God has wrought in Ireland the last twelve or fifteen years.

Mr. CHARLES INGLIS, London, Mr. STEVENSON, of Northfield, and Major WHITTLE, spoke most encouragingly of the openings in the South of Ireland, and the latter continued his address by speaking of Scotland, where a large number of souls had been won through the Hon. Miss Waldegrave and the Hon. Granville Waldegrave.

Mr. W. R. LANE gave some dark pictures of English villages, and cheering accounts of his visits and their results.

Mr. FISHER, brother-in-law of Mr. Fred. Arnot, said that he and about a dozen others were just going out to Garenganze, concerning which he gave some interesting particulars, illustrated by a map.

Mr. E. H. GLENNY, also using the map, described the operations and successes of the North Africa Mission.

Mr. ROHRBACH spoke of his work at Berlin, which has a population of 1½ million, of whom 60,000 are Jews, 80,000 Roman Catholics, and the rest nominal Protestants.

Dr. BAEDEKER, who has recently visited Russia, Trans-Caucasia, and Finland, spoke of the Greek Church as the great difficulty in Russia. There are thousands of exiled Christians in Trans-Caucasia. The Russians are a very enthusiastic people, and will go to the end of the Empire to spread their views. Russia is a land of many nationalities, and specially of the Jew. He had not been allowed to convene directly evangelistic meetings, but held conferences on a given subject, such as "Faith and Unbelief." He could not announce an after-meeting; but the people would stay behind and ask questions, and would come to his hotel for further information. He had spent a week with Rabinowitz, whose influence is spreading further than he knows himself.

Dr. Baedeker is about to visit Siberia. He says he has no difficulty in speaking the Gospel by translation; the people do not even mind two translations. After speaking of the Armenians, who in South Russia are linked with the Tartars, and are a primitive and a fiery race, and who flocked four or five times a day to hear the Gospel, Dr. Baedeker went on to speak of Finland. It is a cold country, but the people have warm hearts. He had been preaching there, and was going to St. Petersburg; but a lady said, "You must not go without giving me at least a week for my poor prisoners." She was the daughter of a Government officer, and thus saw a great deal of the prisoners, among whom she was the only missionary. When her father retired from office to his country seat, her work ceased, and she fell ill. Her father was told his favourite daughter would die. He said he could not bear to lose her, and, if God raised her up, he would give her

A HOME FOR RELEASED PRISONERS.

She shook off her sickness, and asked, Where is the Home? It was given her, and now she visits all the prisons and takes suitable cases to her Home.

She is very weak, but has great power with the vilest men. She establishes herself in the prison for two or three weeks, is put in a cell, from which she visits the other cells. She went to one in which was a terrible man, who had a weapon. He said, "Why do you come to me? I've sworn to kill the first person that comes near me." "Oh," she said, "your weapon is very sharp; but you won't kill me." The prisoners are often wild with rage. They receive no love, they hear no Gospel. When the authorities can't manage them, they send for the Baroness, and she calms them though they are like wild beasts. I gave her a week. Though every word was translated, they listened eagerly. Some heads were half-shorn, showing that they were destined for Siberia. "Ah," they said, "you preach differently; our priests tell us what bad men we are, and we know it, but you tell us of the love of Jesus."

A lady of rank was asked to procure for me the entrée of prisons. She shook her head. But soon after I received a great letter, with a Government seal, opening to me the prisons through all the Russian Empire. We have read of "the regions beyond," but this opened to us the regions below, strata generally known nothing of. The prisons are a school for crime. Punishment will never restore men. All are crowded. One in Trans-caucasia, built for eighty, holds 300, chiefly men, many in chains. They are constantly being transported to Siberia—an enormous country, twice as large as Europe; not all ice, bears, and wolves. Parts of it are most beautiful. Siberia is being peopled by exiles. When they get there, without the Gospel, what becomes of them? Many are so sunk, they cannot be compared with beasts. All grades of society — Tartars, heathen, cultured people; sin rules over all. There is no social position to check it. Nothing can check this Satanic power but the Gospel.

The Russian Government is paternal. If a man is a Nihilist, it says, "We are not Nihilists; but if you do not like our Emperor, and want to be a Nihilist, we will take you to another part, where you can think as you like." And he is deported to Siberia. If a man dissents from the Greek Church, he also is sent there, and given land, and he can be a Stundist, a Baptist, or what he likes. At Tiflis last winter I was told that four Christian exiles were coming next morning. I found one, his head half shaven, going to Siberia. He had a little heroine of a wife, and three children. They had tied up all their possessions—their faces beamed with joy. Since they left Tiflis I hear they have reached a large Tartar city, with Christians all around them. Dr. Baedeker mentioned other marked interpositions of God's providence, and concluded a narrative of the deepest interest with the mention of a murderer converted before his deportation, and now preaching the Gospel; and closed with an earnest appeal for prayer.

Two ladies were present—Miss Williamson and Miss Davis—who last year had asked prayer for means to open a Soldier's Home at Fermoy. Mr. George Trench now called for praise that the work was about to be commenced.

The proverbial kindness and hospitality of our dear Irish brethren and sisters added much to the enjoyment and profit of the meetings.

Note.—Our report last week of Pastor F. E. Marsh's address on the Epistle to the Ephesians, at the Believer's Meetings, Dublin, made him to say that Eph. i. 19—22 is "The Divine observation"; it should have been Eph. i. 19—ii. 22, "Divine operations."

THE SCOTTISH Y.M.C.A. CONFERENCE will be held this year at Dunfermline, from September 17 to 19. The subjects will bear more particularly on the temptations of early manhood, and the sources of spiritual life and means of maintaining it in Christian work.

THE PRINCEITE AGAPEMONE.—In concluding a series of papers exposing the pernicious and unscriptural teachings of the Agapemone, The British Weekly says, "Perhaps a little more knowledge of the history of religious delusion might have saved many from following Prince as their religious leader. No one is safe who turns aside at all from the teaching of Jesus Christ."

A DAY AT TROUVILLE AND HAVRE.

MR. HENRY COOK, the originator of the Seamen's Mission at Gosport, was previously the proprietor of a flourishing and promising business in that town. He was, however, constrained to leave his worldly prospects and become an active friend of sailors. Some of our readers have contributed to his two Gospel ships, the Herald of Mercy and the Mystery, which have been employed, not only in English, but in French ports.

The visits of these vessels have led to the building at Trouville of an elegant Strangers' Rest, which is to be completed at the end of July. Two stones were laid last week bearing the names of Mrs. Deane Brown and Mrs. Gamble. This hall will be a great boon to sailors, and will, no doubt, be visited by the French workpeople. It will also accommodate a few Christian workers. The cost will be about £900, of which nearly half has been contributed. At night an evangelistic meeting was held on board the Mystery, filled between decks with French, who listened with eager interest. A crowd also gathered on the quay, for whom there was not room, and who must not be addressed in the open air. Under the present Government, France is open to the Gospel; but, if the monarchical party succeeded, the Jesuits would be reinstated, and the present liberty withdrawn. Some of this party tell the people they will give them no work so long as the present Government is in power. French tracts and papers would be a great boon, addressed to Mr. Cook, Seamen's Mission, Gosport, Hants.

A young French servant, who was converted at a meeting on one of the Gospel ships, in reply to my question, "Do you love Jesus?" said, "He is my life." The story of her mother's conversion was a touching one. She lost a son, and this made her think. She felt she did not know the truth, and kept praying God to show it to her. At length she thought she would go and see a Protestant pastor. She made the attempt, but something prevented. At length she was at her door, and Mr. Whelpton, Wesleyan minister, of Havre, came by, and spoke to her. She said, "You are a pastor," and invited him in. She told him her trouble, and he led her to God by Jesus Christ. Now her husband and two daughters are also saved. The Jesuits persecute her, but in her simple faith she said, "The Lord has broken their steps." She works early and late to keep the home together, for the priests prevent her husband getting work since they have become Christians. It was worth the journey only to spend an hour with this dear tried sister, and be reminded of the oneness of all the members of Christ.

A lady, French by birth, English by education, is at present at Trouville, visiting the poor and teaching Scripture to the children. Any Christian sister speaking French, and desiring to work in France, would do well to address her—simply, "La Mission Evangélique, Trouville, France."

Devoted workers are doing good work at Havre. Lady Beauchamp has returned to receive her son, Captain Beauchamp, who has been brought home, very severely injured by a fall from his horse in Egypt, which will call forth deep sympathy and fervent prayer. The Café Denmark, recently taken from the enemy, is an evidence of the effect of the Sailors' Home. Other cafés in the neighbourhood are tottering. The new acquisition is a splendid house, and will be a boon to Havre as a coffee-bar, as a Home for sailors, and a resting-place for Christian workers. Mr. and Mrs. Lennox are the present and efficient managers.

Rev. George Whelpton and Mr. Gray represent Methodism, with little of the ism and much of Christ. The new Norwegian pastor and his wife will make themselves felt when they have mastered the language. M. Le Quéré (a relative of Pastor Lecoat, of Brittany) and Miss Bonnycastle are working bravely among the colony of Bretons, and they and others do good work among the emigrants, of whom thousands pass through Havre. FLORENCE MISSION, NEW YORK.

THE Florence All-night Mission in New York derives its name from the fact that it was founded by Mr. Charles N. Crittenton, in memory of a beloved daughter, named Florence, of whom he was bereaved a few years ago. It stands in Bleecker-street, a notorious quarter, and just because it is so situated, in a region reeking with vice and crime, it has been greatly blessed of God to the class it is designed to benefit. Since 1883 the Mission has been increasing in activity, and now it is an institution of considerable importance. The founder has all along borne the cost, with occasional voluntary help.

Without regard to age, creed, or nationality, outcast women are received at any time of day or night, on the simple understanding that they desire to lead better lives. The missionary spends his nights visiting the haunts of iniquity and vice, and he has been privileged to witness many cheering results of acquaintances formed in dancing-halls and opium-dens, from which he invites the poor women to Gospel meetings, in the hope of then being able to show them the door of escape from lives of sin and misery. Some who have made Christ their choice have stood forth as veritable miracles of grace, and have exercised a very helpful influence over their wandering sisters.

Meetings are held every night, and before the platform, from which volunteer Christian workers make their appeals, may be found three classes: on one side those staying in the Home; on the other, such as have strayed into the room attracted by the singing, and in the winter by the warmth and comfort; and in the rear are men, similarly drawn, who need encouragement in giving up intemperate and dissipated lives. Outside, the missionary moves about and speaks kindly to the women; he gives them a card on which is written: "Any mother's girl wishing to leave a 'crooked' life, may find friends, food, shelter, and a helping hand to a better life, by coming, just as she is, at any time to the Florence Night Mission." Some respond immediately to this invitation; others come another day. Once in the room, the superintendent engages them in kindly conversation, with a view to their social and spiritual uplifting. Moreover, the Gospel story is told by earnest Christian ladies who visit the place.

Seeing how manifestly God has blessed his efforts, Mr. Crittenton has enlarged the place from time to time, and to-day he has an establishment with the sleeping accommodation of an average hotel, and with separate rooms for the various departments of the work. About two years ago, on being bereaved of his beloved wife, he decided upon further consecration of his powers and possessions. He made arrangements for almost complete retirement from business as a wholesale chemist, and has since devoted his time unreservedly to the work. Outside friends often show sympathy with the Mission by sending clothing for distribution among the girls. The Mission-house is 20, Bleecker-street, between Broadway and Bowery, New York.

CAUTION TO EMIGRANTS.—Recently a man and wife and two children left England for South America. They had scarcely landed when they missed the elder girl, of fifteen, and have not heard of her since. No doubt the wicked are on the prowl, and a few confederates could easily crowd between a child and her guardians. Watchful care should be taken to keep together.

For the Young.

MISS MACPHERSON'S DIARY.

Mrs. Merry sends to us some extracts from the diary of Miss Macpherson during her recent voyage across the Atlantic with her band of little emigrants. In doing so she writes:—"We are busy rescuing and preparing our third party, which is to sail, please God, on August 8."

"Sunday evening, May 19.—Awoke to-day with the dawn—all still, except the rolling sea. Praise God for a long, restoring sleep. All nerve weariness fled. Able to read and revel in the words of life. Bird Fair and all the blessed chances for winning souls have been spread before the Lord...Now the sun is setting. All have been up on deck, except three. All day long I sat among the children, talking, singing, telling a wee story from time to time. Great excitement now and then through waves washing over the deck. All outward forms of worship were impossible to-day, but our hearts praised God in silence for his sustaining grace.

"Tuesday, May 21.—At 7 o'clock this evening some of us held, by invitation, a Gospel service in the fo'c's'le. We realised the presence of the Master. Each sailor got a book and text-card on leaving; they thanked us warmly, and asked us to come again. My message was to Christians, 'Be of good cheer.' E—— sang a solo, and preached the Gospel so clearly. We hope also to go to the firemen, stewards, and engineers by invitation.

"At nine o'clock we descended to our private steerage, and had another hour with the elder part of our family, about twenty. In waiting quietly upon God we were blessed, and many a heart's breathing arose from one and another. The sweet story of the Shepherd after the wandering sheep was our theme. We sang 'The Ninety and Nine,' and such a happy family we seemed, drawn by cords of love to worship the one loving Master.

"Wednesday, May 22.—The chief steward had heard of our meeting in the fo'c's'le, so asked if we would allow him to arrange a meeting for this evening among 120 women in the common steerage. At eleven we gathered for our Bible-lesson and song of thanksgiving on deck. We are on the banks of Newfoundland, and the fog whistle is sounding every few minutes. The children are improving daily in health. The little ones, girls especially, are most sweet and gentle.

"Saturday, May 24.—We hope to reach Quebec on Monday afternoon. We are all on deck, basking in lovely sunshine. The days and hours tell of God's preserving care; an hour ago from the rigging fell a heavy chain with a piece of wood attached, within a few inches of one of our little ones. Had it fallen upon her, death must have been the consequence. To my left Miss M—— sits, surrounded by a dozen children cutting paper wonders; elder lads are reading in odd corners; in the middle of the compound the skipping-rope is going.

"Monday, May 27.—Saturday evening we had a blessed two hours with our elder children; our subject, John ix., the courageous young man who said, 'One thing I know, that whereas I was blind, now I see.' The hymns were sung very solemnly afterwards. At the close we felt we would give our thankoffering to the Liverpool Sailors' Orphanage, so a boy's cap went round, and, oh! such a handful of shining pennies, halfpennies, and farthings, the treasures of a boy's pocket, given so gladly. Some steerage friends had joined our little company, and the total was £1 7s. 6½d.

"Sunday was a splendid day, the sky so bright, and a fresh wind. We had our Bible lessons in the boys' and girls' steerages. In the afternoon we hung up a large map of Africa on cloth, and gave our children a missionary talk. In the evening we hurried off after dinner, with a dozen elder lads, to the sailors, and in that fo'c's'le, where, in by-gone years, prayer was wont to be made, we had a time of blessing. We look to be at Quebec in two hours. Do sing for us a loud hallelujah."

SABBATH AMONG THE CREE INDIANS.

BY REV. EGERTON R. YOUNG.

For many years the Cree Indians of "Norway. House" have been noted for their respect for the Sabbath as a day of rest. That they are not losers thereby is seen in various ways. For years, as a close observer among them, I noticed that, especially as boatmen for the Hudson Bay Company, they were able to do better work and have better health by resting one day in seven than any of the boatmen of that vast north-western land, who kept not the day of rest.

So isolated and inaccessible are many of the Hudson Bay Company's posts from the sea coast, that years are spent ere the goods sent in from London reach the remote inland trading posts, and the furs are obtained in exchange for them. So the work of carrying in the goods and bringing out the furs is a very extensive one, and gives employment to many hundreds of the able-bodied Indians. So wild and rough is the country, and so many are the falls and rapids of the rivers, that a great many portages have to be made, that is, the goods or bales of fur, have all to be carried on the backs of the Indians, supported by straps from their foreheads. Then the boats have to be dragged overland, around the rapids or falls, and then launched in the smooth water beyond.

So it can easily be seen that the work is very hard indeed. It is toiling at the oar or carrying the very heavy loads in the portages for weeks together. Lives are frequently lost, and serious accidents are not uncommon in such arduous toil. A number of boats would generally go together for company's sake, and to aid each other if any emergency arose. These collections of boats were called brigades. It sometimes happened that brigades from different places would meet at a portage both bound for the same district. Then there would occur the greatest strife between them as to which should succeed the more quickly in getting their cargo across, and get off on the journey first. My Christian Indians always kept the Sabbath.

Their plan was as follows. We will suppose several brigades have come to Norway House for the purpose of taking supplies of goods into the vast interior of the country, towards the head waters of the great McKenzie River district. They will go a distance of say eight hundred miles, and then they will meet the brigades from those more remote interior regions, coming out loaded with bales of fur caught the previous winter. The brigades exchange cargoes. Those that brought out the fur carry back the goods for the next winter's trade, and the others return with the furs, which are sent down from Norway House to York factory in Hudson Bay, and there shipped to England.

After this explanation we will come back to the starting of the brigades together with their loads. Until Saturday night they are together, and there camp. My men used to tell me how they made their boats secure, and even if the night was fine took all precautions. Early next morning the non-Sabbath-keeping brigades would push on. My men took an extra nap, then rose, and had a bath, and breakfast, and prayers. There were always those among them who could conduct religious service, so they often had a sermon, and always a prayer-meeting. Then dinner, and a nap. Supper and prayers over, they laid down early, and at the first blush of morning, which comes very early in the summer time in those high latitudes, they were up, and as fresh as could be.

All is excitement and hurry. Breakfast and prayers are soon over, and away they go. The other brigades have now twenty-four hours the start of them, but they generally catch up about Thursday, and have no difficulty in getting ahead. On Saturday night they repeat the work of the previous one. Perhaps on Sunday afternoon some of the other brigades come along, and push on ahead for a few miles, and there camp. My noble, God-fearing, Sabbath-keeping men are up and off so early the next Monday morning that they generally passed these brigades that had gone on ahead before they had started. With a cheer my gallant fellows dash by, and they are never overtaken again on the trip. They push on and on, until they reach the great Head Water table-land, where the brigades, loaded with furs, are waiting. They exchange cargoes, and sometimes are a week's journey down on the return trip, before they meet the other fellows coming up, although they have travelled every day, while my men have rested every Sabbath day. For nine seasons I watched these things, and I never yet saw the Sabbath-keeping Indians beaten, or even equalled, in the race.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—The following are the portions for the ensuing week:—Sun., June 23, 1 John iii. 13—24; Mon., June 24, 1 John iv. 1—10; Tues., June 25, 1 John iv. 11—21; Wed., June 26, 1 John v. 1—12; Thurs., June 27, 1 John v. 13—21; Fri., June 28, 2 John 1—13; Sat., June 29, 3 John 1—14.

MR. T. LEWES SAYER had meetings during Whitsuntide at the quaint little village of Doveridge, near Derby. The village children attended in good numbers, and great interest was evinced. A contingent also came over from the neighbouring town of Uttoxeter, where Mr. Sayer on Whit Tuesday afternoon addressed the members of the Childrens' Scripture Union. Rev. Canon Hamilton, the vicar of Doveridge, took much interest in the work, and heartily co-operated with the missioner. Mr. Sayer has changed his address to "Lyndhurst," Stapleton Hall-road, Stroud Green, N., where any communications respecting children's work may be addressed to him.

CHILDREN'S SPECIAL SERVICE MISSION.

Messrs. H. Hutchinson, Clifford H. Nash, and Alfred Armitage, Skating Rink, Croydon, June 15—24. Mr. Josiah Spiers, South Creake, near Fakenham, Norfolk, June 14—24. Mr. E. Arrowsmith, Hexham, June 29 to July 2.

DR. PENTECOST IN EDINBURGH.

THIS eminent evangelist has been holding most interesting and successful meetings in Edinburgh during the last six weeks. On Sabbath he has occupied the pulpit of Free St. Andrew's Church, Drumsheugh-gardens, in the absence of its pastor, Rev. R. J. Sandeman, who is abroad on a six months' holiday. In the mornings the evangelist has preached to large congregations, and in the evenings to audiences that overflowed the church.

Dr. Pentecost has also given Bible-readings during the week in the afternoons, extending over five weeks. These have been attended by from 400 to 600 persons, mostly residing in the West-end of Edinburgh. The Bible-readings have been highly appreciated; the freshness and vigour of the expositions thrilled the audiences. It is believed that they have been productive of much good. A blessing has also attended the evening evangelistic services, which Dr. Pentecost has held during four weeks, at first in Free St. Andrew's Church, and during the last week in the Free Assembly Hall. Dr. Pentecost is to continue to occupy the pulpit of Free St. Andrew's Church in the morning and afternoon on Sundays till the end of August.

REV. DR. CUYLER, of Brooklyn, New York, is on his way to this country, and is announced to preach next Sunday, June 23, at Christchurch, Westminster-road (Rev. Newman Hall's), morning and evening.

A CONFERENCE ON HOLINESS.

A CONVENTION for the promotion of holiness, convened by Dr. M. Miller, was held at Wellington Hall-road, Stoke Newington, London, N., from June 3 to 9, inclusive. The attendance was good throughout, and included Christians of all denominations from London, the provinces, and the Continent. We are unable to give space to a full report, but note several of the leading utterances.

Rev. F. D. SANFORD, of Boston (U.S.A.), who presided, gave, as the motto of the Conference, the words of our Lord in John vii. 37: "Come unto Me." He pointed out that we were to come in simplicity; as a little child: little children came straight to Jesus. In humility: the water in Ezekiel's temple came from under the door. To come to these waters we must get low down. In pliability: we must be willing to adapt ourselves to the will of God, and to divest ourselves of all our preconceived opinions as to the way in which the Lord is to bless us. In receptivity: Jesus said, "Receive ye." Unless we receive, all else will be of no avail. Let us have times for receiving out of the measureless fulness of Christ.

Rev. W. DARLOW SARGEANT said: The condition of the churches saddens me; their members resemble the disciples before Pentecost. The reason of this may be learned from such Scriptures as Rom. vi. 6 and John xii. 24, which teach that death must come before life, and life out of death. Thus is the Christ-spirit and the Christ-life realised. Until we are crucified with Christ, we, like the corn of wheat, abide alone; but, when we have passed through death to life, we become like the handful of corn of the seventy-second Psalm: "The fruit thereof shall shake like Lebanon."

Rev. C. G. MOORE referred to the special purposes of such a Conference:—(1) "As ye have therefore received Christ Jesus the Lord, so walk ye in Him." We received Christ in complete surrender to his will as we knew it, in utter self-distrust, and in simple faith. Many do not thus walk in Christ, and one purpose of such conventions is to urge those who have wandered in self-will, in self-reliance, or in unbelief, to return to the pathway in which their feet were set when they first received Christ. (2) To point out some of the great blessings that God has prepared for those who walk in Christ as they received Him: such as deliverance from "the law of sin and death," by "the law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus"; and the enduement of power for service. (3) To emphasise the truth that the Gospel is a dispensation of "spirit," not of legal "letter." The glory of the Gospel is that it gives a "heart" and a "spirit" to do the things that the law had in vain commanded.

Dr. MILLER pointed out that holiness is not merely freedom from sinning—"He that is born of God sinneth not"—nor restoration from a backslidden state. It is in his Epistles to those churches whose spiritual condition was most satisfactory that St. Paul dwells most emphatically on sanctification. Holiness is the cleansing from the heart of that which antagonises our desire to serve the Lord wholly.

Dr. WOODS SMYTH said, referring to the text, "Without holiness no man shall see the Lord," that to "see the Lord" was a Hebraism for enjoying the Lord. This statement had an application to the present life as well as to the future one. Without holiness we cannot enjoy God now. Sin is the dark veil which separates between the soul and God. And we are dependent upon the presence of God for all true experience, comfort, consolation, service, and victory. Let every soul then by a real faith receive that purity of heart that will enable us to-day to dwell in the near presence of God.

Rev. F. D. SANFORD quoted Paul's statement, "I do not frustrate the grace of God." Some do, by unbelief. Israel frustrated God's gracious purposes towards them by unbelief; and to-day, "limiting the Holy One" is the crying sin of the Church. Even Jesus could not work because of unbelief. Let all prejudice against terms, methods, or measures, be relinquished. There is a great cloud of witnesses to prove that sanctification, like justification, is received by faith.

During the meetings many stood up for prayer, and came forward for blessing.

AMERICAN NOTES.

BY OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.

AN impostor, aspiring at no less pretension than being very Christ come to reign on earth, has established himself in Rockford, Ill. He was at one time a Methodist minister, and claims that the spirit of the deceased female Christ, Mrs. Beekman, has entered into him. He has proclaimed Himself as the great I AM, having come to establish his kingdom. He has a large following, most of whom are women. Several have turned all their property over to him; one old farmer deeding him 500 acres of land, in the midst of which he lives in a stately mansion. He now owns property valued at half-a-million of dollars. There are no traces of insanity about him; his calm deameanour and impious pretensions are producing incalculable mischief. False prophets, deceivers, anti-Christs surround us. Woe to those who are overtaken by deceptions, and woe to the faithless watchmen who fail to warn the ignorant and unwary.

Mr. H. Grattan Guinness has been accorded a hearty reception in our Eastern cities on his return from Mexico. He travelled extensively over that country; journeying 2,500 miles within her borders. In an address delivered by him in the Music Hall, Boston, before a vast audience, he made some startling disclosures of Romish intolerance in Mexico in former days and now. His appeals for volunteers to enter that immense field, and give the pure Gospel to the people, were electrifying.

Mr. Guinness had many opportunities to address the great Baptist anniversaries, on the Congo, the Soudan, China, and other vast territories awaiting evangelisation. The nervous force, the pathos, the floods of eloquence, and the spiritual power which characterised his preaching in the days of his vigorous youth were not wanting. During one day he gave six addresses throughout the city, nor will his thrilling words be soon forgotten. Everywhere he is addressing schools, colleges, ministers' meetings, and churches. His repertoire is inexhaustible; missions, doctrine, Romanism, prophecy, deep spiritual exposition, and hard practical business-like plans for the wider dissemination of the Gospel, receive his attention. In every department he is profound, scholarly, chaste, instructive. Let the prayers of the saints ascend for a large blessing to attend this visit of our dear friend. In company with Dr. Ashmore, of China, he has started on a pioneer tour, east and west, on behalf of missions. His faith and hope is that hundreds, not dozens, will soon be yearly drafted to the great fields awaiting the good seed of the kingdom.

As to Roman intolerance, here is a precious confession from Bishop Ryan, of "holy mother church":—

The Church of Rome is intolerant. She alone has the right to be intolerant, because she alone has the truth. The Church tolerates her enemies because she is obliged to do so, but uses all her powers to annihilate them. If ever the Catholics should become a considerable majority, which in time will surely be the case, then will religious freedom in the United States come to an end. Our enemies know how she treated heretics in the Middle Ages, and how she treats them to-day where she has the power. We no more think of denying these historic facts than we do of blaming the holy Pope and the princes of the Church for what they have thought fit to do.

The thirteenth annual meeting for Bible study will be held (D.V.) in the Pavilion, Niagara, Ontario, July 17—24. In addition to the doctrinal and prophetical subjects assigned to the respective teachers, theories of faith healing and mental science will receive consideration. The demonology of Scripture, second Probation, and Creation as antecedent and superior to Nature, will also be discussed. Special prayer is again requested on behalf of this most important conference. British Christians visiting America are cordially invited. Mr. Grattan Guinness and Rev. J. Hudson Taylor are expected to be present.

There died a little while ago one of the most extraordinary persons of our generation, the lamented Laura D. Bridgman, in her sixtieth year. She was deprived of all her senses, when a child, but that of feeling. Blind, deaf, dumb, yet, taken in hand at an early age, through the single gate of feeling, consciousness was reached, and intellect came forth to receive training, direction, and development. Dickens wrote of her as a phenomenon of information. She was an intelligent believer—baptized, consecrated, and most joyous in her experience. She worked with her hands, and gave largely of her limited means. In the triumphs of the Christian faith she passed away, leaving a large circle of friends who had become personally attached to her, to mourn her loss. Now absent from the body, she is present with the Lord.

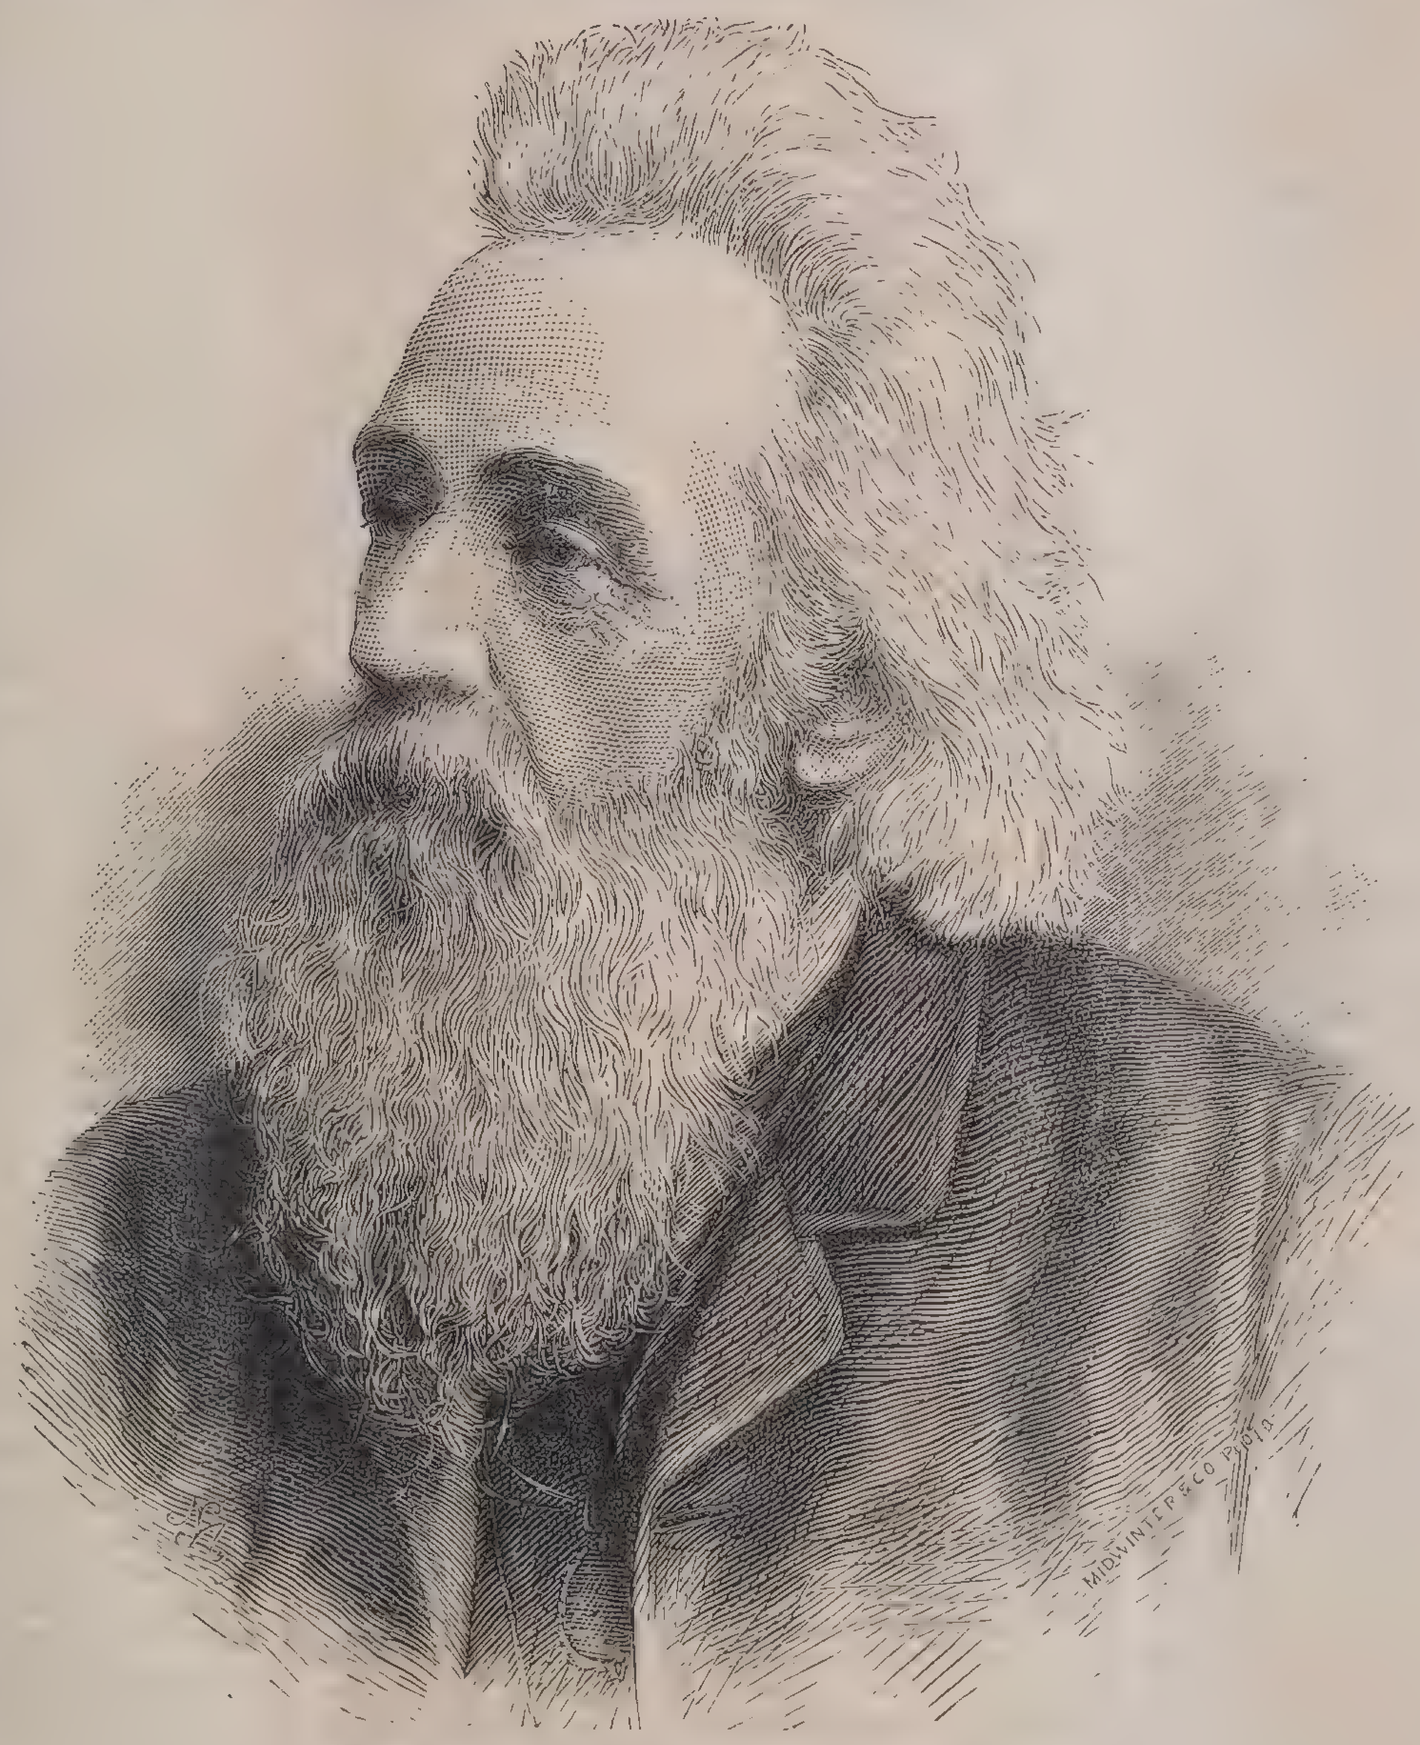
The second annual meeting of the New England Evangelistic Association has shown great progress. During the year hundreds of pulpits were supplied, evangelists were sent into remote parishes, and pastors seeking new fields were introduced to vacant pastorates.

CRIPPLES' HOME FOR GIRLS.

SIR,—Your readers are acquainted with the Cripples' Home and Industrial School for Girls in the Marylebone-road. Owing to the expiration of the lease, arrangements had to be made for a renewal, and this has involved the rebuilding and enlargement of the house at an expense of over £9000, which sum has had to be withdrawn, mainly from the Capital Fund, constituting the permanent endowment of the Institution. The trustees and managers are, therefore, anxious to replace this money as soon as possible.

The Princess Christian has consented to open the new building on Saturday, 22nd inst., at 12 o'clock, and it is desired that a substantial instalment of the sum required (£9000) should be forthcoming by that time. The excellence of the object and administration of this charity for the benefit of crippled and destitute girls is too well known to need comment. Since the opening of the Home in 1851, 974 girls have been received, many of the most helpless of whom have been greatly benefitted by the skilled surgical treatment, besides being taught a trade by which a large number of them are now supporting themselves. The treasurer is Dr. Routh, 52, Montagu-square, W.—Yours faithfully,

KINNAIRD.



THE BISHOP OF ELY AND EVENING COMMUNION.—We are glad to find that the remonstrance addressed to the Bishop of Ely by Rev. J. Barton, vicar of Holy Trinity Church, Cambridge, on the subject of Evening Communion, has not been without effect. A memorial to the vicar was drawn up, signed by 160 communicants, expressing an earnest hope that the practice might not be discontinued. On this being communicated to the Bishop, the vicar received from him a reply to the effect that, under the circumstances, as now explained, he felt that the afternoon and evening Communions ought to be continued, and withdraws his previous expression of disapproval.

The Late Mr. HENRY QUICK,

Artist and Congregational Minister.

OUR sketch this week has for its subject one whose name has long been fragrant of grace and truth in several important centres of population in England. A pastor who ever showed diligence to secure the approval of God, and a preacher whose great theme was the Gospel of Christ, the late Henry Quick, Congregationalist, was widely known, and highly esteemed, by those who were privileged to enjoy his personal acquaintance.

Born in the city of Bristol in 1812, Henry Quick was brought up under Christian influences. Converted to Christ early in life among the Wesleyan Methodists, to which body his parents belonged, young Henry soon showed qualifications for the ministry. Encouraged to exercise his gifts, not only in Bristol, but in more distant parts, he advanced in usefulness in proportion as his abilities expanded. In the pursuit of his profession as an artist he went to West Cornwall, where his services came to be held in high regard. In later years he would relate his experiences in a Cornish village, on his first visit as the substitute of a "travelling preacher." He was received with extreme coldness; but, as the service proceeded, a change came over the congregation, and the fervour increased until an enthusiastic hearer mounted the bench, and shouted, "Praise the Lord; such words should be written in letters of gold!" Mr. Quick in his young days displayed considerable taste and capacity in art, and it is believed he had in him the making of a great painter. To the last he was facile at the brush and pencil, some of his portraits being excellent specimens of life-like work.

(From Photograph by Messrs. Midwinter & Co., Bristol.)

The Lord had need of the young artist, who, on realising the fact, did not hesitate to consecrate his imaginative faculty and pictorial powers to the service of the Gospel. Offering himself for the Wesleyan ministry, he was not accepted, as a slight lameness from which he suffered would, it was held, prevent him from taking the long journeys of an itinerant. In 1840 Mr. Quick applied to the authorities of Hackney Academy to be trained for the Independent ministry, and was at once accepted. While yet a student he became assistant to Dr. Joseph Fletcher, of Stepney Meeting. Here his services were so highly appreciated that, on the death of Dr. Fletcher, he was invited to assume the pastorate. On the ground of inexperience he declined the offer. Just then the Independents of Taunton were lengthening their cords, and a second church was formed. The leaders of the movement saw in the assistant minister of Stepney the pastor and preacher of whom they stood in need. In 1843 he began his ministry at Taunton in a large waggon shed, which speedily gave place to the spacious building with schools adjoining known as North-street Chapel. A large congregation was rapidly gathered. In a cheery mood Mr. Quick was accustomed to characterise the church as "a religious conglomerate, a fortuitous and fortunate concourse of atoms," in view of the very divergent ecclesiastical opinions of its members. In it were Independents, Baptists, Episcopalians, Methodists, and Quakers. Yet a more harmonious, devout, and devoted band of believers has seldom existed, and this happy experience was, under God, largely owing to his tact and honesty, his genial spirit, and evangelical preaching. With his ministry at Taunton Mr. Quick began married life, his wife being a Bristol lady. He used gratefully to say that she was "every inch a pastor's wife."

In 1855, to the great grief of the church, he left Taunton for Bristol. The period of eleven and a half years at the former place was marked by a considerable measure of success. He found an infant church of sixty-five members, and a congregation numbering about a hundred; he left a church of some two hundred and fifty members, and a congregation of from six to seven hundred. He had admitted no fewer than 409 people to church fellowship; and, while believing that he was Divinely directed in accepting the charge, he also thought he was following the leadings of Providence in relinquishing it in order to become pastor of the church at Castle Green, Bristol. The latter was a sinking and well-nigh ruined cause, but the spacious chapel was speedily refilled, school premises were built, and the minister became a spiritual force in the city and neighbourhood. During his stay at Bristol, Mr. Quick sustained a sad series of domestic trials; in the course of eighteen months he buried his beloved wife and five of his children, including his eldest son. Almost overwhelmed, the disconsolate husband and father sought solitude, that he might think upon his griefs. For a moment he wished to die rather than live, but in the dark hour he was not wholly forsaken. A Christian neighbour called to comfort him, and, on being refused admission, wrote upon his visiting card, "See Heb. xii. 9—'in subjection to the Father of spirits, and live.'" The Spirit of truth, the Comforter, almost instantaneously applied the words, so that the sufferer submitted, left his room for the study and the church, therein to find the sacred solace of service.

Broken in health and in spirit by these bereavements, Mr. Quick journeyed in 1864 to Sheffield, where his ministrations were highly prized and greatly blessed. Here, as elsewhere, he made many friends, and was popular in his own and other pulpits. Being in the habit of paying his pastoral visits in a small phaeton, he became known as "the driving parson." In 1869 he left Sheffield for Brighton. The shortness of his pastorates is explained by the fact that he found special delight in building up the noble and strengthening the weak. If there was a congregation cast down, he seemed to be drawn towards it, and so he left the flourishing and strong, in order to succour the feeble and needy. At Brighton a large and influential congregation attended upon his ministrations. The temporary iron building was soon too small, and in 1870 the beautiful structure known as the Clifton-road Church was opened. This great undertaking in chapel building cost him too dearly. "I told the deacons," he said, "that the place was too large and costly; it would be my coffin." His health completely broke down, and for fifteen months his voice was silent. Evangelicals of various orders valued his preaching very highly, and it was with grief that leave was taken of him.

Strength having returned, Mr. Quick accepted the oversight of the church assembling in Percy Chapel, Bath. For nine years he held this charge, and on retiring spent calmly and usefully the evening of his life in the city of his birth. He preached frequently, more particularly in Stapleton-road Chapel, which was built by his friends and converts of Castle Green. Occasionally he visited the churches over which he had been pastor, and was always warmly welcomed by them. Throughout several recent winters he suffered from asthma. Usually worshipping in Redland Park Church, he was often found on Sunday evenings in the Friends' Meeting House, which was very near to his residence. He waited with resignation until his release from pain should come. On September 23 last year he became seriously ill, and passed away in sleep, his feet resting firmly on the Rock of Ages.

A Puritan in spirit, engaged emphatically in a converting ministry, he was moreover a man of wide resource in the service of Christ. Rev. T. B. Knight, of Redland Park Church, who knew him intimately for forty-five years, referring to his disposition and character, says: "He was himself, and no one else—individual without being eccentric; a loveable man, frank and brave." Long before Mr. Spurgeon declined the title of "Reverend," he repudiated it on the ground that it was meaningless, and did not so well express the function of the Christian teacher as does the simple designation of "pastor." His qualities were such as God very graciously used during a ministry of fifty years. We trust others will be raised up to do a like hearty service in the Church and the world.

POLICE MATRONS. — There are in Chicago ten police matrons, four in Washington, and others in different American towns. They have charge of all female prisoners in their station houses. When the prisoners are brought in, they select first offenders from the hardened criminals, and separate them. The matron, if she thinks fit, can recommend that a first offender should be sent to a reformatory or hospital, and restored to her friends, according to circumstances.

"THE HAVEN," 6A, Trinity-street, Borough, is one of those unpretending institutions which are sadly needed in London. An interesting account of its useful and merciful work appears in the June issue of Service for the King. Together with the small house in which part of the work is carried on, the Haven was, during last year, the scene of much blessed effort. Altogether 217 girls and women, some of them of superior position, were received; some required only temporary shelter and assistance, but by far the larger number were cases of real rescue from shame and misery. Reformed inmates have gone into situations, in which they have given every satisfaction, and some have ended their course, trusting in Him who came to seek and save the lost. Many are now adorning the Gospel by lives of subjection to the Saviour, and mistresses are applying to "The Haven" for servants bearing such good characters as some of them have established. The article is followed by the announcement that Mr. J. E. Mathieson, of Mildmay, will thankfully receive contributions towards the work, which stands in need of more substantial support.

CITY MISSIONARIES AT HASTINGS.

By the kindly consideration of the Committee for Seaside Homes, and the timely benevolence of friends throughout the country, the workers of the London City Mission were enabled to enjoy a visit to Hastings, on Tuesday of last week. It was a very happy time to old and young among the missionaries, and certainly a means of grace to some of the friends who accompanied them. Labouring throughout the year in the alleys and courts of the Metropolis, and becoming sadly familiar with filth and misery, these earnest heralds of the cross and succourers of the afflicted, may well appreciate in a high degree opportunities, such as this, for physical refreshment, and the contemplation of God's handiwork, as richly shown forth in the country with its beauties of leaf and flower, and the sea with its wonders and its charms.

Altogether, over seven hundred missionaries and friends made up this fifth picnic excursion, some leaving London Bridge station, others Victoria. Though in the Metropolis the weather was unpleasantly dull and damp, the southern watering place, which was reached about eleven o'clock, was bathed in sunshine, with a delightful breeze blowing. Dispersing over St. Leonards with its long rows of stately residences, and Hastings with its varied historical and natural attractions, the party found much to interest and instruct them. The sands were the resort of almost all during some part of the day, and not a few climbed the hills and visited Ecclesbourne and Fairlight glens on the one hand, and the ruins of Hastings Castle on the other.

After a good day's ramble, the company partook of tea in the Concert-hall, Warrior-square. A public meeting was subsequently held, not so much for the missionaries as for the information and encouragement of such local friends and supporters as were in attendance. Mr. Charles M. Sawell, the secretary of the committee, endeavours to "improve" these occasions by making known the great importance of the work of the Mission, and the pressing need there is for keeping the Seaside Homes in a state of efficiency. He properly maintains that the prosperity of London is the affair of the entire country, and not without reason does he expect support from the watering-places whither the people of the Metropolis largely resort to spend their holidays and their money. The meeting was presided over by Rev. R. DAWSON, one of the secretaries of the Mission.

Rev. J. MCKENNY, the well-known Wesleyan Methodist minister, now resident at Hastings, heartily welcomed the missionaries to the town. Having himself laboured for many years in London, and had the superintendence of some of the men, he had an intimate acquaintance with the work, and held the workers in high regard as a body. In a closing word of counsel to them, he said: "Keep the witness of the Spirit clear, and then, with the constraining love of Jesus, you will continue to do much good; moreover, notwithstanding the many difficulties you have to contend against, your work will be a luxury, and not a mere duty." Rev. J. B. FRENCH, Congregationalist, of St. Leonards, in equally cordial terms, referred to the work of the missionaries, as he had seen and known it. He spoke helpfully of the importance of tact in Christian work, which he illustrated from the public ministry of Christ, and the successful labours of the late Dr. Wilson, of Bombay, whose method it was to found spiritual teaching on passing scenes which the people could not fail to realise and understand. Rev. BURMAN CASSIN followed with a brief speech, in which he declared his great indebtedness to the Mission for what its agents had done in his own parish at Southwark. Mr. C. M. SAWELL referred to the aims of the Mission to bring sinners to Christ, and make respectable members of society out of those who are at present worthless.

There was some hearty singing during the meeting, at the close of which a large group of the missionaries was photographed outside the railway station, from which the train started about seven o'clock on the return journey of a little less than three hours. This excursion affords a very pleasant reminiscence to the hundreds of devoted men, as they take grace and truth and social sunshine into the houses of the many poor and ignorant of the great City.

PEASANTS IN ARRAN.

IN an excellent description of "Two Months at Arran," in last week's Queen, the writer says:—"I learnt many lessons from our dear old landlady, who was a marvel for her age, as shrewd and keen-witted as a girl, and did the household washing and work. Her simple, cheery faith was wonderful. She had had heavy sorrows, but firmly believed they were all for good, and sent to her in love. She was a diligent reader of the Bible and four other books, which constituted her library and gave her never-ending delight; her chief favourite, after the Bible, was 'A Token to Mourners,' dated 1770, which had done her 'a power of good,' she said.

..."These islanders remind one of the old Puritans, and their childlike faith in God is beautiful. They accept his love as from a real, living Father, without questioning or doubt, and their Sabbath brought a sense of peace and rest with it that I never experienced elsewhere."

REV. J. G. PATON'S AUTOBIOGRAPHY.—Writing of this book, issued by Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton, Rev. Dr. Pierson, of Philadelphia, says it is "unsurpassed, for stimulating and inspiring narrative, by any existing story of heroism."

PERSECUTION OF SPANISH PROTESTANTS. —At Criptana, in the province of Ciudad Real, the Civil Guards and the authorities have had considerable trouble in protecting the Protestants and their chapel from the rest of the villagers. A procession, instigated by the Jesuits and priests, attempted to attack the Protestants. The Mayor then ordered the Evangelical Chapel to be closed for an indefinite time, though it had been opened in due form. The Protestants then assembled for worship in the house of one of their congregation. They were fined because their singing could be heard in the streets, and the Mayor told them he could not answer for their lives if they stayed another week. The priests even prosecuted the Protestants for an alleged insult to the very procession which attacked their chapel. All applications for redress and the reopening of the chapel have met with no response from the Minister of the Interior, though a Liberal Government is in office. The only reply made was that it is impossible to interfere, as everybody knows the state of things in the provinces.—Daily News.

FRIENDLESS AND FALLEN.

THE thirty-second anniversary of the London Female Preventive and Reformatory Institution was held at the Parson's Green Homes Fulham, on Saturday afternoon; there was a goodly attendance of friends from town. Lord Radstock presided.

Mr. EDWARD W. THOMAS, the secretary, presented the annual report. In addition to the preventive and reformatory work which has gone steadily forward as in years past, last year was marked by two new features. One was the formation of "the Ladies' Association of voluntary workers," and it was cheering to find that fifty-eight ladies had been engaged in conducting Bible and educational classes, in temperance addresses, and in giving any assistance to the committee in their power. The importance of such co-operation can hardly be over estimated, and the secretary made grateful acknowledgment of the help thus rendered. The second fact claiming attention was the opening of another new preventive home, situate in the Holloway-road, the particulars of which were published in THE CHRISTIAN in February last. The total number of cases taken up by the committee in the course of the year was 585, consisting of 296 preventive and 289 reformatory cases. An earnest appeal was made by the committee for funds, the secretary adding that the treasury was exhausted, and that the balance at the bankers was on the wrong side.

Lord RADSTOCK'S address was one of encouragement to workers, and he urged that each should more and more deeply realise that their call to the work was from God Himself, and that they had to give a definite and intelligent response to it. A Christian does not mean simply one who believes in Christ and who is expecting something from Him, but one who is in Christ and who must ever be a witness for Him.

Rev. BURMAN CASSIN said there was nothing more Christlike than to prevent from a life of sin or to rescue those who had fallen under its power. He spoke most hopefully of the efforts which had been made in South London, and regarded it as matter for great thankfulness that Christian work was more and more tending in the direction of prevention and rescue.

Rev. J. H. SCOTT, of Spitalfields, described his large work field of 21,000 souls, where the poor are very poor and the depraved very depraved. The dreadful murders in the East-end, which might be said to have been committed almost under the shadow of his church, had had the effect of driving away from the locality numbers of the quiet poor and their children. In his parish there was a large number of furnished rooms, and every one of them was a home of sin. He did not desire to paint the East-end too darkly, for it was dark enough already. The more he saw of the work of this Institution, the more thankful was he for its existence. Years ago, when a curate at St. Pancras, he had found the Homes to be invaluable, and he was of the same opinion now that he was working in the East-end.

Brief addresses were also given by Rev. F. Dixon and Mr. F. Nicholls. At the close of the meeting tea was provided in a marquee in the garden, and afterwards there was a gathering under the mulberry tree, when a few addresses were given, the weather happily continuing fine throughout.

CHILDREN AND THEATRES.—Thirty-eight out of the fifty-three members of the London School Board have expressed a strong opinion that the provisions of the Factory Acts which prohibit the employment of children under the age of ten years in factories and workshops should be so extended as to prohibit the employment of children under the age of ten years in theatres and other places of public entertainment, or for purposes of gain anywhere.

THE SALVATION ARMY.

DEAR SIR,—We have just had some remarkable meetings in Switzerland. On Thursday, a vast tent, erected at Yverdon, for the visit of General Booth, was crowded with Salvationists, from thirty-one French-Swiss corps. The weather was superb. There was great life-power and holy enthusiasm. The most perfect order prevailed. After the searching address of the General, on holiness, hundreds arose to consecrate themselves afresh to God and humanity. Princess Pucktomsky described very vividly how she had found full salvation in connection with the way of the Cross, when led to cast in her lot with the persecuted, keep the door of the hall, and become a soldier.

Among the bandsmen, was a mason, who that very day, two years previously, had walked a long distance, from Neuchâtel, to betray to the police of Colombier the fact that the Maréchale would probably get out at that station that evening returning from the annual meeting. Hating God, religion, and hating us in ignorance, he wished to see her again arrested and imprisoned, as she is under decree of expulsion from Neuchâtel.

When the train hove in sight, he repented and ran off, leaving the police disarmed, as they did not know my wife by sight. He is now a devoted and faithful man of God.

On the Wednesday, the General and I obtained an interview with Captain Stirling, in Chillon Castle; we found her in fairly good health, and excellent spirits, looking forward to her release on the 25th with much eagerness, as she longs to be again at work for God among the Swiss.

At Zurich the meetings held in the Grünenhof and Casino on Sunday were times of great power. More than thirty people came out to seek salvation in the afternoon and evening at the close of the General's addresses.

Upwards of 4000 people attended the annual meeting held by the Maréchale in the open-air at Pfaffenhausen, near Zurich, on the Thursday, some having walked from one o'clock in the morning to be present. The peasants prepared the place of meeting with the greatest kindness, fixing up rough seating accommodation for eighteen hundred people. The greatest order and attention prevailed, and the hearts of the officers, soldiers, and friends present from the surrounding cantons were mightily encouraged to go forward in spite of the extraordinary difficulties which surround a Swiss Salvationist.

It is a lady, Major Kate Patrick, who is at the head of the German-Swiss work. Two years ago there were in German Switzerland four corps and eight officers, to-day there are twenty-one corps and sixty officers.

The opening of our new hall here, at 163, Rue de Belleville, has been very successful. We have quiet, orderly meetings. The Spirit of God is working, and nearly every evening some people come forward seeking salvation; seven men last Thursday.

We have also good audiences at 187, Quai de Valmy. Last week there was some rowdyism by students before our new central hall, but the police have since come to our help, and now secure to us perfect order.

Popular illustrated French tracts, containing straight salvation truth, can be obtained at the Book Store, 3, Rue Auber, at reduced rates.

A special convention, under the leadership of the General, in which Mr. Bramwell Booth, Commissioner Railton, Princess Pucktomsky, the Maréchale and staff officers from France and Switzerland, and comrades from Holland and Denmark will take part, will be held in Rue Auber Hall, from Sunday, June 30, to Wednesday, July 3, inclusive. We are expecting times of great blessing. Visitors to Paris are cordially invited. The hall is close to the Grand Opera.

At one Sunday-night meeting there were among the earnest seekers at the penitent form, at Rue Auber Hall, persons of French, German, Swiss, Italian, English nationalities, who all received their spiritual help in their own tongue.—Yours faithfully,

A. S. BOOTH-CLIBBORN.

MAJOR WHITTLE IN SCOTLAND.

THE MAJOR, and Dr. and Mrs. Moxey, arrived in Hawick on Saturday, June 8, in the midst of the annual saturnalia of this Border town. An old custom of what is called "the Common-riding" continues. It is associated with rites and ceremonies of an age that is bygone, and, as far as this observance is concerned, it had better remain so. Feasting, drinking, and dancing are the accompaniments, to which the town and neighbourhood are given up for two whole days. The streets were filled with holiday-makers, and riot and drunkenness abounded. The outlook seemed far from promising, and the attendances at church next day were much below the average.

Major Whittle took the afternoon service in one of the churches, and Dr. Moxey in another, and in the evening the Home Mission Hall was filled with an attentive throng. There was quite a number of anxious inquirers, and several striking cases came under notice.

All the weekday meetings have been held in the same hall, and the ministers of the town and members of the Home Mission have given hearty assistance. Rev. Messrs. Stewart and Fordyce (Free Church), Stewart Burns (Established), Hislop (Congregational), and Seaman (Baptist), have taken part in the services, and Rev. Rudge Wilson has also been present.

Major Whittle has been preaching the grand old Gospel which he so loves with even greater power and liberty than on his previous visit eight years ago. At least, so say the local friends. Hence, they look for a rich harvest, seeing the results at last visit were so blessed. There has been occupation for the willing workers every night, thank God, and they have been reinforced by brethren from Edinburgh and elsewhere. This week the meetings will be in the largest hall in the town, and the Christian friends are putting forth extra efforts to reach the unsaved. The afternoon Bible-readings have been largely attended, and have proved times of refreshing from the presence of God. A spirit of consecration seems to have come on the Lord's people, and the prayers have been in the Holy Ghost. Sometimes as many as five ministers have prayed at one meeting, and Mr. Hill, the well-known evangelist, and Salvation Army officers have also led the devotions. Such unity of the Spirit is, we feel sure, pleasing to God, and it is joyful to his children.

Dr. Moxey conducted an open-air meeting in the crowded street on Thursday evening, in company with the Salvation Army, and the spectacle of the Home Mission singing with their brethren the praises of their common Lord, was a fine testimony after the recent scenes of irreligion and licence. Next week Major Whittle and his fellow-labourers hope to meet, at the Mildmay Conference, many who have been praying for them.

THE WORLD'S SUNDAY SCHOOL CONVENTION will open on July 1. Leading members of different communions are to speak on different aspects of work among the young in various parts of the world. The meetings will chiefly be held at the Memorial Hall, and will extend from July 1 to 5. On the latter day there is to be a "grand closing meeting" at Exeter Hall, under the presidency of Lord Kinnaird; and on the following afternoon the members will bid each other farewell at a garden party to be held at Dollis-hill, by invitation of Lord and Lady Aberdeen.

A MISSIONARY FAREWELL.

One of these deeply solemn and interesting gatherings took place last week at the Rink, Blackheath, when many God-speeds were given to Mr. T. H. Morris, Dr. Fisher, and others, going to the interior of Africa, and Mr. Dudley Kidd, proceeding to South Africa. The attendance was good and an earnest spirit pervaded the assembly. Mr. Reginald Radcliffe presided and sandwiched the speeches with his vigorous and pointed exhortations.

The first address of the evening was by Rev. A. J. Robinson, of the C.M.S., from West Africa. He said there are on the lower reaches of the Niger cannibals sunk in every form of superstition and immorality. Mohammedanism is progressing rapidly on the lower reaches of the river. There is more truth in recent statements about its advances than people like to believe. What is to be done? The cross uplifted, with simplicity and in the spirit of self-sacrifice, is the only antidote. A believer in Mohammed is ready at any moment to die for his creed; yet Christians think much of a little self-sacrifice. We must be ready to give up all for Christ, and to be all things to all men. Such missionaries can only be got through the consecration and self-sacrifice of the churches at home. There is too much of mere civilising in our missionary programmes. Let those at home wake up and send out men who will dare all for the Gospel. We need a Pentecost to-day more than ever Peter did at the first. At the request of the chairman, Mr. Robinson followed up his stirring words of appeal by prayer that the enduement of the Holy Spirit might fall on the members of the churches at home.

Dr. Neatby took for his topic "Power for Service," whether at home or abroad. Although the Holy Ghost is now in the Church and in the believer, how seldom do we find those who are filled with his power. This is what we most desire for those who are about to go to Central Africa. Mr. Radcliffe then asked for very special prayer that Dr. Neatby's sons might be guided as to the exact part of the field they ought to go to. A missionary returned from Africa had told him that an honest trader taking suitable goods could go to any part of heathen Africa and evangelise as well as do profitable business.

Rev. J. Hudson Taylor said every heart must have been moved by the words of Mr. Robinson. It is supremely important that missionaries should be men and women full of Holy Ghost power, and raised above the circumstances that environ them. One thought that had been greatly pressed on him of late was the oneness of the Church (Eph. iv. 14—16). Unless the churches at home move forward, those who work abroad are hindered in their advance. There must be equal development in all parts of the Body of Christ. We expect missionaries to be men of great spiritual power and attainment; but we forget that those at home must also make progress. There is in all of us, at home as well as abroad, great cause for humiliation and confession. The highest aspect of missions is the doing of the will of God. In one of the farewell meetings in America, last year, a father told what his daughter (about to go to China) had been in the home and in the mission-hall; but he could gladly say he had nothing too precious to give up for the Lord Jesus Christ. This saying had been a source of unspeakable blessing to him almost every day since. Is not the work hindered and our service hindered because we have something too precious to give up for the sake of Christ?

Mr. Morris read the familiar passage, Rom. xii. 1, and said this was the duty of every Christian; if the "reasonable service" calls one to India or China or Africa, there is nothing extraordinary about it. The extraordinary thing is when there are those who do not render this reasonable service. With his wife and four children he hoped to go into Central Africa, and to set up there a solitary Christian home, from which the light should stream out and permeate some of the darkness all around. Two other Christian ladies are going, Miss Gilchrist, from Scotland, and Miss Davies, from Bristol. He asked much prayer for these two, and for his wife and Mrs. F. S. Arnot, that their work among the women of Africa may be fruitful in results. He mentioned the interesting fact that these four represent between them England, Scotland, Ireland, and Wales. Mr. Trevor Francis and Mr. Jordan expressed in prayer the desires of the meeting that guidance and power might be given to these servants of God going out.

Reading and commenting on Psalm xlv., Mr. Radcliffe called for full surrender of heart. We have forgotten the heathen, he said, and our churches are full of divisions and our streets full of drunkenness and whoredom. What we really need is a reformation in the churches at home: an overturning, and a baptism of the Holy Ghost, so that missions shall not be merely a by-work, but the work of the Church.

Mr. Gall, who has been a gardener, goes out in the same capacity, seeking to teach the people something of horticulture and agriculture; at the same time witnessing for God. Dr. Walter Fisher, the brother of Mrs. Fred Arnot, made an earnest appeal to any unsaved ones in the meeting, and spoke of the great needs of the outlying heathen world. Mr. Dudley Kidd, who is going to South Africa in connection with Mr. Spencer Walton's Cape Mission, said he was going because he could not stay at home. He thought that, in view of the darkness and need of the great world, no one should stay in England unless he has some pressing reason for doing so.

Dr. Howard Taylor said there were many who could not go abroad, but their responsibility with respect to the heathen is as great as in the case of those who cannot stay at home. They ought to hold up the hands of those who go, by sympathy and prayer. Dr. Henry Soltau and Dr. Guinness followed with some encouraging words about Burmah and the Congo, and the meeting was closed with earnest prayer by Rev. J. Baring Gould, on behalf of African missionaries in peril.

ANTI-SLAVERY. — The committee of the British and Foreign Anti-Slavery Society having resolved to send a deputation of its members and officers to the conference convened by Cardinal Lavigerie, his Eminence has forwarded to that society a list of questions to be discussed. Under the heading of the means of putting a stop to slavery, the first and most prominent position is given to "pacific action in Africa," which includes support of missions, introduction of legitimate commerce, and prohibition of the importation of arms, ammunition, and spirituous liquors. The question of employment of force by Governments and by private expeditions will be considered, and also the best means for inducing Mohammedan Governments to close their slave markets. The importance of arousing public opinion throughout Europe by means of the Press will hold a prominent place in the discussions of the conference.

KILBURN HALL.—On Whit Monday, the usual Bank Holiday, meetings were attended by many friends from various parts. In the afternoon helpful addresses were delivered by Sir R. Phayre, Mr. W. H. Howland (Toronto), and Mr. W. H. Seagram. At the time of prayer, Lord Radstock suggested petitions on behalf of evangelistic work generally, that God's people may be delivered from the practice of resorting to carnal expedients for drawing people together to Gospel services. In the evening several friends spoke on edifying topics. Mr. W. R. Lane enforced the importance of workers keeping their own souls right. Dr. Donald Fraser enlarged upon the exhaustless fulness of Christ. The Hebrew worshipper was never admitted into the holiest of all; we, however, are "made nigh," and, acting thereon, should "draw near," even into the presence of God. The fulness of faith and hope was also dwelt upon, and the meeting was felt by many to be very profitable.

Letters to the Editor.

HOSPITAL SUNDAY AND MEDICAL MISSIONS.

Dear Sir,—As the annual collection for the hospitals and dispensaries in London will be taken next Sunday, I wish to bring before the readers of The Christian the claims of medical missions. There are now several such missions in London. Each of these missions has a large dispensary connected with it, and several thousands of the sick and suffering poor are treated annually. The cases visited are as severe as those seen in the wards of any hospital. At all the medical mission dispensaries the Gospel is preached to the patients. Bible classes, &c., are held, and the dying are pointed to the Lord Jesus, so that medical missions have a claim for support on all who love our Lord Jesus Christ. R. C.

THE PEOPLE'S PRAYER BOOK.

Sir,—Under this title I am preparing a book of family prayers. In order to make it as complete as possible, I wish to invite opinions from those of your readers who are interested in the cultivation and growth of what used to be known as family worship. Am I right in thinking that many of the prayers in family prayer books are too long and formal? Is it true that many of them lie a long way from the immediate thought and need of the day? Would your readers advise a reprint of Scripture, or a mere indication of a suitable passage to be read? Any suggestions with which your readers may favour me, publicly or privately, may be very useful.—Yours faithfully,

The City Temple. Joseph Parker.

MISSIONARY LIFE.

Dear Sir,—For many years, missionaries in India were my most esteemed friends, and had I known sooner that they have been accused of "self-indulgence," "luxury," and "worldliness," I would have hastened to add my testimony to the effect that the many missionaries from Europe and America whom I knew in India, more or less intimately, were men, who, by their simple, unostentatious lives of Christian piety, devotedness, and strict temperance, should have recommended the religion of the Lord Jesus Christ to the European and native community.

I have met many missionaries at the table of a pious Lieutenant-Governor, and quite concur in Mrs. Mackenzie's opinion, that as busy workers for eternity they have neither time nor inclination to mix much in society.—Yours truly,

George G. Anderson,
Eastbourne. Lieutenant-General.

SUNDAY CLOSING.

Dear Sir,—We ask for prayer that Mr. Stevenson's Sunday Closing Bill may be passed in its integrity in the present session of Parliament, and thus lessen the temptations to intemperance and the consequent degradation and misery to young and old. We also ask your readers to use their best influences with Members of Parliament, to induce them to be in their places, and to oppose hostile amendments. The welfare of millions of English homes depends on this being done. The "British Women's Temperance Association" have issued an invitation to all who wish success to the Bill to meet for united prayer, in the Library of the Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street, E.C., on Wednesday, June 26, from 12 to 1 o'clock. Lady Sebright will conduct the meeting.—Yours truly,

Robert Whitworth,
T. A. Stowell,
Edward Whitwell, } Hon. Secs.
Stafford Chambers, Manchester.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

Dear Sir,—You would be doing a much-needed service to secretaries and others engaged in the Lord's work, if you would kindly impress on correspondents the importance of giving their full address when writing. The omission of this seems of late to have grown into a sort of fashion—an exceedingly inconvenient one. Sometimes urgent appeals are made for assistance, which would be immediately responded to, but, unfortunately, the incompleteness of the address renders this impossible.

The full address should not only be given, but written legibly, especially when it is an obscure or remote place. Attention to this small matter would entail very little trouble, while it would save much annoyance to overworked secretaries and others.—Yours faithfully,

J. G.

PRISONERS AND THEIR FRIENDS.

THE excellent work of the St. Giles's Christian Mission is well known. It is noteworthy that those who are best acquainted with the operations of the Mission speak most highly of it as a moral and religious agency. The Lord Mayor of London having a short time since testified his deep interest in the work, it was with no surprise that a few days ago we received an invitation to a meeting kindly convened by his lordship at the Mansion House, specially to consider the endeavours of the Mission in aid of discharged prisoners, and the care and protection of destitute boys who may be in danger of drifting into evil courses. The meeting was held on Monday afternoon last, and, in the Lord Mayor's absence, owing to ill health, the chair was occupied by Sir W. T. Charley, Common Sergeant. The proceedings constituted a full and cordial commendation of the work, the speakers being in several cases men whose words could not but carry tremendous weight in favour of the Mission. It was a matter of sincere regret that, owing to continued ill health, Mr. George Hatton, the devoted snperintendent of the Mission, was unable to be present.

At the outset, Mr. E. IVES, a member of the committee, read a statement, tracing the history of the Mission, since its establishment, in a small way, in 1860. The work among discharged prisoners began in 1877, and, while much encouragement has attended efforts to give convicted men and women a fresh start in life, steps to rescue from the downward course youths who have got into mischief have been remarkably successful. The Home in Greville-street has not only met a pressing need, but, with the other machinery of the Mission, it has enabled the secretary, Mr. W. Wheatley, who has this work under his special care, to receive from judges and magistrates many a lad who would otherwise have had to be "disposed of" by imprisonment. This Home is now not nearly large enough for its important purpose, and additional premises must be secured immediately. An effort is also being made to reclaim fallen women, some friends having provided the money wherewith to start the work. Premises in Drury-lane have been fitted up as a night shelter, providing accommodation for from fifty to sixty persons. Other new undertakings, of an equally practical character, have been embarked upon, and to meet the incidental expenses the sum of £1000 was asked for. Before the meeting ended, several promises towards raising this were made.

In the course of an address of warm sympathy, the CHAIRMAN said he had again and again known the Mission to come to the relief of people who had been in gaol. Speaking from eleven years' experience at the Central Criminal Court, he declared the work to be emphatically Christ-like—penetrated through and through with the spirit of Divine compassion, and at the same time conducted with sound common sense and a thorough acquaintance with human nature.

Lord RADSTOCK spoke in terms of sincere pity of the criminal classes. There are, he remarked, many criminals altogether untouched by the law; at the same time many of the class who fill our gaols have never been instructed as to what is right and wrong. It has been said that we punish men for being what society makes them, and he believed the statement to be true. In view, therefore, of the fact that it is largely our own fault that many of our neighbours are criminals, the least we can do is to help them into better ways, by taking to them a knowledge of the Gospel, which has power over the very springs of the heart of man. He thought that the diminution of crime during recent years was owing to the operation of such excellent remedial agencies, and he urged that more generous support should be given to them.

Mr. F. A. BEVAN spoke highly of the Mission, calling special attention to its work of rescuing youths from moral danger. Mr. E. BAGGALLAY, as a magistrate, earnestly pleaded the cause of the Mission, saying that Mr. Wheatley had on various occasions done good work in his Court, by taking in hand offenders who would otherwise have been branded as prisoners, and would afterwards have been far from reformation of life. The CHAIRMAN read several letters from absent magistrates, all highly praising the Mission work. Sir Peter Edlin wrote: "I can trust Mr. Wheatley implicitly." Mr. G. Chance wrote: "Society is deeply indebted to the Mission." Mr. E. VAUGHAN, magistrate of Bow-street, also spoke, his remarks being in unqualified praise of the work of Mr. Wheatley among prisoners and persons accused of crime. On what subject are London magistrates so unanimous?

Short and hearty addresses were also delivered by Rev. H. G. Duffield, chaplain at Newgate; Mr. Bayliss, Q.C., of the Court of Passage, Liverpool; Colonel Milman, of Holloway and Newgate prisons; and Mr. Wheatley. The last named rejoiced to acknowledge the ready help which he had uniformly received from a number of employers of labour, some of whom had received as many as fifty men in times when work could not otherwise be got for them. From beginning to end the meeting was strongly sympathetic. We hope that the outcome will be a wider interest in the Mission, and a hearty endeavour on the part of many new friends to support its several new schemes as well as its older agencies.

OBITUARY.

LORD A. P. CECIL.

A TELEGRAM from Toronto, Canada, states that Lord Adelbert Percy Cecil, the well-known evangelist, was drowned near Adolphustown, Lennox, Western Canada, on Wednesday evening last week, while out alone in a small boat. His body was found on Thursday, and taken to Napanee, where it was embalmed. His lordship was crossing the Bay of Quinte, in the Lake of Ontario, going from Belleville to Adolphustown, in order to hold a series of meetings at the latter place. He stood up in his boat to adjust the sail, when he lost his hold and fell headlong into the lake. The accident was seen from the shore, and boats were sent out at once to his rescue, but he had sunk before help could reach him. Lord Cecil was a son of the second Marquis of Exeter, and was born in 1841. He was an earnest and devoted Christian, and for many years had been actively engaged in evangelistic work.

SIR EDWARD DENNY, BART.

This Irish baronet, who had reached the great age of ninety-two, died on the 13th instant, at 31, the Grove, Boltons, S.W. His conversion, over fifty years ago, was brought about through the persual of Grace Kennedy's story, "Father Clement." His growth in grace was largely helped on by attendance at the Bible-readings of Viscountess Powerscourt, whose spiritually-minded "Letters" were published many years ago. At some date during the "forties," Sir Edward brought out his volume of "Hymns and Poems," which met with much acceptance. Speaking of the hymns in this book, it was said at the time that "the love for our Lord which breathes through them all, would endear the heart of every Christian to the writer." Sir Edward Denny was a careful and diligent student of prophecy, and his two prophetic charts, "The Stream of Time,' and "The Seventy Weeks of Daniel," commanded much attention when published.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For blessing on a tent mission in a village in Devonshire.——For blessing on a tent mission at South Norwood, during June, July, and August.——For blessing on tent work, during July and August, at Skegness, Lincolnshire.——For blessing on the work carried on in four tents in Aberdeenshire, during the summer, by the Gordon Evangelistic Mission.——For blessing on evangelistic services in the Westerfield Hall, Tottenham, and the Green.

Y.M.C.A., 186, ALDERSGATE-STREET.

NOTWITHSTANDING the warmth and brightness of the June evenings, Rev. F. B. Meyer succeeds in attracting a large company of young men to this Association every Friday evening, at eight o'clock, to study various phases in the history of Daniel as recorded in the Scripture. He has already spoken of Daniel as "The Witness" and "The Man of Prayer"; during the next three Friday evenings he directs attention to Daniel as "The Statesman," "The Seer" (1), and "The Seer" (2). The meetings are confined to young men, all of whom, whether members or not, are made heartily welcome.

On Tuesday, July 2, at 8 p.m., Mr. Robert Burn, general secretary, will give an account of his recent visit to the United States, illustrated by lantern views of places of interest and Association buildings, exteriors and interiors. A hearty invitation is extended to all who are interested in the welfare of the Association on both sides of the Atlantic.

Evangelistic Notes.

Mr. Moody is sending his brother evangelist, Rev. B. Fay Mills, to make an evangelistic tour in India.

Rev. Sam Jones has closed a campaign at Danville, Virginia, in which about 1000 persons professed conversion.

Farnham.—The Congregationalists, Primitive Methodists, and Wesleyans, at Farnham, Surrey, are uniting to hold an open-air service every Sunday evening during the summer months.

Dr. L. W. Munhall has been evangelising at Leavenworth and Aitchison, Kansas, with large congregations, and very marked results. He is assisted in the song service by Professor and Mrs. Lowe.

North Finchley.—Open-air services, to be held during the summer months, were commenced on Sunday evening last, on the lawn adjoining the Baptist Chapel, by Rev. J. Middleditch, the pastor.

Mr. John Maxted has completed a sixteen days' mission at Birchington-on-Sea, near Margate, in the Baptist Chapel. The whole mission was most encouraging. Mr. Maxted has now removed from Fulham to 4, Pellatt-villas, Pellatt-grove, Wood Green, N.

Northampton.—At Semilong a three months' tent mission was commenced on June 2 by Messrs. Bramwell, Peck, and William Williams, of the Evangelists' Home, Birmingham. The services, up to the present, have been attended with blessed results; many have professed to find Christ.

Tent Services, Norwood.—This is the sixth season of the tent mission at South Norwood. The meetings have already been the means of blessing to many. Mr. William Grove and the London City missionaries who have been conducting the services have seen fruit of their labours. The tent will remain up until the new mission-hall (which is being built) is opened in August.

Bury Y.M.C.A.—The Lodging-house Mission, which has been in operation all the winter, is now discontinued, and open-air work has taken its place. This Association has for a number of years conducted a mission in connection with the various lodging-houses, and many instances of spiritual benefit have been vouchsafed to cheer the workers. Our open-air work is also attended with blessing.

W. G. WOOD, Secretary.

Hampstead Heath.—Efforts are made, on holidays, to present the glad tidings of salvation to the thousands of people who flock here. Rev. Newman Hall, who resides at Hampstead, generally lends a hand in this good work. Whit-Monday found him as busy as ever, accompanied by Mr. Benson, evangelist, of the Southwark and Lambeth Mission, and a band of earnest labourers. A sceptic, an old hand at debate, opposed himself to the Gospel; but Mr. Hall gave him an answer full of grace and truth, supported by incidents in the lives of infidels, and illustrations of the power of God's Spirit to open the eyes of those who are spiritually blind.

Clapton Hall, Upper Clapton, N.—Special services will be conducted here by Mr. Leonard Weaver, June 18 to 23, at 7.30 p.m.; Sundays, June 23 and 30, 6.30 p.m.

THE POSSIBILITIES OF PRAYER.

BY REV. RICHARD GLOVER, M.A.,
Vicar of St. Luke's, West Holloway.

"Unto Him that is able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think, according to the power that worketh in us."—Eph. iii. 20.

GREAT thoughts for prayer's congenial, holy task:
My God can do whatever I may "ask"!
Nor need my hope to pass such limit shrink,
Pondering my utterless ineloquence;
For what He hears not, his omniscience
Can mark, and do the thing I only "think"!

But, oh, too bold! I may enlarge my thought
Beyond potential bounds. What limit ought
My thinking to observe in speechless call
On Him who bids me pray? How large a part
May be fulfill'd of what is in my heart?
How large indeed, since He can do it "all"!

But "all I ask or think," perchance, may fall
Below my need; and things beyond that "all"
May be what most I need. Can heavenly love
Impart the boon that is unask'd, unthought?
Supply the need unfelt? The good unsought?
Yea, all thy askings, all thy thought "above"!

How far above? Where is the limit fixed,
His power and my receptiveness betwixt?
Pause, daring Faith, nor too redundantly
Reply, lest Hope, o'erbold, expect too much!
Nay, hardly can she hope enough while such
A word is here—above "abundantly"!

Thus speaks that word.* Above those mountains high
Let wave on wave roll oceans; yet a sky
Rises above those seas for Hope to scan.
Nay, more; "exceeding" that, upsprings a height
Beyond imagination, infinite!
So boundless, God's immeasurable "can."

* The word abundantly is derived from the Latin unda, a wave.

Primitive Methodist Conference.

THIS Conference is now holding its sessions in Bradford, Yorkshire. It is fifty years since the Conference of the body met here before. Rev. Joseph Toulson, of the Book-room, London, was elected President. The address he gave was very touching, especially the notes of his own ministerial life. His closing appeal for "a heroic passion to save souls" stirred the Conference deeply, and many ministerial and lay brethren felt the force of the motto for the Connexional year.

The public services of the Conference have been very fruitful; consecration and communion services on the Saturday evening were held in several chapels. The camp meetings were very profitable, and the weather was most favourable to open-air work; many lovefeasts were held in the evening, and also sermons preached. Rev. Joseph Odell preached in Tennyson-place Chapel on "God's purpose and plan of evangelism." A most powerful service was enjoyed, and twelve young men and others gave themselves fully to the Lord's service.
